The judgment of the Court was now delivered by TINDAL, C. J.—This was a bill of exceptions tendered by the plaintiff, but who is also the plaintiff in the Court of Error, against the direction of Lord Denman. At the trial of the cause at the assizes holden for the county of York, in the autumn of the year 1842, the plaintiff declared in debt for stallage dues, due and payable to him as the proprietor of a certain market and market-place in the county of York; to which declaration the defendant pleaded the plea of never indebted. At the trial, the plaintiff gave evidence, amongst other things, of a grant by King Charles the First, in the 15th year of his reign, to one George Hall and his heirs, of a weekly market and two fairs in the year, at Easingwold, in the county of York, with certain special tolls and profits. He also proved the seizin in fee of the plaintiff in the said market and fairs, and the tolls and profits thereof; and the seizin of the plaintiff in his demesne as of fee of the soil and freehold of the market-place at Easingwold, and the user of the market by the defendant, by placing a stall upon the market-place on several market-days, the defendant being, as proved by the plaintiff, an inhabitant of the town of Easingwold. The defendant, on the other hand, gave in evidence a certain deed, bearing date the 31st Aug. 1646, being made between George Hall, the grantee of the said market, of the one part, and four persons therein named of the other part, who are therein described as of Easingwold, yeoman and by-law men for the present year (1646) for the said township of Easingwold, on the behalf of themselves and all the inhabitants of Easingwold aforesaid, mentioned in the schedule thereunto annexed, by and with the consent and appointment of all the inhabitants of Easingwold aforesaid: the schedule thereto annexed being headed with the words "Inhabitants of Easingwold," and containing considerably more than 100 names subjoined thereto. By that deed, the four by-law men, and the rest of the inhabitants, do give and grant to George Hall, his heirs and assigns, for ever, amongst other things, the market-place at Easingwold, as described therein by certain metes and bounds; and the said George Hall thereby covenants, among other things, that the four by-law men, and the rest of the inhabitants aforesaid, their heirs and assigns for ever, shall have a free market within the said town of Easingwold, to buy and sell all cattle and commodities whatsoever toll free, in as ample a manner and form as the said George Hall hath by the recited letters patent. There is on the back of the deed an indorsement of livery of seizin having been given to George Hall, of the premises described in the deed, by the four by-law men, by and with the consent of the inhabitants therein named. It is unnecessary to advert to any other part of the evidence given at the trial, as the whole question which has been raised before us turns upon the legal effect and operation of that deed. At the trial, the defendant's counsel insisted that the deed and the other matters given in evidence amounted to a bar of the plaintiff's claim; whilst the plaintiff's counsel, on the other hand, insisted that the deed contained a grant of an exemption from tolls only, and not from stallage, and that stallage was not included in the terms of the grant; and further insisted, that even if stallage was included within the terms of the exemption, the defendant not being one of the grantees, nor the heir or assignee of any of the grantees therein named, could not take the benefit thereof as an inhabitant of Easingwold, as such inhabitants thereof were not incorporated; therefore, he contended the deed ought not to be admitted as a bar to the plaintiff's right of action. The Lord Chief Justice thereupon told the jury, he was of opinion that stallage was included within the terms of the exemption, and that the defendant, as an inhabitant of the township of Easingwold, was entitled to such exemption, and directed the jury that the deed and matters aforesaid were a bar to the plaintiff's action. The plaintiff's counsel then excepted to each of those points so ruled by the Lord Chief Justice, and the question before us is, whether such ruling, as to both those points, is or is not consistent with law. It is to be observed, that the present cause has been already, in a former stage of the proceedings, before the Court of Queen's Bench upon a motion for a new trial; and that upon the arguments brought before the Court upon that occasion, the same two points were made by the counsel for the plaintiff below, which form the ground of the present exception; and that the Court of Queen's Bench, after time taken to consider, in a very learned judgment, in which the principal authorities are reviewed and discussed, declared their opinion upon the first point to be, that the exemption from toll mentioned in the deed included an exemption from stallage also; and after that judgment, it is unnecessary for us to say more than that we entirely concur therein, and in the reasoning by which it is supported; and consequently we hold that the exception, first tendered to the direction of the learned judge at the trial, is untenable. With regard to the second point, viz. whether the inhabitants of Easingwold could claim an exemption from stallage under the description contained in the deed, the Court of Queen's Bench appear to have studiously abstained from giving any opinion; and both that Court and the Lord Chief Justice, at the trial, have been desirous that such questions should be put upon the record for the purpose of a more formal discussion, which has accordingly been done by the course taken at the trial; and we therefore proceed to consider this second ground of objection, as one which is altogether open and unfettered by the judgment of the Court below. Upon this point we are of opinion that, under the grant in question, a modern grant, not made by the Crown, but by a subject, the inhabitants cannot take, by that name or description, such an easement as that which is now under consideration, that is, a right to place their stalls on market-days in alieno solo, without making any payment for the same. It was admitted, in the arguments before us, that the inhabitants cannot take land by that description in a modern deed; indeed the authority of Co. Lit. 3 is express to that point, for, although it is added there, apparently by way of exception, "unless it were in ancient times when such grants were allowed," yet, that exception would probably be found to be confined to grants by the Crown, and to stand upon the reasons stated in Dyer's Rep. 100, "but if the Queen grants land by her charter to the good men of the town of Islington without saying, to have to them their heirs, and their successors, rendering a rent, this is a good corporation perpetual to that extent only, and no other, because there a rent was reserved, &c." But the argument on the part of the defendant is, that the present grant is not a grant of land, but of an easement only, or of an exemption or discharge, and that such an easement or matter of discharge may be claimed by prescription; and that as every prescription presupposes a grant, so a prescription for such a grant to the inhabitants of a town would be good to this day. If, indeed, the present claim could be considered as confined to, and resting upon, the ground of exemption and discharge, strictly so considered, there might perhaps be some authority for contending that the inhabitants of a parish or vill might claim an exemption from toll by a modern grant, and that by a private individual. For all the judges held in the case of Baker v. Brereman (Cro. Car. 418) that inhabitants may prescribe for matters of discharge, as in modo decimandi, or to be quit of toll: and again, so a composition toll might have been made by a private individual, that is, by a parson with the consent of the patron and ordinary in favour of all the inhabitants before the restraining statutes. (See Brice v. Chaplin, 2 Ea. & Y T. C.) So also it would seem that a private individual might grant an exemption from toll to the inhabitants at large, and it affords some support to this argument that the writ de essendo quieto de tolneto lay for persons by royal grant, who could not have been impliedly incorporated by such a grant, as merchant strangers. (See Fitzherbert, N. B. 237.) But the claim in this case is not simply to be exempt from toll, properly so called, but from a species of payment, which although included in the word toll in the deed in question, in this case is a compensation for the use of land; and the true nature of the claim of the inhabitants under the deed, is a claim to the grant of the easement of going on the plaintiff's land, and pitching their stalls there on market days, without paying any thing for the use of the soil; and, upon referring to the several authorities which have been cited in support of the validity of such a prescription, it will be found that the claim by the inhabitants, quà inhabitants, to any easement, wherever it has been allowed, has been invariably rested on the ground of custom, and not on that of prescription; a custom which has existed from time immemorial, without interruption, in a certain place, and which is certain and reasonable in itself, obtains the force of the law, and is in effect the common law within the place in which it extends, though contrary to the general law of the realm. In the case of custom, therefore, it is unnecessary to look out for its origin, but in the case of prescription, which founds itself on the presumption of a grant that has been lost by the process of time, none can have had a legal origin, where no grant could have been made to support it. Thus, the custom for all fishermen within a certain district to dry their nets on the land of another might be a good prescription; it was held in 5 Co. R. 84, "and yet a grant of such an easement to fishermen within the district eo nomine might well be held void." The first case on which the defendant's counsel relied in argument was Gatewood's case (6 Co. R. 52; S. C. Cro. Jac. 152). In that case, the claim was one by all the inhabitants of Hinxwold to have a common of pasture over a place called Horsington Holmes; but this claim was set up, not as a prescription, but as a custom; it was held that the custom was against law. Lord Coke goes on to state that two differences were taken and agreed on by the whole Court—"first, between a charge on the soil of another and a discharge on his own soil; and the second, between an interest or profit, to be taken or had on another's soil, and an easement on another's soil." But it is to be observed that all the instances put are not those of prescriptions or grants, but of customs—viz. the custom that every inhabitant of the town has paid a modus decimandi—a custom that every inhabitant of such a town shall have a way over such land, either to the church or market, &c.; and those, it is said, are good, for they are an easement, and no profit. And further, Lord Coke says, that "another difference was taken and agreed, between a prescription which is always alleged in the person, and a custom which always ought to be alleged in the land; for every prescription ought to have by common intendment a lawful beginning, but otherwise it is of a custom, for that ought to be reasonable, and ex certâ causâ rationabili usitata (as Littleton saith), but need not be intended to have a lawful beginning." A difference which points out clearly the distinction which ought to govern the present case—viz. that such an easement for the inhabitants of Easingwold as is contended for, although it might be good by custom if it existed from time immemorial, yet it cannot be good by prescription, but must rest upon the grant to the inhabitants. And the report of the case in Cro. Jac. will not justify the inference contended for in the argument, that the claim to an easement for the inhabitants of a town is good by prescription, merely on the ground that the reporter has used the word prescription, instead of custom, contrary to what is found in the report in Lord Coke; the question before the Court, in that case, turning on the custom, and not on the prescription, and the attention of the reporter not being called to the distinction now under consideration. The same observation disposes of the weight of the dictum of Heath, J. in Fitch v. Rawling (2 H. Bl. 399); in which case the question before the Court arose on the claim by custom, and the attention of the Court was not called to the distinction between custom and prescription. And the case of Abbott v. Weekly (1 Lev. 176), is a strong authority that such a claim by prescription would be bad. In trespass, the defendant prescribed that all the inhabitants of such a vill had been used time out of mind to dance on the close of the plaintiff at all times for their recreation, and so justified; and after verdict for the defendant, one objection taken in arrest of judgment was, that the claim ought to have been pleaded by way of custom in the vill, and not by way of prescription in a person; a case was cited, where it had been so adjudged on demurrer, the Court held that though perhaps it would have been bad upon demurrer, yet if issue be taken upon it, and found by the verdict, it was good. No direct authority has been cited to shew that such a prescription was good, and upon our consideration of those that have been brought before us, we think they negative, rather than support, the position, that the inhabitants of the town may by that name "prescription," prescribe for an easement, in alieno solo; and if they cannot prescribe for such rights in alieno solo beyond the time of legal memory, still less can they claim such a right under a modern grant. On this ground we think that the exception secondly taken at the trial to the direction of the learned Lord Chief Justice must be allowed, and the judgment of the Court below must on that ground be reversed, and a venire de novo awarded.

Judgment reversed, and venire de novo awarded.

BAIL COURT.

Wednesday, May 22.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

REG. v. THE SHERIFF OF SHROPSHIRE.

Where a sheriff is served with a rule to return a writ, and the eighth day falls on the last day of Term, an attachment may be moved for at the rising of the Court, if no return is made at the closing of the office.

Lowndes moved for a rule for an attachment against the sheriff of Shropshire for not returning a writ.

The rule to return the writ in this case had been served on the 30th April, and no return having been made at the close of the office at five o'clock on the 8th of May, which was the last day of Easter Term, an attachment was moved for at a subsequent period of the same day, at the rising of the Court. At that time, Mr. Justice Coleridge doubted whether the application was not too soon, and declined, in the absence of any quoted authority, to grant the attachment. The application was this day renewed, on the same affidavit of service, and the two cases of The King v. The Sheriff of Surrey (11 East, 591) and The King v. The Sheriff of Middlesex were cited; the former of which appearing to be precisely in point, and affirming the practice to be, that where the eight days expire on the last day of Term, an attachment may be moved for at the rising of the Court, his lordship granted the rule.

Rule absolute for an attachment.

BUSINESS OF THE DAY.

MULLER v. CHEFFINS and ANOTHER.—Bramwell moved for a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why a writ of fi. fa. should not be set aside for irregularity and for having issued against good faith. Rule nisi.

HARRISON v. BAXTER and OTHERS.—Willes moved for a rule nisi to set aside all the proceedings in this cause since the service of the writ, as far as relates to Baxter, on the ground that an attorney had entered an appearance for him, and consented to a judge's order without his consent, he, the defendant, being anxious to defend the action. Rule nisi.

In consequence of the judges having been summoned to attend in the House of Lords, the Bail Court did not sit this day.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Serjt. STEPHEN.)

Monday, May 20.

Re JOHN BARRETT, of Bath, Surgeon.

What constitutes a trading as an apothecary within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 110.

Can the persons made liable to the Bankrupt Laws, under s. 10 of that Act, petition for protection under the New Insolvent Act?

This insolvent was described as a surgeon; his debts amounted to more than 300*l.*; and, on his examination, he admitted that he was a Licentiate of the Apothecaries' Company, that he had attended other than surgical cases, and that he supplied medicines to his patients; but that he kept no shop—never compounded prescriptions of physicians or other persons brought to him on their own responsibility; he charged only for attendance and advice, and never made a distinct charge for medicine, unless supplied in surgical cases, as ancillary to his practice as a surgeon.

It was objected that he was an apothecary trading within sec. 10 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122; and that his petition must, on that ground, be dismissed.

Homes contended that the evidence did not shew a sufficient trading as an apothecary to render insolvent liable to the bankrupt laws; and cited Ex parte Daubeny (3 Mont. & Ayr. 18); Thompson v. Lewis (Moo. & Mal. 255); Woodward v. Ball (6 C. & P. 577); Apothecaries' Company v. Greenough (1 Gale & D. 378); Ditto v. Warburton (3 Barn. & Ald. 40); Alison v. Haydon (1 Moo. & P. 588); Simpson v. Ralfe (4 Tyr. 325); 55 Geo. 3, c. 194; and 34 Hen. 8, c. 8.

But persons actually trading as apothecaries may petition for protection from process under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, s. 1; the words in that Act are, "not being a trader within the meaning of the statutes NOW in force." The word "now" relates to the time of the Act's passing—i. e. the 12th of August, 1842. At that time, apothecaries were not traders under any statute then in force. The new Bankrupt Act, by the 10th section of which apothecaries are declared traders, did not come into operation until the 11th of November, 1842.

His HONOUR.—The Act was passed on the 12th of August, and (although the first section provides that the provisions of the Act shall commence from the 11th of November) was not the Act a statute in force on the 12th of August?

Homes.—No, your Honour; a statute is not in force when its operation is suspended. The Act was not in force until the 11th of November, 1842; and the result is, that the classes of persons declared traders under section 10 are not excluded from the benefit of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, although they are now traders, and owe more than 300*l.*

His HONOUR deferred his decision until the next hearing, and, subject thereto, appointed the 7th of June for the final order.

The Dean of the Arches was unable to sit in Court this morning in consequence of continued illness. Dr. Daubeny disposed of the assignations which stood for hearing.

PREROGATIVE COURT.

Friday, April 19.

In the goods of JAMES DUNCAN.

Where a sailor is supposed to have been lost at sea, the Court will only grant probate of his will, without the usual advertisement in the public papers, under peculiarly strong circumstances.

James Duncan was the master of the Daniel, a South-Sea whaler, which left Gravesend in March 1833. The ordinary voyage for a whaling expedition is three years, but the Daniel and her crew have never returned to this country. The last time she was heard of was by a vessel, John Harding, master, which had seen the Daniel on a line with the Sandwich Islands, and had been told by her that she was bound for Japan. This information had been gained by Captain Allen, the master of a ship belonging to the same owners as the Daniel (Messrs. Benet), which had spoken with Captain Harding's vessel in 1836 or 1837. From that time the Daniel had never been heard of, and it was supposed that she had foundered. The underwriters paid as for a total loss upon the ship and cargo. James Duncan made a will in 1832, disposing of a sum of 2,280*l.* which is in the hands of Messrs. Benet, his employers. His son is now on the point of attaining his majority.

Addams moved, under the circumstances, for probate of the will.

Sir H. J. FUST.—Is it not usual to insert advertisements in the public papers?

The Registrar.—There was no advertisement required in the case of the President.

Sir H. J. FUST.—This case is particularly strong, and all the parties seem to consent to the motion. As the money is in the hands of the deceased's employers—whose managing clerk makes an affidavit as to his belief of the loss of the ship and crew, and who have themselves received as for a total loss—I will dispense with the formality of an advertisement; but I wish it to be understood that I only do so under the very strong circumstances of the case.

In the goods of ELIZABETH ANN WESTON, otherwise STEPHENS.

Where a widow has been known for some years by her maiden name, and her money in the funds has been standing in that name, the Court having conclusive evidence of identity, will grant probate to a will made in her maiden name with justifying security.

Elizabeth Ann Weston, otherwise Stephens, late of Sonning, in the county of Berks, died in the latter end of last year. Her maiden name was Stephens, and on the 2nd of August, 1834, she married a man of the name of Weston. They shortly separated, and the husband died in December 1834. Since that time she has passed under, and has been known by, her maiden name of Stephens. In September 1843 she made a will in that name, and that name was engraved upon her gravestone in the churchyard wherein she was buried, but the parish-clerk remonstrated against the impropriety of it, and it was altered to Weston. The money the deceased held in the Three per Cent. Annuities stood in her maiden name.

Addams moved that administration, with the will annexed, should be granted to the sister of the deceased.

Sir H. J. FUST.—The difficulty in these cases is to be sure that you have got the right person; and nowadays it is necessary that we should be very cautious. But here the affidavits leave no doubt of the identity of the deceased. Unless the Court should lay down the rule that it never can grant probate to such a will, it must decree administration, with the will annexed, to the sister in the present case; and I do so with, of course, justifying security.

In the goods of ROBERT ENDELL.

Where a testator appoints by will A as one of his trustees, and afterwards directs one of the attesting witnesses to strike A's name out of the will, and insert B's, and the alteration is made accordingly: Held, that though B's name cannot stand, A's cannot, under the statute of Victoria, be restored, and that probate must pass in blank.

The deceased died on the 21st of December, 1842. He made a will bearing date the 11th of December, 1838. Under it he gave all his property, for certain purposes, to two trustees, and he appointed Richard Endell and Joseph Carpenter as the trustees. In April 1842 one of the attesting witnesses saw the deceased, and the deceased told him to take the name of Carpenter out of the will, and insert the name of Richard Webb. The name of Carpenter was accordingly struck out, and the name of Webb written above it. The alteration not having been made according to the provisions of the statute is necessarily null and void; and the question was, whether probate should pass to the will with the name of Carpenter restored, or with both names struck out.

Addams prayed for probate of the will with the original name restored; citing Brook v. Kent (Jud. Com. Privy Council, July 1841; 3 Moore, 344).

Sir H. J. FUST.—I am not desirous of enlarging the construction put upon the statute in Brooke v. Kent; and at any rate, upon motion, I will not decide that probate shall pass with the name restored.

Addams.—Carpenter means to renounce, so it is a mere matter of form. Will the Court let the probate go in blank?

Sir H. J. FUST.—I think probate had better pass in blank.

KETTLEWELL v. RANDALL and OTHERS.

Where an error in the name of a cause has been made in the pleadings, and a commission for the examination of witnesses has been taken out in a cause thus wrongly described, the depositions sworn under that commission cannot be received as evidence; and a new commission must issue, either to re-examine the witnesses, or to repeal their testimony to them.

Maria O'Riley, of Leamington Priors, in the county of Warwick, was the deceased in this cause. She left a will dated 3rd of October, 1840, and two codicils, the first bearing date the 29th of July, 1841, and the other the 2nd of November, 1841. By the will, Elizabeth Kettlewell, with two other persons, was appointed executrix. By the first codicil, her appointment was revoked, and Messrs. Randall and Symonds appointed in her place. The proceedings in the suit commenced by a decree being taken out by Miss Kettlewell against the executors named in the codicil, calling upon them to propound it, or to shew cause why probate of the will should not be granted to her. The decree was returned, and proctors appeared for the very different parties in the cause, Kettlewell v. Randall and Others. A proctor subsequently appeared for Jane Matilda Pattison, a residuary legatee under the second codicil, and she was admitted a party in that same cause of Kettlewell v. Randall. An allegation was then asserted on her behalf, in which the cause was described as "a matter of proving, in solemn form of law, two codicils to the will of Maria O'Riley, of Leamington Priors, in the county of Warwick, promoted by Jane Matilda Pattison, one of the residuary legatees named in the second codicil, against Eliza Kettlewell, the executrix named in the will of the said deceased." An allegation was afterwards given in on behalf of the parties opposing the codicils, and in it the same error existed; and the proceedings went on as if in a cause of Pattison v. Kettlewell. The depositions of the witnesses were taken with that description of the cause, and the question was, whether those depositions could be received, or whether the witnesses must be re-examined.

Addams prayed publication of the evidence. The error is merely one of form. Though the cause was commenced by Miss Kettlewell against Randall and the other executors, the real parties are Miss Pattison and Miss Kettlewell; and in cases respecting wills there is a frequent change of parties. It will cause great inconvenience if the re-examination of the witnesses is held necessary. All dispute between the parties is at an end.

Sir H. J. FUST.—There is no such cause in the Assignation Book as Pattison v. Kettlewell; and the witnesses examined in a cause so called would not be indictable for perjury in the only cause before the Court with these parties—viz. Kettlewell v. Randall and Others. I cannot decide the present question merely with reference to the circumstances of the present case. I must act upon the general and received principle, and upon such principle these depositions cannot be received. It is stated that there is no longer any dispute between the parties, but the opinion of the Court, which they are desirous of having, must be founded upon the evidence, and I must see that the evidence is properly taken. I remember a case very similar to this—Armstrong v. Armstrong. There the names of the plaintiff and the defendant were transposed, and when the error was brought to the notice of the Court, the witnesses were ordered to be re-examined. I must follow the precedent which has been set me in that case.

Addams.—It will be sufficient to repeat the witnesses under a new commission without a fresh examination. That was all that was done in Armstrong v. Armstrong.

Sir H. J. FUST.—But there the only fault was in the commission. Here the pleas must be altered. But all I have to do now is to reject the motion.

WHITE v. REPTON.

Is an officer of the British army, residing in barracks with his regiment in an English colony, within the 11th section of 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, which exempts the operation of the Act from "soldiers in actual military service"?—Argument part heard.

This was a business of proving in solemn form of law the last will of the Hon. John Pery, who died in August 1842 at St. John's, New Brunswick. The deceased was an officer in the British army, and at the time of his death was living in barracks with the 30th Regiment, of which he was captain. He died a bachelor, leaving behind him seven brothers and sisters. The paper propounded as his will is simply as follows:—"St. John's, New Brunswick, August 6, 1842. In case of any accident or sickness, in consequence of which I may die, I hereby give all my property, clothes, wearing apparel, &c. to Eliza M'Cal-livry." It was signed by the deceased, "John Pery, Captain, 30th Regt." and witnessed by the adjutant of the regiment, whose military title was likewise attached to his name. Administration with this paper annexed was moved on behalf of the universal legatee named therein, upon the ground that, as the deceased was a soldier in "actual military service," the informalities of the paper would not, under the 11th section of the New Will Act (7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), deprive it of probate; but the Court refused to decide so important a point of law upon motion, and directed the paper to be propounded. (2 Law T. 335.) The paper is now accordingly propounded by the universal legatee, and its validity is opposed by one of the deceased's sisters.

Haggard and Phillimore, against the validity of the paper.

Sir J. Dodson, Q. A. and Twiss, in support of it.

The argument was not concluded.

CONSISTORY COURT.

Tuesday, April 23.

THE EARL OF DYSART v. THE COUNTESS OF DYSART.

This is a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights by the Earl of Dysart against the Countess of Dysart, his wife.

The allegation in behalf of the Countess sets up a course of ill-treatment pursued against her by the Earl, as a bar to his prayer for restitution.

Dodson, Sir John, Q.A. for the wife.—The conduct charged and proved against Lord Dysart is clearly within the definition of legal cruelty, and no Christian court can compel a wife to return to cohabitation with such a husband.

The nature of the case throws the burthen of proof upon the party cited, and accordingly her counsel commenced. The argument again stands over.

Tuesday, April 30.

PHILLIPS v. PHILLIPS.

In a suit for divorce, by reason of adultery, it appeared on the hearing, that a certain statement pleaded as verbally made, was in writing. The cause was rescinded, in order that this document might be pleaded and produced. An additional article, with this document annexed, was given in, and publication passed on the additional article. An allegation was then offered on the other side, counter-pleading certain facts stated in the document.

Held, that it was not admissible, because it was, in substance, an answer to matter contained in the original libel, and might have been offered previously, in the shape of an allegation responsive to the ninth article of the libel; and, because the circumstance of the statement being in writing did not increase the necessity of counter-pleading the facts contained in it. The allegation, if admissible, should have been offered before publication.

A suit for separation by the husband, on the ground of adultery. The husband gave in a libel, which was debated and admitted, and witnesses examined upon it. The wife gave in no allegation, publication passed, and the cause was assigned for sentence. At the hearing, it appeared that a report of certain referees, appointed by the husband to consider the conduct of his wife, had been made in writing. The Court rescinded the conclusion of the cause, in order that this document might be pleaded in due form, and brought in as an exhibit. (2 Law T. 336.) An additional article, pleading this document, has since been given in with the document annexed. Publication has passed, and the wife now offered an allegation counter-pleading certain facts stated in the document. The admissibility of that allegation was opposed.

Haggard and R. Phillimore, against the admission of the allegation.

Addams and Robinson, in support of it.

Dr. LUSHINGTON (having had the minutes of the proceedings read by the Registrar).—The Court has now to determine on the admissibility of an allegation offered at a very late period of this cause. I apprehend that, independent of the technical objection as to the precise time at which the allegation is offered, it being offered after the Court has rescinded the conclusion of the cause, the first substantial objection to the allegation is, that it contains matter which might and ought to have been pleaded in answer to the ninth article of the libel—the initiatory plea in the cause. I think I must consider the question in two points of view; first, whether this allegation might not, with equal propriety, have been presented to the Court in answer to the ninth article; secondly, whether circumstances have occurred at the hearing of the cause, affording any justification for offering the allegation at this late period, when, by the ordinary rule of the Court, there would be no opportunity of doing so. Now, the ninth article pleads, "that the cause of the said A. Phillips quitting her husband's house, on or about the 1st day of January, 1840, having become known to their relations and friends, a reference was made, through their interposition and advice, to two of their friends, confidentially, to inquire into the grounds of the charge made against the said A. Phillips, who, upon an investigation of the circumstances relating to the same, "reported" to the said R. Phillips, on or about the 29th January, 1840, their conviction that she was innocent of any criminal conduct, and they advised him to receive her back again. That the said R. Phillips, believing the result of such investigation to be true, on or about the 29th of January, 1840, received his wife back again. Dismissing for a moment all consideration of the defect or accidental omission in the form of this plea, in substance it is as follows:—Mr. Phillips, having his suspicions roused, caused an investigation to be made by two friends, and received the result of that investigation from them, and on faith of their judgment, received his wife back. The allegation now under consideration pleads as follows:—"That A. Phillips went, accompanied by her sister, to the residence of her mother, and returned therefrom, accompanied by her said sister and mother; and in the morning of Saturday, the 25th of the month of January, went to, and saw, and conversed with her husband, and, together with her mother, stayed with him several hours; and on the morning of the following day, to wit, Sunday the 26th, her husband, as it had been arranged that he should do on the day preceding, went to the lodging of A. Phillips, and remained with her there for several hours; and on the next day, to wit, Monday the 27th, A. Phillips, with her husband's perfect approbation and concurrence, returned home to his house, and she and her husband slept together at his house on the night of Monday, and thenceforth lived and cohabited together until their separation in the month of October 1842." What is the effect of this plea? In substance, it assumes to contradict the ninth article of the libel, by shewing that, previously to the receipt of the report, Mr. Phillips received back his wife, and the cohabitation between them was renewed; in other words, that it was not on the faith of the investigation; that it was not on the reliance of the report of her innocence, that the wife was taken back; because this had been done before the investigation was concluded, or the result made known. I am clearly of opinion that this allegation is substantially neither more nor less than an answer to the ninth article, and would have been admissible in answer to it; and I am not at present able to see why it was not offered at the proper time, and in the proper shape of an allegation responsive to the ninth article. I cannot myself see any such want of explicitness, or of definite statement in the libel, so that Mrs. Phillips had not ample opportunity of alleging these facts before publication in the cause. The dates are as explicit, indeed more so, than often happens in those cases; they are as explicit as possible:—"On or about the 28th"—"On or about the 29th." Surely, if Mrs. Phillips had any intention of alleging that the report was not the foundation of her being taken back, she has had ample opportunity of doing so. For the reasons I have now stated, as to the first point in the case, my mind is entirely made up to this result, that the allegation now offered by Mrs. Phillips might with the same facility have been offered at an earlier period. The second question is, whether any thing has occurred at the hearing, or was any thing then done by the Court, which should give Mrs. Phillips the opportunity of bringing in a plea, the right to do which she had forfeited by previous omission. Now, what occurred at the hearing of the cause was shortly this. Looking to the ninth article of the libel, I found it there stated that the friends to whom the reference had been made had "reported," so, and so. Here arose the whole ambiguity—"reported." Of course, so far as Mrs. Phillips was concerned originally, it mattered not whether that report was made verbally or in writing; but when the cause came on to be heard, and it appeared to the Court the report was in writing, was not a mere verbal report, the Court, according to all established rules of evidence, could not receive the oral testimony of witnesses as evidence of the contents of a written document in the power of the party, and which had neither been lost nor destroyed; the Court had no alternative, but either to reject the evidence, or rescind the conclusion at the cause. It is greatly to be lamented that the plea was so originally drawn, that the party having the document in his pocket, counsel were led into not taking an objection which must have prevailed. If the report had been stated to be in writing, and it had not been annexed, or a statement made that it had been lost or mislaid, the article would have been objectionable, and must have been reformed. But the misleading occasioned by the ninth article does not go to justify the present plea, for the report, whether it were in writing or verbal, equally required contradiction. Under the above circumstances, I followed the rule which has been usually adopted in this court. Of course I did not admit the evidence, but I rescinded the conclusion of the cause for the purpose of bringing in the document, which was admitted to be in existence. Does that circumstance in the slightest degree make any alteration in favour of Mrs. Phillips? I apprehend none whatever; it was a mere matter of form in order to keep the proceedings regular, and to get at the real truth and justice of the case. On these grounds, I feel no hesitation in saying that it is my duty to reject this allegation. Nothing can be more inconvenient than when witnesses have been examined to certain facts, and the whole of the evidence of those witnesses is known, if they are re-examined, and the whole substance of such re-examination is merely to prove handwriting, to put interrogatories for the purpose of obtaining evidence on facts collateral to the matter. If this course were allowed, there never would be an end to the proceedings; and, instead of tending to elucidate the truth, it would tend to choke it. This allegation is offered too late. If it was intended to give in any allegation at all, it should have been given before publication, as responsive to the additional articles of the libel, instead of waiting until publication has passed. It is impossible to admit this allegation, and I reject it.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

APRIL SESSIONS.

Tuesday, April 9.

REG. v. LAWRENCE.

Practice—To whom the depositions shall be given when they are handed down by the Court.

This case being called on, and it appearing that the prisoner was undefended by counsel, the Common Serjeant ordered the depositions to be given to a gentleman of the bar, and in accordance with the practice in this court, they were handed to the senior barrister present—Mr. Clarkson. He thereupon said he thought it right to mention, that on the last circuit, the judges had made it a practice to direct the depositions to be handed to the junior counsel in court.

Payne observed, that in this court the custom had always been to give them to the senior.

The Common Serjeant said, he should be sorry to act in any way against a rule that the judges had laid down, but he thought a great distinction should be drawn between the practice here and that on circuit, with regard to the matter in question. The object of the Court was, of course, to obtain assistance; and on the circuit, every gentleman was known, and there was some kind of assurance that those to whom the depositions were handed would be capable of furnishing it; but in this court, every barrister is at liberty to practise, and it might be that a gentleman who had been called only the day before, and who was, of course, from want of experience, incompetent to do the case justice, might become entitled to conduct it, and the administration of justice instead of being advanced, would be thereby in all likelihood impeded.

Clarkson consented to take the depositions in the present instance, and it seems to be understood that the established practice will not be departed from.

REG. v. SUSANNA RICHARDS, BARBER, FLETCHER, and DOREY.

Thursday, April 11.

Indictment for forging an administration bond.

The Court has no authority, without the consent of the prosecution, to afford a separate trial to prisoners jointly indicted—Custody of public documents pending a trial—Admissibility of evidence—Forging the whole of a bond, or merely a portion of it—Remoteness of the intent in forgery—The proper practice is for counsel to address the jury in the order in which the prisoners for whom they appear are respectively placed on the record—Where prisoners are defended by separate counsel, each must address the jury before any witnesses for the defence are called.

The prisoners were indicted for forging, on the 31st July, 1840, a certain bond, purporting to be an administration bond of Eliz. Stewart, spinster, with intent to defraud the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and Charles Shaw Lefevre and others, Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt. The indictment was framed on the 1st Wm. 4, c. 66, sec. 10, and contained twelve counts.

The 1st count charged that Susanna Richards forged an administration bond with intent to defraud the Archbishop of Canterbury, and charged Barber, Fletcher, and Dorey, as accessaries before the fact, with inciting the said Susanna Richards to commit the felony in that count mentioned.

The 2nd count was similar to the 1st, only charging the intent to have been to defraud the Governor and Company of the Bank of England.

The 3rd count was similar to the 1st, but charging the intent to be to defraud Charles Shaw Lefevre and others, Commissioners, &c.

In each of these counts a fac-simile of the administration bond was set forth.

The 4th, 5th, and 6th counts were similar to the three first, except that the forged administration bond was not set out.

The 7th count charged, that an unknown person forged an administration bond, with intent to defraud the Archbishop of Canterbury, and charged Barber, Fletcher, and Georgiana Dorey, as accessaries before the fact.

The 8th count was the same, except that the intent was laid to defraud the Governors and Company of the Bank of England.

The 9th the same, except that the intent was to defraud Charles Shaw Lefevre, &c. In these three counts, a fac-simile copy of the bond was also set out.

The 10th, 11th, and 12th counts were similar to the 7th, 8th, and 9th, except that the administration bond was not set out.

Wilkins, prior to the jury being charged, moved on the part of the prisoner Barber, that he might be tried separately from the other prisoners. He did so on an affidavit by Barber's solicitor, that it was impossible otherwise that justice could be done him. The other defendants had made statements which went far to exculpate his client from any further share in the transactions imputed to them, than any professional man might be called upon to take; and it was therefore a most important object with him to be enabled to put them into the witness-box, and thus obtain the benefit of testimony which would otherwise be lost to him. He quoted the case of R. v. Sealey, tried a day or two before, on the Western Circuit, on which two persons accused of murder had been separately tried.

GURNEY, B.—There, there was consent on the part of the prosecution. In Hardy's case there were separate trials, but it was because the prisoners severed in their challenges.

Parry (also for the prisoner Barber) referred to a case of R. v. Williams (8 C. & P. 431); there, there were joint indictments and separate trials; whether they severed or not in their challenges was not stated, but from the report it might be inferred they did not.

GURNEY, B.—We have no authority whatever to grant this application without the consent of the prosecution. I have known many attempts made to procure separate trials, on the ground of advantage to one or other of the prisoners, but they have never been successful.

The mode in which the alleged fraud was perpetrated, was by procuring Susanna Richards, the person mentioned in the indictment to pass for the sister of one John Stewart, who had died in the year 1827, leaving property in the funds which, in default of claimants, had been since transferred to the sinking fund. She had, in July 1840, taken out letters of administration as next of kin to the said John Stewart, and had, together with a person named Griffin and another named Gregory, signed the administration bond in the name of Elizabeth Stewart. On presenting the letters of administration at the Bank, and on going through the necessary forms, the stock was transferred into her name, and shortly afterwards sold out, she and the prisoner Barber receiving the proceeds. Evidence was given to shew that the person calling herself Elizabeth Stewart was Susanna Richards, and that she was the mother of Georgiana Dorey, the prisoner; that at the time the bond was signed, Fletcher and Barber were with her at the proctor's; that Barber had accompanied her to the Bank to obtain the transfer of the stock; that he had there identified her as Elizabeth Stewart; and that Mrs. Dorey, then Miss Richards, had procured Griffin to sign the administration bond.

A great mass of evidence was given to shew that the prisoners were acting in concert throughout the whole transaction.

Friday, April 12.

The trial having been adjourned to this day,

The Attorney-General (with whom were Clarkson, Sir John Bayley, and Bodkin) observed, at the opening of the court, that certain public documents, which were necessary for carrying on the proceedings, were left the night before in the custody of an officer of the court, but they had been demanded of him by the person who had produced them, and who was entitled to their general possession, and they had been given up to him. His, the Attorney-General's, opinion was, that when once documents were in the hands of the Court, their lordships had the right to detain them until the purpose for which they had been produced was fully answered, and he wished to have the Court's sanction for the statement.

GURNEY, B.—It undoubtedly is so, and no one had a right to make a demand of the papers in question; they must be immediately forthcoming.

It became necessary, in the course of the trial, to prove that John Stewart, the deceased, had been many years ago domiciled in Scotland, and a certificate was produced, purporting to be granted to the said Stewart on his removing from one congregation to another. It was signed by the minister and three of the elders of the congregation, and was found after his death, among certain other papers, which bore this indorsement—

"My own private affairs.—JOHN STEWART."

The witness, however, who was called to prove such finding, could only state that the day after the death (at which he was not present), the papers were delivered to him by another person, as those of the deceased.

To prove that the parties who had signed the certificate were the minister and elders at the time it bore date, the sessions-clerk of the Canongate, Edinburgh was called, and produced a book containing the minutes of the kirk session. The minister had been dead fifty years: he, the witness, did not know his handwriting, but the minutes at that time were signed by him in accordance with the usual practice. Since he had heard of these transactions, he had examined the handwriting. On looking at the certificate, he said he could not swear to the minister's signature by itself, but, taking the certificate and the minutes together, he thought he could.

The Attorney-General then proposed to ask the witness whether the signature to the certificate was that of the minister.

Greaves (with whom was Ballantine, for Fletcher) objected to the question. The witness had confessed that but for the entries in the book he knew nothing of the minister's handwriting; and even as to them, he admitted that he had only examined them since these proceedings commenced, and therefore for the purposes of this trial.

The Attorney-General.—I did not use the book as evidence of itself. It was only for the purpose of refreshing the witness's memory; but if I had done so, it might have been used in the same way as a book might be used to shew who was churchwarden at a particular time, or who was the steward of a particular manor, or who might have been the clerk to either of your lordships at a given period.

Greaves.—I object to the reception of the book, that it is not such a public document as proves itself; and as to its being used for the purpose of refreshing a witness's memory, it is clear that this can only be done where the witness has a personal knowledge of the transaction to which the entry relates.

The Attorney-General.—I moreover contend, that I have a right to read the certificate without proving the handwriting, it being more than fifty years old, and coming from the proper custody.

Greaves.—And I contend that there is no proof of its coming from the proper custody, or of its having been in the possession of Stewart at the time of his death. The witness who gives evidence on that subject can only say, that the day after the death, it reached his hands through the medium of another person.

GURNEY, B. (after consulting with Williams, J., and Maule, J.) said,—We think the matter far too doubtful to justify us in admitting the document, aspecially in a criminal case, where there can be no new trial.

The case for the prosecution being closed,

Greaves submitted that the case, even as the witnesses for the prosecution had proved it, was not one of forgery. This indictment was upon the 10th sec. of 1 Wm. 4, c. 66; and the statute in speaking of forgery, or uttering forged bonds or instruments, appeared to assume that the whole instrument must be forged before an indictment could be sustained. Now here they have proved an instrument which is a correct instrument as far as two of the signatures are concerned; it is merely the signature of Stewart that is proved to be forged. It is impossible, therefore, to say that the bond itself is forged, and in every count of this indictment either the forging or uttering a bond is alleged. The bond is joint and several, and against the two other parties, it is, to all intents and purposes, a valid instrument. There is no case upon the subject, for in all those I have been able to find there has been some insertion or some alteration which vitiates the deed altogether. Secondly, the intent in forgery should be the natural and legal consequence of the act done. (R. v. Hill, 2 Moo. C. C. 30.) Now, here the injury alleged is too remote, there being no necessary consequence that because the bond is forged, therefore the bank is defrauded.

Ballantine (on the same side) submitted that the way in which the case should be tested was to see whether the bond had a different operation before and after the signature was attached; and it was quite clear that it had not.

GURNEY, B.—You have admitted that the bond is joint and several. Surely, then, as far as Stewart is concerned, it is a forgery.

MAULE, J.—Must it not be presumed that the intent was to do what ultimately appears to have been done? For any thing that appears on the face of the record, the injury may be the immediate result of the act done; and that is not got rid of by shewing that it was not immediate but remote.

The Attorney-General.—There are repeated instances, as in the case of a power of attorney, where a party signs his own name and subsequently forges that of others; and yet, it cannot be doubted that such an act is a forgery. Fauntleroy's case is an example.

Greaves then submitted that it was the proper course for the counsel to address the Court in the order in which the prisoners for whom they respectively appeared were placed upon the record.

Wilkins strongly protested against such a course being pursued. The result of his own experience, and that of all his learned friends around him was, that the addresses of counsel should be made according to seniority, and that as Mr. Greaves was his senior, it was for him to make the first speech to the jury. It was of the utmost consequence to Barber that Fletcher's case should go to the jury before his.

Greaves believed the practice, as universally recognized, was quite the other way, and cited a recent case of R. v. Enchin, on the Oxford circuit, in which he had been engaged, and in which he had been compelled, in addressing the jury, to take precedence of Mr. Godson, Q. C. and other counsel, who were his seniors.

GURNEY, B.—The rule that prevails is for the counsel to make their addresses in the order in which the prisoners stand in the indictment; and if they cannot agree in pursuing a different course, that rule must be adhered to here.

Wilkins accordingly addressed the jury, and when he had concluded,

Greaves suggested that Mr. Wilkins should call his witnesses before he, Mr. Greaves, should enter upon the defence of Fletcher, since evidence might be adduced to affect the latter individual, and no opportunity would be afforded him of commenting upon it.

The COURT, however, refused the application.

Monday, April 14.

REG. v. READ.

Indictment against a party as accessary before the fact to the sinking of a vessel—Statements made by the principal not admissible—Semble, that the indictment should contain a positive averment that the principal was guilty—Evidence of principal used on behalf of the Crown.

The indictment was as follows:—

That at the sessions holden on the 8th of April, in the seventh year of Victoria, one William Simpson was in due form of law convicted on a certain indictment against him, for that he, on the 17th of June, in the fourth year of Victoria, feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did cast away and destroy a certain vessel called the Colina, the property of Enos Page and another, on a certain voyage, with intent to prejudice the said Enos Page, part owner of the said vessel. And further, that he feloniously, unlawfully and maliciously did cast away and destroy a certain vessel, called the Colina, the property of Enos Page and another, with intent to prejudice John Irving, then and now being a chairman of a certain company, called by the name of the Alliance Marine Insurance Company, which company had, before then, underwritten a certain policy of insurance on said vessel, which said policy was then in full force. And further, &c. setting out precisely the same circumstances, except that the intent was alleged to be to defraud a different person, in each of fourteen such counts, and, at the end of the fourteenth, it continued thus:—And that William Read, before the felony first above-mentioned, was committed by the said William Simpson, on the 1st day of June, did feloniously and maliciously incite, procure, counsel, hire, and command the said William Simpson the said felony first aforesaid to do and commit.

The whole of the above was comprised in the first count of the indictment.

There were thirteen others, similar in all respects, except that at the end the prisoner was charged with inciting, procuring, &c. the said William Simpson, the said felony. 2ndly aforesaid to do and commit. 3rdly aforesaid to do and commit; and so on to the fourteenth.

In the course of the trial, conversations with Simpson, when prisoner Read was not present, were referred to.

Shee, Serjt. (with whom were Prendergast and Doane), for the prisoner, objected that nothing which Simpson might have said could be evidence against Read.

Clarkson (with whom were Bodkin and Chadwicke Jones), for the prosecution, contended that the charge against Read being that he was an accessary before the fact to the losing of the vessel, it was essential for them to prove that she was wilfully lost, and the statements of the party who had himself effected the loss were good evidence against the prisoner. Besides, whatever was done by Simpson was done in consequence of the incitement of the prisoner previously, and the evidence would be good on that ground.

MAULE, J.—I have no objection to admit any thing that Simpson did, but I cannot receive evidence of what he said. When two persons are tried together, what one of them has said, is evidence, because he is on his trial, but it is evidence only against him. If Simpson were jointly indicted, therefore, with the prisoner, I could not, of course, reject his conversations, but they clearly would not be admissible as against the latter.

Prendergast objected, when the case for the prosecution was closed, that there was no allegation in the indictment that Simpson had really committed this felony. It was alleged that he was convicted, but nothing more. But it was quite clear that, when the record of the conviction was proved, it established nothing more than the fact of such conviction, and, as against the accessary, the guilt of the principal must independently be shewn. It forms, in fact, a main ingredient in the charge; and, if so, the indictment is defective, in not containing a positive averment that the principal was guilty. It must be admitted, however, that the precedents all run in the form here used.

MAULE, J.—They certainly do so, or I should have thought, with you, that such an averment was absolutely essential. However, this is not the time for me to give any opinion on the point. You will, of course, have the benefit of your objection hereafter, should the necessity for making it arise.

The prisoner was, however, acquitted.

It seems that Simpson had intimated to Government a desire to turn Queen's evidence; but since the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, has removed all doubt of a party convicted being a competent witness, it was deemed advisable by the prosecution that he should be indicted and plead guilty before they availed themselves of his services. At the conclusion of the case,

Clarkson applied that the prisoner Simpson might be discharged from custody, in pursuance of the understanding that had been entered into with him, that he would not be called up for judgment if he made a full confession.

MAULE, J.—I am no party to an understanding of that kind. I only know that the prisoner has pleaded guilty to a very heinous offence, and that it is my duty to pass upon him the sentence of the law.

He was accordingly placed at the bar, and sentenced to transportation for life.

[It is understood, however, that an application will be made to the Secretary of State, and that the prisoner will in all probability receive a pardon.]

Tuesday, April 16.

REG. v. FURLEY.

Caution to a prisoner, that what she says will be used against her on the trial, will prevent the reception in evidence of any statement made in consequence.

The prisoner was indicted for the wilful murder of her child; and, in the course of the evidence, a policeman, in stating a conversation he had had with the prisoner when she was apprehended, said that he had previously cautioned her, that whatever she told him would be used against her on her trial.

MAULE, J.—I think that this conversation is not admissible. It was held by Coleridge, J. in Drew's case (8 C. & P. 140), that where an officer had told a prisoner that whatever he said would be used for or against him, the confession could not be received, and I have acted on that decision several times since.

Prendergast (who was for the prosecution).—But in that case, my lord, the words used were "for or against you," and that would be clearly a misrepresentation.

MAULE, J.—If you promise a person that what he states will be at all events used at the trial, you may thereby be inducing him to confess. But you are guilty of a misrepresentation in saying so, because the prosecutor may, if he think fit, refuse to give such confession in evidence. You are giving a positive undertaking to do that which may not after all be done. The proper course is, where any caution at all is given, to let the prisoner know, that what he says may do him harm, but cannot possibly do him good.

The statement was accordingly rejected.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE week has been a blank one in legislation. It will be observed that Sir James Graham has suspended the County Courts Bill for a time, in consequence of the measure for the Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt, pending in the House of Lords, and with which, as our readers are aware, the County Courts Bill, which inflicts imprisonment, is entirely at variance. We trust that the respite will be well employed to crush the imperfect scheme. We direct the attention of readers to an article in our columns of to-day exposing its manifold imperfections, blunders, and impracticabilities.

"A Bill for facilitating the collection of County Rates, and for relieving High Constables from attendance at Quarter Sessions in certain cases."

Sect. 1. That from and after the passing of this Act, as often as the justices of the peace within the respective limits of their commissions in England have made a county rate or police rate, or any other rate which may by law be raised in like manner as county rates, or any two or more such rates, such justices assembled at their general or quarter sessions, or at any adjournment thereof, may order precepts in the form shewn in the schedule annexed to this Act, or as near thereto as may be, to be issued to the guardians of every union of parishes, of which union any parish is situate within such limits, stating the sum or sums assessed and charged for each such rate on each parish in the union, the whole of which parish is situate within such limits, and requiring the said guardians, within such time as may be limited in such precepts, to cause the aggregate of the said several sums so stated to be paid by them out of the moneys held by them on behalf of each such parish, to the treasurer of the county or place for which such justices act, and may cause such precepts to be sent by post, or otherwise, to such guardians; and such precepts shall have force in such union so far as concerns such parishes as are within the limits of the commission of the said justices, notwithstanding that the place of meeting of such guardians may not be situated within such limits, and without being indorsed with the signature of the justice of the peace having ordinary jurisdiction in the place of meeting of the guardians; and such guardians shall raise the moneys required by such precepts to be paid in like manner as the money required by such guardians for the relief of the poor, and shall pay such moneys at the time limited, and in the manner prescribed by such precepts; and if the treasurer of such guardians, or any person on his or their behalf, tender to the treasurer of the county or place for which such justices act, the aggregate of the said several sums, or if he so tender the whole sum assessed on any such parish or parishes in respect of any such rate or rates, together with a copy of such precept in which are specified the parish or parishes, and the rate or rates in respect of which the same is so tendered, the treasurer of the county shall receive the sum so tendered, notwithstanding that the sums required to be paid on behalf of other of such parishes, or of other of such rates be not then tendered, and shall give a receipt for the sum or sums received by him accordingly; but he shall not receive any sum on behalf of any such parish less than the whole of the sum assessed and charged thereon in respect of one such rate; and the receipt of the treasurer of such county or place shall be a good discharge for the payment of the sums specified in any such precept, or of any of them.

2. If the guardians fail to pay such rates, the justices may issue warrants to the overseers of parishes, &c. to pay the same.

3. If the overseers, &c. fail to pay, the justices may levy the rate by distress and sale.

4. Justices in quarter sessions may issue precepts to the overseers of parishes, &c. not comprised in unions, or only partly within the jurisdiction of the justices, without the intervention of the high constable.

5. Delivery of precepts, &c. may be by post, and receipt of postmaster taken, and to be evidence of service.

6. Construction.

7. And whereas it is expedient to relieve high constables from the duty of attending at the court of quarter sessions, whether for the purpose of delivering in the list of persons from whom their successors are to be chosen, or for the purpose of delivering to the Court the list of jurors, as required by an Act passed in the 6th year of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, for consolidating and amending the laws relative to jurors and juries; be it enacted, that where high constables have heretofore been appointed at courts of quarter sessions, the high constables of such places shall hereafter be appointed by such justices as may be present at the special sessions of their division, at which overseers of the poor are now by law required to be appointed, or at any adjournment thereof; but if the hundred or other like division of the county for which any high constable is to be appointed, be not included within the limits of any one division of the county for which such special sessions are held, then the justices of the peace for the county assembled at general or quarter sessions, or any adjournment thereof, may from time to time determine the division of the special sessions for which such high constable shall be appointed, and shall cause notice of such determination to be sent by post or otherwise to the high constable for the time being of such hundred or other like division; and every high constable, whether appointed at a special sessions, or at an adjournment thereof, or at a court-leet, or any other special court, shall, if present at the time of his being appointed, then and there take his oath for the due execution of his office; and if otherwise, he shall forthwith, on the receipt of his appointment, go before the next or some other justice of the peace for the county in which he resides, and then and there take his said oath of office; and he shall not, in virtue of his office of high constable, be required to take any other oath than the said oath for the due execution of his office.

8. The justices at special sessions to transmit jury lists to quarter sessions.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

TUESDAY, May 21.—Lord BROUGHAM brought in a Bill to amend the Act passed in 1842, to abolish imprisonment for debt. We understood him to say that the present measure had been prepared to cure some defects in the former law, and at the suggestion of the Commissioners of the Insolvent Court.

LIBEL LAW.

Lord CAMPBELL referred to the Libel Bill which he had introduced early in the session, and which, after it had been read a first time, had been referred to a select committee. That committee had now made its report, and had introduced several alterations in the measure, the object of which was to allow the truth to be given in evidence in public prosecution for libel or seditious words. Thus amended, he hoped that the Bill would be allowed to pass. It was then read a second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

COUNTY COURTS BILL.

FRIDAY, May 17.—In reply to a query from Mr. BORTHWICK, SIR J. GRAHAM said he had hoped that some progress would have been made in the County Courts Bill before Whitsuntide, but a difficulty had arisen which he did not foresee. A very grave question was now pending in the other house with respect to the abolition of imprisonment for debts in execution. (Hear.) The principle had, in fact, been affirmed by the other house. Now, it appeared to him important that the sense of the house should be taken on the principle of that measure before they proceeded further with the discussion of the details of the County Courts Bill, which proceeded on the opposite principle, and would not only continue imprisonment for debts in execution, but even extend its operations to debts of smaller amount. Upon the whole, he thought it would be expedient to postpone the further consideration of that bill until the other bill, to which he had referred, had been brought before the house.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS, &c.—We are accustomed to have a great deal to do with "Parliamentary Papers;" but Mr. Wallace, of Greenock, has at length afforded us an opportunity of analyzing the contents of a Parliamentary paper which relates almost exclusively to Parliamentary papers themselves. It is a return of the receipts from the sale of Parliamentary papers, and costs for prosecutions or actions against officers of the House of Commons. We find from this document that the total receipt for the sale of the Parliamentary papers printed by order of the House of Commons, from the year 1836 to the year 1843 (both inclusive), amounts to the sum of 38,403*l.* of which 3,086*l.* was received in 1836; 4,788*l.* in 1837; 5,165*l.* in 1838; 7,512*l.* in 1839; 4,708*l.* in 1840; 3,816*l.* in 1841 (first and second session); 5,009*l.* in 1842; and 4,316*l.* in 1843. The total net produce amounted to the sum of 34,452*l.* for the above eight years. It will hence be seen that the net annual average was about 4,306*l.* 10s. This return includes, however, the papers sold which were not printed by order of the House, being those which were presented in a printed form by Government offices. We are sorry to be obliged to record that in the last two years, 1842 and 1843, the sums of 2,009*l.* and 1,605*l.* respectively were derived from the sale of certain Parliamentary papers as "waste paper." The total receipts for these years only amounted, be it remembered, to 5,009*l.* and 4,316*l.* In former years the sums derived from the consignment of these invaluable documents to the waste-paper magazine never exceeded 538*l.* except in 1839, when, from some extraordinary disinclination on the part of the public to the study of Parliamentary statistics, the item from waste-paper amounted to the large sum of 3,115*l.* or nearly one-half of the whole. On examining another part of the return, we find that the net profit to the public by the sale of Parliamentary papers has been reduced by the sum of 4,263*l.* 11s. being the amount paid by the country in the same period (1836—1843) for prosecutions for libel, or actions instituted against the House of Commons through its officers; so that it would appear that the "hon. House" has been compelled to pay somewhat dearly for the pertinacious assertion of its rights and its privileges."

CUSTOM-HOUSE FRAUDS, SMUGGLING, &c.—A Parliamentary return has been issued on the motion of Mr. Hume, giving an account of the law and other expenses incurred against persons for smuggling and frauds in the customs for 1842 and 1843. In England, in 1842, there were 815 prosecutions, the expenses of which were 3,254*l.* 15s., the duties were 52*l.* 10s. 2d.; the penalties, 1,782*l.* 7s. 1d.; and the amount received in compromises was 694*l.* 19s. 4d. In 1843 there were 1,147 prosecutions in England, at an expense of 5,599*l.* 15s. 7d.; the duties were 267*l.* 10s. 6d.; the penalties, 943*l.* 12s. 9d.; and the compromises amounted to 2,533*l.* 16s. 4d. In the two years the expenses were 8,856*l.* 10s. 7d.; and the amount recovered, 3,228*l.* 15s. 8d. A similar return is given respecting Ireland and Scotland. On the whole, the expenses in the United Kingdom were 10,117*l.* 8s. 6d.; and the amount recovered in compromises was under 5,000*l.* The following note from the solicitor to the Customs appears on the return:—"The sum of 12,000*l.* has been recovered from Charles Candy and William Dean, and paid into court to abide the result of writs of error brought by them. Verdicts have been found for the Crown against Charles Candy for the further sum of 3,150*l.*; against William Dean, for 1,050*l.*; and against Denis John Blake, late a landing waiter in the Customs, for 4,350*l.*; which also await the result of writs of error. The sum of 3,954*l.* 1s. 4d. has also been obtained from Messrs. Candy and Dean, under an extent for duties alleged to be due from them to the Crown, and has also been paid into court to abide the decision of a jury as to the amount which may be found to be due; and a verdict has been found against John Dean for 137*l.* 6s. as duty due from him."

POST-OFFICE.—The ordinary Post-office returns, which have just been made to Parliament, shew, among others, the following results:—The number of letters delivered in the United Kingdom, in 1843, was upwards of 220 millions. The three weeks which are given of 1844 shew an increase over the corresponding weeks of 1843 of a quarter of a million of letters per week—this is an increase in the rate of increase, owing, no doubt, to improvement in trade. The letters of the London district post are now at the rate of 26 millions per annum, or fully double the number under the old system, notwithstanding that, up to the date of the returns, there had been no increase in the number of town deliveries. The gross revenue of the year 1843 was 1,620,867*l.* and the net revenue 640,217*l.*; shewing in each instance an increase, as compared with 1842, of about 40,000*l.*; which, considering the important reductions in foreign rates, is as much as could be expected. We have stated the revenue as it ought to have been given in the return—it is given at about 85,000*l.* less, owing, as explained in a note, to certain old debts (some fifty years old) having been written off. The gross revenue is now about 70 per cent. of that received under the old system, and it exceeds that obtained during the fourpenny rate. The money-orders still increase in number and amount. The sum annually remitted through the Post-office in England and Wales alone is now nearly five millions. The return shews double that amount; for, notwithstanding the ridicule which a similar return brought upon them last year, the Post-office persists in considering the "Amount passing through the office," as made up of all which it receives added to all which it pays. The increase of money orders, since 1839, is 25 fold.

CHEESE.—A return of the quantities of cheese imported into the several ports of Great Britain in each month of the year 1843, distinguishing the European, United States, and Colonial produce, has been printed on the motion of Mr. Colvile, the member for Derbyshire. The aggregate importations from all parts during the year ending January 5, 1844, amounted to 179,389 cwt. From various countries in Europe, there were imported during the year, 136,998 cwt.; from the United States of America (whence very rich fine flavoured cheeses are now being constantly imported), 48,312 cwt.; and from the British possessions abroad only 79 cwt.

SUPERANNUATION ALLOWANCES.—An account of all allowances or compensations granted, as retired allowances or superannuations, in all public offices or departments which remained payable on the 1st January, 1843, the annual amount which was granted in the year 1843, the annual amount which ceased within the year, and the total amount remaining payable on the 31st December, 1843, has just been printed by special order of the lower House of Parliament. We find that the gross total amount of compensation allowances which remained payable on the 1st of January, 1843, was 285,695l.; the annual amount of allowances granted in the year 1843, 1,218l.; the annual amount of allowances which ceased within that year, 17,437l.; and the annual amount of allowances payable on the 31st of December, 1843, 269,480l. As far as regards the "superannuation" allowances, the annual amount which remained payable on the 1st of January, 1843, was 385,252l.; the annual amount granted in the year 1843, 52,753l.; the annual amount ceased within the same period, 34,900l., and the annual amount of superannuation allowances remaining payable on the 31st of December, 1843, 403,100l. The gross total amount of both "compensation" and "superannuation" allowances which remained payable on the 31st of December, 1843, was 672,580l.; but, allowing for the deductions in 1843, pursuant to the 27th section of the Act 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 24, the actual charge entailed upon the public on the last day of the year 1843 amounted only to 645,243l.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

IN reply to inquiries, we beg to say that the LAW TIMES reports will be continued as heretofore, their plan and purpose being to give the earliest intelligence of all the decisions, and to preserve an unique and valuable record of all the business of the courts. The Practical Reports of the Verulam Society will be full reports, got up with care and reference to briefs, &c. precisely similar to those hitherto termed the regular reports. In future, BITTLESTONE'S and SYMONS'S Reports of Magistrates' Cases will appear only in the Verulam Society's publication. We shall but transfer to our columns an occasional case of special importance. The reports of the last Term have been inserted here to shew the Profession how the work will be done, and to permit an estimate to be formed of their utility by those who may be inclined to join the Society.

II.—APPRENTICESHIP.

EXPENSE OF INDENTURE OF PARISH APPRENTICE, AND PARTIES THERETO.

Dec. 4, 1843.

Clerk of Eastry Union—Stated that an orphan boy, aged 13, had been sent from the union workhouse to a grocer and outfitter at Ramsgate, with a view to his being ultimately apprenticed. The boy and the master, having had some trial of each other, were desirous of executing the necessary indentures of apprenticeship. An expense of 30s. must be incurred for the indenture, which will carry a 20s. stamp. Inquired, first, whether the guardians can defray the cost of the indenture, beyond the usual allowance for clothing granted to children whose condition requires it on their leaving the workhouse for service; secondly, whether the board of guardians must be a party to the indenture, and if so, whether they can, under the 17th section of the 5 & 6 Vict., c. 57, empower one of their officers to execute the indenture on their behalf; or, thirdly, whether the parish officers were the parties who should be joined in the indenture.

Ans. The commissioners see no objection, under the circumstances, to the guardians allowing the cost of the indenture beyond the usual allowance of clothing to children who leave the workhouse for service. But assuming that the guardians are at the charge of providing the indenture and the clothing, the case is not one in which any stamp duty is payable, as the 40th section of 8 Anne, c. 9, provides that the stamp duties shall not extend to cases in which the apprentice is placed out at the common, or public charge of any parish or township. A further consequence of the proposed provision from the poor-rates would be, that the indenture would require to be allowed by the justices. The 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, s. 11, enacts, that no indenture, by reason of which any expense shall be incurred by the parochial funds, shall be valid, unless approved by two justices, under their hands and seals, according to the provisions of that Act, and the Act of 43 Eliz. With respect to the second and third inquiries, I am to observe, that the commissioners understand the proposed binding to be a voluntary one on the part of the apprentice, and not a binding by the parish. If so, the apprentice must execute the deed; and the execution by the overseers will not be necessary. If the case were that of a binding by the parish, the overseers, and not the guardians, would still be the proper parties to the indenture. The overseers could not, however, since the passing of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, in any case lawfully incur any cost at the charge of the poor-rates, in respect of the apprenticeship of a poor person, unless the guardians had sanctioned the proceedings; apprenticeship being relief, and the administration of relief being, by the 54th section of the above statute, vested in the guardians.

III.—BASTARDY.

DEMAND UPON PUTATIVE FATHER PRIOR TO ENFORCEMENT.

Nov. 6, 1843.

Clerk of Chertsey Union—Stated that the father of a bastard child, on whom an order for the payment of 3s. per week had been made, had left that part of the country. The board of guardians being about to take proceedings to obtain the arrears then due, wished to be informed whether ulterior proceedings by warrant, distress, &c., could be taken before the arrears due have been demanded by the overseers.

Ans. Although the ordinary practice, and that which appears to the commissioners the expedient one, is to demand of the putative father the sums due under an order of justices, before any proceeding is taken to compel payment, the commissioners do not perceive, with reference to the 76th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act, that such demand is legally requisite. It would seem that under that section, the fact of the payments directed by the order to be made not having been made (if such fact is made to appear upon the oath of the overseers or guardians), is sufficient to enable the justices to proceed to issue the warrant to cause the reputed father to be brought before them. The warrant, in such case, would be in the nature of a demand, and would, on its return, enable the putative father to shew that he had paid, or that he was not liable, or make any other defence which the circumstances of the case might allow of. Then if, upon the hearing, the parties should see fit to issue the warrant of distress, the whole proceeding would have been in conformity with the general principle of law, viz., that a person should not be punished (the warrant of distress being in the nature of an execution) until he has had the opportunity of being heard. Where the order directs the payments to be made to the guardians, the guardians can empower the overseers, or any of their officers, to receive the sums which may from time to time become due.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

TERM commenced on Wednesday without the usual formalities. It is gratifying to find a steady decrease in the arrears of business. In the Queen's Bench there are 85 motions for new trials, of which three only were moved in Michaelmas Term, 1842, and the remainder in Michaelmas Term last. The special paper and demurrer list contains the names of 34 causes. In the Court of Common Pleas, the remanet paper exhibits 7 causes, and the new trial list only 27, none of which were moved for earlier than Hilary Term last. There are ten waiting for the judgment of the Court, and 21 demurrers are set down for hearing. In the Court of Exchequer there are only 9 rules in the peremptory paper; in the special paper, 6 for judgment and 8 for argument. In the new trial list there are 5 for judgment and 27 for argument, none of which were moved for before the present year.

It is stated, as if from authority, that Sir Nicholas Tindal does not contemplate retirement, although the rumour is still rife in the robing-room.

THE DUKEDOM OF SUSSEX.

On Thursday the case of Augustus Frederick D'Este, on his claim to the dukedom of Sussex, the earldom of Inverness, and the barony of Arklow, came before the Committee for Privileges, in the House of Lords. As very much interest will naturally be felt in this remarkable and extraordinary peerage claim, the following abstract of the case, and of the arguments upon which Sir Augustus D'Este's claim is founded, cannot but prove welcome to the public. The claimant first sets forth his pedigree as the son of the late Duke of Sussex and Lady Augusta Murray, and then recites the letters patent of the 27th of November, 42 Geo. 3, by which his Royal Highness Prince Augustus Frederick was created Baron of Arklow, Earl of Inverness, and Duke of Sussex, with limitation to the heirs male of his body; and adds, that he (the claimant) is the only male issue of the marriage celebrated at Rome, A.D. 1793, between his said late Royal Highness and Lady Augusta Murray, daughter of the Earl of Dunmore. The marriage took place without previous communication with George 3, and with the strictest secrecy; but the fact soon became known. "The King (to use the language of the claimant's case) was displeased at the event, and from the time it came to his knowledge every endeavour was made to cause a separation of the prince from his wife. This was accomplished, in the first instance, by his Royal Highness being immediately sent abroad, and after several short periods of residence together, the desired object of a permanent separation was attained in the year 1806, the claimant and a daughter being the only children of the marriage." On the death of his royal parent, the claimant presented his petition to her Majesty, claiming the dignities of Baron of Arklow, Earl of Inverness, and the Duke of Sussex, which petition was referred to the consideration of the Attorney General, who, having heard the evidence in support of his allegations, made his report in August 1843. From that report it appears that the fact of a marriage between the late Duke of Sussex and the claimant's mother having been celebrated at Rome, was proved; but with the view of establishing the lawfulness of that marriage, and of shewing that its validity was not affected by the provisions of the Royal Marriage Act (12 Geo. 3, c. 11), a statement of the circumstances under which the marriage took place is relied on by the claimant. The claimant, in the course of a detailed narrative of those circumstances, strongly relies on the fact, that neither the sense which both the prince and the claimant's mother entertained of the sufferings and disasters which their union had wrought, nor the feelings consonant upon the disagreement which put an end to the union, ever once induced either of them to deny the fact of the marriage at Rome, or to express any doubt in their own minds as to the legal validity of that marriage. It is stated, confidently, that unequivocal evidence will be given that his late Royal Highness repeatedly acknowledged and treated the claimant as his legitimate son; indeed, one letter, written in 1801, is directed by the duke "to my dearly beloved son, Prince Augustus Frederick, No. 40, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, London." Her Majesty having been pleased to refer the claimant's case to the consideration of the House of Peers, and the House having referred the petition to the Lords' Committee for Privileges, this case is therefore now submitted by the claimant to their lordships; and these three principal questions will arise for their lordships' consideration:—"First, the question of fact as to the marriage, upon which he relies, as having been contracted at Rome; secondly, the legality of that marriage. And upon these two points the claimant presumes to hope that little difficulty will be found in the way of your lordships' conclusion in his favour. The third question will be, whether a marriage contracted by a descendant of his late Majesty George II. out of her Majesty's dominions, and legal in all other respects, is rendered invalid by the operation of the statute 12 Geo. 3, c. 11, commonly called the Royal Marriage Act. Whatever impression may be received from the first view of the question, the claimant confidently anticipates that a due investigation of the general principles of international law and of local legislation, upon which the proper construction and effect of the statute will depend, and by which it must be governed, will in its result abundantly satisfy your lordships that that statute does not invalidate the marriage upon which he relies, or defeat his claim, as the legitimate offspring of that marriage, to succeed to the honours of his royal parent." The above is the summary of the arguments upon which the claimant relies; and the case is signed by "Thomas Wilde, William Erle, and James Wilde," as counsel.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed George Frederick Browne, of Diss, in the county of Norfolk, gent. and John Price, of Shrewsbury, in the county of Salop, gent. to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE TINDAL.—We are enabled to give the most positive contradiction to the report current in the legal circles—viz. that the learned and excellent Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas contemplates, or has expressed a wish, to resign his high office at the expiration of the present Term. His lordship at present does not entertain any intention of retiring from public life.—Standard.

VEXATIOUS LAW PROCEEDINGS.—The following important manifesto has just been issued:—

"NOTICE.—Whereas it is expedient, as well for protecting persons in statu pupillari against impositions or proceedings at law, as for securing the regular and prompt payment of all just and lawful debts contracted by them, that the expenses incurred by such persons should be brought, as far as is practicable, under the inspection and control of the tutors of their respective colleges. And whereas some cases have recently occurred, wherein inhabitants of the town have instituted legal proceedings against persons in statu pupillari for the recovery of debts, without having given any previous notice of their claims or intentions to the tutors of the colleges of which such persons were members.

"We, the Vice-Chancellor and Heads of Colleges, whose names are underwritten, do hereby give notice, that if in future an inhabitant of the town, engaged in any trade or profession, shall institute any legal proceedings for the recovery of a debt due to him from any person in statu pupillari, without first giving reasonable notice of his claims to the tutor of such person; he shall be punished by discommuning or otherwise, as to the Vice-Chancellor and heads of colleges shall seem fit.

"William Hodgson, D.D. { Vice-Chancellor. Master of St. Peter's.
George Thackeray, D.D. provost of King's.
William Webb, D.D. Master of Clare-hall.
William French, D.D. Master of Jesus.
John Lamb, D.D. Master of Corpus.
Gilbert Ainslie, D.D. Master of Pembroke.
John Graham, D.D. Master of Christ's.
George Archdall, D.D. Master of Emmanuel.
Ralph Tatham, D.D. Master of St. John's.
Benedict Chapman, D.D. Master of Caius.
Robert Phelps, D.D. Master of Sidney.
William Whewell, D.D. Master of Trinity.
Joshua King, LL.D. President of Queen's."

CANDIDATES FOR THE BAR.—From the fact of some of our inns of court, till a recent period, having been too easy of access to many seeking the Bar as a profession, and to the great redundancy of members of it at the present day, and the necessity of enforcing a more rigid system of regulation in the admission of members to the several learned legal societies, a most important regulation has been recently adopted by the benchers of the Hon. Society of the Middle Temple. It appears that in Trinity Term, 1789, an order was made by the then members of the bench of the Inner Temple and the then benchers of the Middle Temple, in adopting the same, ordered—"That from and after that time no articled clerk, either to an attorney or a solicitor, or to a clerk in the Court of Chancery or Court of Exchequer, ought to be called to the bar until his articles shall either have expired or been cancelled for the space of two whole years, and stating that it was then ordered by the masters of the bench then present that the said resolution should be confirmed and adopted as the rule of that society in all future applications of such articled clerks to be called to the bar." We now find that, in conformity with certain stringent rules elsewhere adopted, the bench of the Middle Temple has ordered that for the future, "No attorney-at-law, solicitor, writer to the signet, or writer of the Scotch courts, proctor, notary, or parliamentary agent, or person acting as such; and no clerk of or to any barrister, conveyancer, special pleader, attorney, solicitor, writer to the signet, or writers of the Scotch Courts, proctor, notary, or Parliamentary agent, clerk in Chancery, or other officer in any court of law or equity, whether such clerk be articled or in the receipt of a salary, or of other remuneration for his services, shall be allowed to keep commons in the Hall of this Society available for the purposes of being called to the bar, whether such persons be already, or may hereafter become, a member of this society, until such person, being an attorney, shall have taken his name off the Rolls, nor until he and every other person above named or described shall have ceased to act or practise as such attorney, writer to the signet, or writer of the Scotch Courts, solicitor, proctor, notary, agent, or clerk, as aforesaid, saving always to any person or persons circumstanced as aforesaid, the benefit of any term or terms which he or they may have kept, in conformity with the orders of this society;" and that, henceforth, "no person already admitted, or who may hereafter be admitted, a member of this society, shall apply for or take out any certificate in pursuance of the statute 44 Geo. 3, c. 98, s. 14, without the special permission of this society, under pain of expulsion; and that such permission be in no case granted until the person applying for the same shall have kept such commons in the hall of this society as in pursuance of the order of the 16th day of July, 1762, are required to be kept as a qualification for the bar, and that such permission when granted, do endure only from the date thereof, but may be renewed annually, by order, upon petition."

CRIME IN ENGLAND.—Of the forty English counties there was a decrease of the commitments last year in twenty-three; in fifteen an increase; in two the numbers continued the same. In both North and South Wales there was an increase. All the great northern and midland manufacturing counties are comprehended in the decrease. In the great agricultural counties the decrease has been more partial; it extends in the eastern counties to Norfolk and Essex, while in Lincolnshire, Cambridge, and Suffolk, there was an increase. In the midland counties, Northampton, Oxford, and Berks, [illegible] a decrease; Bucks, an increase. Of the western counties, Wiltshire and Somersetshire, a decrease; Dorsetshire, an increase. In the three mining counties, Cornwall in the west and Durham and Northumberland in the north, there was an increase.

IRELAND.—THE STATE PROSECUTIONS.

Dublin, Wednesday, May 22.

This being the first day of Term, the Courts were opened with the usual formalities.

Mr. Justice Crampton sat in the morning, when the usual oaths were administered to several gentlemen, who were afterwards called to the bar. He then retired, and none of the members of the Courts made their appearance until a late hour, when Mr. Justice Burton entered the Court, and the county and city grand juries were sworn; upon which his Lordship made a very few observations to them upon the duties they had to discharge. When he had concluded, the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Crampton took their seats upon the Bench.

The Attorney-General and several of the Crown Council were present, and also some of the traversers' counsel, and the Court was much crowded by the public, but few members of the bar, comparatively speaking, were present, in consequence of the lateness of the hour, now nearly half past four o'clock. Shortly after entering the Court, the Chief Justice stated that the Court would give judgment in the case of the Queen v. O'Connell and Others on Friday next.

It is generally supposed that the Court will unanimously refuse the motion for a new trial.

The following gentlemen were called to the bar after having been duly sworn:—

Denis Thomas O'Brien, esq. second son of Denis O'Brien, late of Fairfield, Galway, esq. deceased.

Richard George Sheil, esq. son of the right hon. R. Lalor Sheil, of Long Orchard, Tipperary, M.P.

Wm. O'Sullivan, jun. esq. eldest son of William O'Sullivan, of Carriganass Castle, Cork, esq.

William Cruise, esq. second son of William Piers Cruise, late of Fitzwilliam-street, in the city of Dublin, esq. Q.C. deceased.

Timothy Joseph Lane, esq. eldest son of Andrew Lane, late of Cloyne, Cork, esq. deceased.

Robert Buchanan, esq. eldest son of Robert Buchanan, late of Prospect, Mayo, esq. deceased.

Henry O'Neill Burke, esq. eldest son of John Burke, of Hollywell House, Mayo, esq.

Percy Whitestone, esq. eldest son of Luke White Whitestone, of North Frederick-street, in the city of Dublin, esq.

Richard Wellesley Bernard, esq. fourth son of Thomas Bernard, late of Castle Bernard, in the King's County, esq. deceased.

Michael Francis McO'Boy, esq. eldest son of David McO'Boy, of the city of Cork, esq.

CORRESPONDENCE.

COUNTY COURTS BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—May I have the privilege of asking, through your valuable columns, whether the 75th section of the County Courts Bill for the present session is more palatable to the Profession than the 67th of the last session? Was the former calculated to effect greater injury upon us than the latter? I apprehend not; for I find that by the 4th section of the Bill of last session the proposed jurisdiction of the Court was to extend to 10*l.*; and by the 104th section, to be further extended to 15*l.* where the debt or damage, and the value of the goods claimed, did not exceed 15*l.*; and by the 43rd section of the Act of this session, jurisdiction, I perceive, is given to 15*l.* in the cases therein expressed, as printed in your No. 57, and which corresponds with the 4th section of last session; and I also find that the same munificent scale of fees, so liberally inserted as the reward for professional exertion in the 67th section of the Bill of last session, is repeated in the 75th of the Bill of this session. I say I presume the present Bill is more palatable than the former, or at all events that opposition to it sleeps, for your columns teemed with professional indignation when the former Bill was on the tapis, but as to the present, it seems to be passing by without note or comment. If the House of Commons would condescend to be informed by practical men, no Bill with such a clause as the 75th would be allowed to pass. Let them take the evidence of tradesmen and of attorneys, as to the operation of (for example) that unjust scale of fees laid down in trials before the sheriff, and let them candidly say what has been the effect of that measure. Has it not been that the tradesman has, to use a paradoxical expression, gained a loss? As an illustration of this, I was some time since employed to sue a baronet, who pleaded the Statute of Limitations. The cause was tried before the undersheriff. Being myself a witness for the purpose of proving certain correspondence, it was manifestly impossible for me to conduct the case. I therefore employed counsel. The fee I paid him was only 1*l.* 1*s.*; but the Master disallowed it, saying (as of course the fact was) he had no discretion. A brief also was prepared, but for the same reasons was disallowed. The undersheriff's and bailiff's fees, also, amounting to 1*l.* 18*s.* charged to and which were paid by me, were only allowed at 1*l.* 9*s.*

Great difficulty existed in effecting a service, and three writs were issued. I paid a bailiff 1*l.* 8*s.* endeavouring to effect a service and making appointments for a distringas; and which really was, as I thought, a very moderate remuneration for his trouble (as he had to walk twenty miles to and fro several times for the purpose). Of this 28*s.*, 9*s.* only was allowed; so that although my client succeeded in his cause, and notwithstanding I made no charge whatever against him (except the actual disbursements not allowed), he practically received no benefit from his verdict. Such must ever be the effect of an inadequate scale of fees. It is absurd to suppose that the attorney will be the only sufferer, for his client must suffer also in such cases. In the above case, for considerable labour, I obtained comparatively no remuneration; for my brief ran to thirteen sheets, and for which, although there were seven witnesses, I was only allowed 13*s.* 4*d.* as for "minutes of evidence." Supposing an attorney employed under the proposed 75th clause, what would he do, as a conscientious man? He would say to his client, I must see your witnesses, and take down their statement in writing, before I can tell you whether you can substantiate your claim or make good your case. I will suppose him to do so; if it be a case "of breach of express or implied agreement, or claim to recover the possession or value of any goods or chattels unlawfully taken or kept from him," the nicest legal questions might arise, and oftentimes difficulties would occur, when the attorney would not feel justified in himself determining the effect of, upon the evidence he had taken. He would therefore say to his client, I must prepare a case, and submit the facts for the opinion of counsel; and for all this labour, as well as conducting the cause to an issue and determination, the attorney would receive from 10*s.* to 15*s.* as the case might be. But in what position would be the unfortunate client, supposing the attorney, from a desire to serve him as an old client, or for promoting or effecting justice (although at the expense of his own toil, and which I know to be often done), was willing as far as his personal labour was concerned to be remunerated at the rate of 10*s.* or 15*s.* if he (the client) had to pay for counsel's fees, and for the attorney's agent's charges? These must of necessity be paid by the client. The answer, therefore, is plain; the client would be a loser. This I do say would be an injustice, and a great one too. Laws for the enforcement of obligations should be based upon this principle, that the proved wrong-doer should bear the burden and expense of the wrong inflicted. Costs should be in the discretion of the Taxing Master to determine, upon a review of the business performed (taking into consideration the necessity for its adoption), what was a fair remuneration for the labour and skill employed. No costs at all should be inflicted upon the party who carried his case to a successful issue. The consequence of the practical operation of the opposite principle is not so much the cost of going to law, as the well-known fact, that the gainer of his cause is often a considerable loser; and it is by the operation of this principle that many men prefer sustaining a loss, or submitting to a vexatious wrong, to seeking legal redress in our law courts. The "labourer is surely worthy of his hire," and is it right of the Legislature to say—for the privilege of practising your profession, we shall, for the protection of the public (your employers), throw around you many restrictions and heavy responsibilities? We shall impose upon you a certain amount of stamp-duty, to enable you to enter your profession, and we shall inflict upon you a heavy annual payment so long as you continue in it; but, although we have done this, except by leave of the judge, you shall not be entitled to argue any question as counsel or advocate in the cause; and if as an attorney with such permission you do act for any other person, you shall only have and be entitled to recover therefor,

Where the debt or damage claimed do not exceed 40*s.*	0
Where it does not exceed 5*l.*	10*s.*
Where it exceeds 5*l.* or in other cases within the summary jurisdiction of this Court	15*s.*

I think the profession will re-echo the answer—this is not right! it is great injustice! If this, then, be your feeling, why do you not struggle against this wrong, and by one united and persevering effort get this 75th clause struck from the proposed Bill, and one substituted in its stead, which, without injuring you, will be beneficial to, and approved of by, the public? We know Lord Brougham is no friend of ours—we know the tendency of all his reforms has been to starve the attorneys; and in Lord Campbell, I apprehend, we have quite as little confidence: for we have not forgotten the observations he made on the second reading of the Bill for the Conveyance of Real Property, when, in referring to the abolition of the lease for a year, he said (and which was a gross libel upon the Profession), "He knew the author of that Act was not in good odour with certain members of the Profession, for he had thereby struck a guinea from their bills for preparing the conveyance. His noble and learned friend said that IGNORANT and UNLEARNED persons would fill up this form, BUT IT HAD BEEN FRAMED FOR THAT PURPOSE [hear! from the Lord Chancellor], although he should have no objection, THOUGH CERTAINLY NOT FOR THEIR SAKES, to provide that they should only be prepared by an attorney or conveyancer." We must look to ourselves: let a deputation attend in London and have a communication with official personages, or if that be not expedient, and if it be better (as proposed by Mr. G. E. Williams, of this place) that the clause should be battled in committee, let funds be provided for that purpose: my mite shall be forthcoming, and several professional gentlemen here would also subscribe for the same purpose. The York Law Society has moved, so has the Hull. The country practitioners anxiously look to the Manchester Law Society, and it is hoped they will take the lead and make known their views through your columns; if they did so, we should all know how best to co-operate in carrying out one uniform and consistent plan of operations for our mutual protection, as well as for the safety and protection of our clients.

GRAND JURIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The circulation of the queries of the Criminal Law Commissioners on the subject of criminal procedure, seems to have awakened the Profession to the existence of some defects as well as excrescences in the system, which, but for the hope thus held out of the possibility of their removal, might have been permitted to exist for years to come. From a desire that the favourable moment should not be lost by our apathy, I am induced to call the attention of your readers to the grand jury system, with a view to the full discussion in your columns of its merits and demerits.

My attention has been turned to the subject by a late case at our assizes, in which I was employed for the prosecution.

A man had been committed for trial for a capital offence. The evidence against him was so clear, that I have at this moment no doubt of his guilt. The grand jury, however, ignored the bill,—on what grounds I am unable to conjecture. That they acted conscientiously, it would be idle to doubt; that justice was defeated, I have also no doubt. Where then is the defect?

I think it may be in the fact that there is no one present on behalf of the prosecution to set the evidence fully before the grand jury, who have not even access to the depositions taken before the committing magistrate. When it is considered that the gentlemen of the grand jury are not lawyers, and that witnesses are often timid, ignorant, or unwilling, is it surprising that the grand jury sometimes fail to get a clear insight into the case, and so cannot upon their oath present the party to have committed the crime? A witness too may have been tampered with; he may vary his testimony from that of his written deposition. The grand jury have no means of discovering the falsehood; they meet with an unexplained inconsistency in the evidence, and the bill is ignored. Had the case gone to trial, the variance would have been detected immediately; but who is to discover the falsehood when the jurors are sworn to secrecy, the written depositions are wanting, and each witness is examined apart from the rest?

I think then it will be admitted that the grand jury system is defective; and I would suggest as a remedy that the attorney for the prosecution should be allowed to be present and conduct the case, and that the jury should be furnished with a copy of the depositions.

But a broader question remains,—whether the grand jury system may not with advantage be abolished altogether? I had rather raise the question for others of your readers to discuss, than attempt to settle it myself; but I would venture to give it as my opinion, that after the sifting which a case undergoes before the committing magistrate, assisted by a legal adviser, the evidence being reduced to writing, and the accused party being present and allowed to cross-examine the witnesses, any further preparatory examination is superfluous, even with the improvements I have suggested, and, without them, more likely to defeat than to further the ends of justice.

I have said nothing of the expense that would be saved to the county and to individuals by abolishing the old system, because I think that ought to be a secondary consideration; but if nothing can be said in favour of the continuance of that system, then the pecuniary consideration may be fairly urged as a sufficient reason for the abolition. The sum so saved might be applied to the introduction of other approved measures connected with criminal procedure; as, the appointment of stipendiary chairmen to our Courts of Quarter Sessions—of crown prosecutors—and (I would hope) of counsel for prisoners.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM GILES, Jun.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—This is a subject of world-wide importance. I have bestowed some thought upon it, and have formed a strong opinion concerning it; I therefore deem it prudent to pen a few observations in reply to the letter which appeared in your supplement of the 4th inst. signed, "Wm. Giles, jun."

I was not aware that the advocates for abolishing capital punishments were treated with indifference; for, judging from the manifestations of feeling which I have myself witnessed both in public and private, as well as from other circumstances, I was led to believe those gentlemen had enlisted the sympathies of many intelligent people on their side, and that their principles were gaining favour in proportion to their becoming known. It is true that, in the prosecution of their benevolent labours, they have been dubbed "speculative philanthropists," and, in the same breath, have been informed, with profound assurance, that the practical good sense of the public was treating their efforts with disregard; but there is nothing disheartening in this, for the practical grows out of the speculative, and all the best reforms, whether in the political or scientific world, were conceived, brought forth, and cherished into permanent existence by "speculative" men. As to the public disregard, I suspect those who arrogate to themselves the privilege of representing such a feeling in this matter have about as much authority for so doing as the nine tailors who petitioned the House of Commons had to introduce themselves as "We, the people of England." The truth is, in surveying the megacosm or great world without us, we must look through the microcosm or little world within us: and as the atmospheric medium of the latter is more or less hazy, our view of the former is more or less distinct, and the reflex of it upon our mental retina is all the more or less faithful. Looking at the tardiness of men in prosecuting for capital crimes—the unwillingness of juries to convict—the reluctance of judges to condemn—and the palpitating hesitancy of the executive to carry out the condemnation,—I have no hesitation in saying, he who sees disregard in the features of society with reference to abolishing the punishment of death, looks through a prejudice-dimmed medium indeed.

Sir James Mackintosh laid down another maxim besides that quoted by Mr. Giles. It was that "the proper regulator of punishment is the sympathy of mankind." Does mankind sympathize with capital punishments? I think not, but that there is a growing abhorrence to them throughout the civilized world. It was owing to this that Austria reduced its list of capital crimes to two; that France, under the Code de Napoleon, reduced its list to six, and since then to a smaller number; that America has almost superseded the gallows by the penitentiary system; that Tuscany has practically discontinued capital punishments: that Belgium has abolished them altogether; and that we ourselves have, since Sir James Mackintosh's time, reduced our blood-calendar from two hundred to ten.

Mr. Giles says they who advocate the abolition of capital punishment on the ground of its being inexpedient, should shew its inexpediency. I think the onus lies on the shoulders of their opponents, because they ought to have strong grounds for wishing human butchery to continue; but, notwithstanding that, I have abundant proof at hand that this punishment is inexpedient, and I will now shew forth one which appears, to my thinking, rather a strong one—I say, then, that the exhibition of an execution has a tendency to brutalize the human mind, and to excite into injurious activity the worst passions of our nature; and that, where executions are most frequent, murders and other heinous crimes are most abundant, and vice versâ. Look at Belgium, for instance. In the four years ending in 1804, there were 235 executions, 150 murders, and 203 other capital offences. Thenceforward the Belgian government gradually diminished the list of capital crimes, and, in the four years ending in 1829, there were, consequently, only 22 executions, 34 murders, and 40 other capital offences. Then the government abolished the punishment of death, and in the succeeding four years there were only 20 murders, and 23 other heinous offences. These facts appear in the official returns of the Belgian Chamber of Deputies: I leave them to speak for themselves.

A word or two as to the religious obligation to continue capital punishment. I deny that obligation altogether. The patriarchal law, "He that sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," was pronounced before Moses' time, and it was in existence when that great reformer slew an Egyptian and "hid the body in the sands." Was Moses' blood shed for his? No: we are told he afterwards became the favoured high-priest of God, who is said to have honoured him with his personal presence. But Moses afterwards pronounced another law, corroborative of the patriarchal one—"Moreover ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, who is guilty of death, but he shall assuredly be put to death," &c. Therefore, it is said, we are bound in obedience to Scripture to put murderers to death. I beg to ask, why we feel ourselves bound by this law and not by other Mosaic laws which were pronounced with equal solemnity? "If a man have a stubborn and rebellious son, which will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother, and that, when they have chastened him, will not hearken unto them; then shall his father and his mother lay hold on him, and bring him out unto the elders of his city, and unto the gate of his place, and they shall say 'This our son is stubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice; he is a glutton and a drunkard:' and all the men of his city shall stone him with stones that he die. So shall you put away evil from among you." Again: "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." Now, I call on those who uphold capital punishment by the Mosaic law to be consistent. I call on them to bring in a Bill for extending the punishment to stubborn children and witches. If they will not do this—if they will recoil with horror from the butchery of their wayward offspring—if they will start appalled when Zachary Gray, the editor of Hudibras, tells them in England alone, during the Long Parliament, four thousand of our countrymen and women were slaughtered for witchcraft—when they read in Barrington's Observations on the Statute of Henry V. that, altogether, thirty thousand of our countrymen and women met a similar fate for the same imaginary offence; and when they read in the Foreign Quarterly Review that, in Germany alone, one hundred thousand of our fellow-creatures have answered the charge of witchcraft with their lives—if, I say, these barbarous atrocities horrify and appal them, let them say no more about the Mosaic law against murder, for those against stubborn children and witches are as binding as that, and they cannot be allowed to pick and choose which they will obey and which resist.

But Mr. Giles says, Christianity sanctions capital punishment, and quotes a somewhat equivocal passage from St. Paul to prove it. To my thinking, the gentle spirit of the divine man of Judea was so diametrically opposed to the barbarities of bloodshed, judicial or otherwise, that had he never expressed, by word or deed, an opinion on the subject, we should have abundant reason for knowing how he regarded it. What said he to the scribes and pharisees who brought to him the woman taken in adultery, a crime which, according to the Mosaic law, was capital? "Let the law be fulfilled! away with her and stone her till she die!"? No, quite the contrary of that—"He that is without sin among you, let him cast a stone at her!"

One word more before leaving this part of the subject. I conscientiously think a religious man should be the last to vindicate the punishment of death; the Mosaic law and all the stray dicta which may be scattered amongst the apostolic records to the contrary notwithstanding. We are taught to believe in an eternal hell, where the souls of dead men, who have passed the probationary term of life in disaccordance with the Christian creed, will be kept in dreadful torment for ever. By what authority dare we cut short the repenting season of a sinful fellow-being, and so jeopardize his eternal happiness? Oh, but it is answered, our holy church sends her chaplains to the condemned cell—they read our sacred Bible to the doomed prisoner—they pray with and exhort him to repentance—and they strive to make the scaffold an entrance-gate to paradise and heaven. Now, mark this! The good endeavour of the chaplains is either successful or unsuccessful. If unsuccessful, the culprit dies in his sins; and what a terrible injustice are we guilty of, who, for a finite offence, consign him to an infinite punishment! If successful, the culprit becomes a reformed man, purified from sin, fitted to reign for ever amidst the spirits of the just made perfect. Why, then, should we put him to an ignominious death? If fit to reign in heaven, a companion for saints, is he not fit to dwell on this poor earth of ours a companion for his fellow-men? This is an argument which I put with triumphant confidence before religious advocates of the punishment of death.

I shall say no more, except that I am glad you, as the organ of the Profession, have so emphatically stated your disapprobation of judicial slaughter, and that I trust your sentiments will be echoed, sooner or later, by the whole body of your numerous readers.

I am, Sir, your very obedient servant,

EDW. FRAS. SLACK.

THE CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The delay of my newsman in not delivering my copy of the LAW TIMES until this morning, has prevented my noticing sooner your quotation of an imperfect report of a case at the Central Criminal Court from the Times, unaccompanied by the correction which appeared in a subsequent number of that paper. Feeling that you would not only not work an injury to a professional brother undeservedly, but would rather rejoice at his escape from any imputation of impropriety, I now trouble you with the facts which do not appear in your journal. I attended the examination of Mary Ann Goblyns and Mary Pettigrew, at the request of the daughter of the former, who had authority from her mother to do every thing necessary for the defence of herself and mother, the latter prisoner. I appeared on the trial also, on the instructions of the daughter. The person who alleged that he had authority to act on behalf of the prisoners not only had none, but was expressly forbid to interfere by the daughter, who called at his employer's office to intimate her disapproval of his conduct, in endeavouring to force his services on her. No gentleman was ever retained by the daughter's consent but myself, nor do I believe, from her information, that the clerk above alluded to at any time had the means of retaining another. Receiving a brief to defend a prisoner without the intervention of an attorney is, I am told, perfectly regular. With regard to the mention of Mr. Wilkins' name by Mary Goblyns (not both prisoners), this was in pursuance of a whisper of the clerk to the unfortunate prisoner, when probably scarcely knowing what she said, as she had spoken to me at the police court.

And now, Sir, in conclusion, allow me to remark, that no one practising at the Central Criminal Court has done more to put an end to various unfair practices in it at a heavy sacrifice, involving perhaps a little reputation, from the hostility excited by my endeavours, than myself. I can appeal to proofs to support this assertion. If a fair and equitable system were adopted to regulate the practice, it would improve; but this is impossible while every exertion is made to confine the business within certain channels. Every member of the Bar who has attended this Court will understand my allusion.

I remain, Sir, yours very obediently,

S. C. HORRY.

COUNTY COURTS BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The supporters of the 75th clause should answer the following question:—Are attorneys useless and injurious to the community, or are they not? If they are, why allow them to exist, or why appoint them as judges? If they are, although they have a station in society, and a character to lose, of what class will be those "agents" who are to prowl about the County Courts, conscious that they are looked down upon by all, and therefore most ready to act according to the bad character they already possess, rightly or wrongly? You know the proverb, "Give a dog," &c. If they are not, why should the poor man—he who claims or is called upon to pay a less sum than 15*l*., as much to him as 1,500*l*. or 15,000*l*. to Sir James Graham—be deprived of that assistance which Sir James himself would be eager enough to employ for himself? I leave them in the horns of this dilemma; and that the County Courts Bill may not pass until they have extricated themselves, is the earnest wish of

Your obedient servant,

SATURDAY, MAY 25, 1844.

THE APPENDIX.

THE first part of the Appendix announced last week will be published on Monday next. It will contain—

I. Analysis of the Criminal Returns of the last Year.
II. The last Report of the Tithe Commissioners.
III. Criminal Statistics of the Metropolis.
IV. Lord Brougham's Speech on the Introduction of the Bill Codifying the Criminal Law.
V. The commencement of the Criminal Law Consolidation Bill.

Perhaps it is necessary to repeat, that the purpose of this Appendix is to give to the Profession the documents relating to the law, whose length forbids their insertion in the miscellaneous columns of the LAW TIMES. As the APPENDIX will be separately paged and indexed, to be bound with the volumes or otherwise at pleasure, it will be entirely at the option of the subscribers to the LAW TIMES whether they will take it.

It is on the presumption that its contents may interest only a portion of our readers that the price is named at One Shilling for the part of sixteen pages, containing no advertisements. But we desire it to be expressly understood, that this charge will be reduced to ninepence should there be a sufficient number of purchasers to defray the expenses, the reader being aware, we presume, that it costs very nearly as much to print 500 as 1000 copies; and that, therefore, the price must be regulated by the extent of sale. As this Appendix is designed merely for the accommodation of a portion of our subscribers, to supply them in a cheap form, convenient for preservation and reference, with valuable documents they cannot otherwise procure without much difficulty, it will be sufficient if the price and the sale secure the Publisher from loss: the one, therefore, must be regulated by the other.

Those who purpose taking the Appendix should send their orders immediately, as only a limited number of copies have been printed.

THE VERULAM SOCIETY.

The arrangements are completed, and the first number of the PRACTICAL REPORTS is passing through the press. It will consist entirely of BITTLESTONE'S and SYMONS'S Reports of MAGISTRATES' CASES of the last Term. The PRACTICE CASES and the REAL PROPERTY CASES will date from the beginning of the present Term.

The purpose of this publication is to supply the Profession with full and authentic reports of the cases most required in practice, and which they can now only procure by purchasing the costly reports in which they appear, rari nantes in gurgite vasto, and in a compass convenient for carriage which is almost as important to the practitioner as cheapness.

For instance; at present, to procure the Magistrates' Cases (which almost every common-law Barrister and every country attorney must possess), the Law Journal must be taken at an expense of 4*l*. per annum: to obtain the Practice Cases, equally essential to the practitioner, either all the reports must be taken at a cost of some 10*l*. per annum, or Dowling, at a cost of 2*l*. per annum. To procure the Real Property Cases, so necessary to every solicitor who has any conveyancing business, (and who has not?) he must take the five Equity Reports at a cost of some 8*l*. per annum; and to obtain the no less needful Crown Cases and Nisi Prius Reports, there is no help for it but to buy Carrington and Kirwan at 12s. for each part: making a total cost of about 20*l*. per annum, besides lumbering the library with a huge mass of cases he does not want, to procure the few he does require.

The design of the PRACTICAL REPORTS of the VERULAM SOCIETY, is to remedy this grievous inconvenience, and to give to the Profession, at a cost of some 10s. or 12s. per annum, and in the compass of one convenient volume, those cases, and only those, which are most required in practice, and which they can now only obtain at a cost of 20*l*. per annum, and buried among a load of uninteresting reports to which they have seldom or never need to refer; and further, that they may be enabled to carry the cases they will want in the Courts in their coat-pockets, instead of being, as now, compelled to choose between a citation from memory or the loan of a van to take them to the assizes, sessions, or magistrates' meetings.

Should this first adventure of the Society be found to give satisfaction and receive support, it is probable that the grand and ultimate scheme of a complete report of all the cases in all the Courts, at like trifling cost, may be attempted; but this undertaking would be too large until our numbers shall have quadrupled.

It has been determined that, after Midsummer, when the first risk has been incurred, the entrance-fee shall be increased to One Guinea. The members should make this known to their friends who hesitate and wait to see if it will succeed before they join—a class of whom, we hear, there are some hundreds.

Only members are needed now to enable the plan to be carried out in its entirety. The numbers at present enrolled are 378. Six hundred will enable us to continue the reports without loss. One thousand will justify the publication of the complete reports of all the Courts. Fifteen hundred will permit us to undertake some of the more costly of the text-books announced in the prospectus.

It will be hard indeed if a Profession, comprising nearly 20,000 members, should not yield 1,500 supporters of a design admitted by all to be so desirable, and the benefits of which themselves will reap.

THE COUNTY COURTS BILL.

To bring justice to every man's door are words of high promise—flattering claptraps wherewith to catch the unwary—and, accordingly, session after session, have Bills been brought into Parliament under the various titles of Local Courts Bills and County Courts Bills, and session after session have they met the fate they deserved, till at length a Government, priding itself on its strength, has brought forward one which, unless vigorous resistance be offered to it, will pass, under its auspices, into a law. The present County Courts Bill, no less than its predecessors, has been framed in ignorance of human nature, and [illegible] contempt of the recorded evils of cheap litigation, and the express opinions of the Common-Law Commissioners. An examination of the Bill will shew most clearly its false principles and defective details. It may, indeed, be called a Bill for the promotion of quarrelling, the establishment and protection of pettifoggers, the dissemination of cheap injustice, the encouragement of perjury, and the unlimited increase of debtors' prisons, and—snug places for ministerial protégés. With our blood still boiling at the injustice and systematic plunder effected by the Chancery compensation job, we look with dismay at the powers given by secs. 1, 2, 3, to the Government to establish new courts, when, where, and in what number they please—each with its staff of judge or judges, treasurer, clerk, and bailiffs, and the cheap appurtenances of a court-house and prison for the victims of the new system of imprisonment for debt; and should the fee fund be insufficient for these expenses, the Consolidated Fund—the John Bull of the inn-sign—will pay for all.

Can such a proposition be tolerated, when the courts of the Quarter Sessions present a ready organized machinery, which but a very slight modification might fit for carrying into effect all that is desirable, in perfect harmony with the other parts of our system of jurisprudence? And care has been taken that these places shall be worth having. The clerks (sec. 11) are to have the sole monopoly of issuing all summonses, with warrants, precepts, and writs of execution, contrary to the existing practice in every other court of the land, and will thus have every facility for exacting irregular fees, which, after being hallowed by a few years' usage, will, according to existing practice, entitle them to compensation. The bailiffs, too, are to have the same monopoly in the service as the clerks in the issuing of the writs, &c. (secs. 15, 68). These clauses are merely the application of the false and pernicious principle of the 75th section. This clause alone nullifies every good point in the Bill, and envenoms every bad one with tenfold poison. The Common-law Commissioners, after collecting a mass of opinions upon the subject, gave it as their deliberate judgment, "that even where the demand does not exceed 5*l*. in amount, professional aid ought not to be excluded."(a) In France, at the commencement of the revolution, it was tried, as our conservative Government would fain try, to deprive the suitor of legal assistance, and instantly there sprang into existence a swarm of the vilest and most worthless practitioners, who, without character to lose or station to support, plundered and duped all who from weakness or want of confidence in themselves employed them as agents. In Ireland, the warrants of the Manor Courts are only signed by the presiding officer. Mr. O'Connell, on such a subject the most authoritative witness, after speaking of the murders and acts of violence committed in the execution of the decrees of those courts, in consequence of the frequent injustice perpetrated by them, added, "there is something more in the Civil Bill decree, for the sheriff must sign that decree, and there is an attorney upon it, who, though Civil Bill attorneys do not rank so high as the others, yet he has a character to lose, and will be cautious."(b)

But we will pursue this subject a little more at length. By sec. 59, no evidence is to be given by the plaintiff, except of such demand or cause of action as shall be named in the summons. So that in fact the plaintiff is to draw his own declaration. And who are these plaintiffs? Poor men—ignorant men, women, and any child old enough to earn wages (sec. 49)! What the causes of action? Any debt or damage arising out of any express or implied agreement, or claim to recover possession or value of any goods or chattels unlawfully taken or kept, and where the debt or damage or value of the goods claimed is not more than 15*l*. This is indeed a monstrous application of the pleasant fiction, that all men are acquainted with the whole statute and common law of England, even more familiarly than with the alphabet.

But let us go one step further. Not only must they know how to state their claim legally, but they must know all the rules of evidence—must issue the subpœnas—must understand the true meaning of the multitudinous rules of Court which are to be framed by three judges of the County Courts; and, for any case not expressly provided for therein, the general principles of practice in the superior courts of common law, that they may argue and dispute with the judges, "who are to adopt and apply these principles at their discretion." Then, again, imagine the scenes at the trial: the barrister or the attorney, who has been rewarded for electioneering services with a judgeship, sits enthroned amid his bailiffs and dependents, and in the absence of any Bar to control his passions or inform his ignorance, revels in the enjoyment of unrestrained power, and favours or annoys according to the temper of the moment, and the station, age, sex, and character of the suitor; and in this court of cheap justice should we see him—

> Play such fantastic tricks before high Heaven
> As make the angels weep."

Then, indeed, the suitor, with the fear of a committal for contempt, or being saddled with such costs as the judge might think proper, would bitterly rue the boon of cheap injustice, nor like it the better because it was close to his own door. A moment's reflection upon human nature will convince every one that this picture would not be found to be overdrawn. Let it be remembered, too, that the courts are to sit at least once a month (sec. 42); and what barrister in good practice would accept such a post? and who, feeling his own incompetency, or loving indolence, would be induced to open his court to those who were both able and willing to prove him wrong? But this abuse of power is rendered still more probable, nay inevitable, by sec. 9, which allows an attorney-judge to practise at the same time as a solicitor and conveyancer. The country squire, the wealthy landlord, the actual or prospective client in Chancery, are thus invited to bribe the County Courts Judge to favouritism, and the poor man deprived of what has long been England's pride, a tribunal, not only independent, but above the reach even of suspicion. Is justice to be measured by the amount of the sum in dispute? The establishment of such tribunals as these will be the downfal of our national character, since uprightness and honour cannot exist where the court of justice are changed into an arena for the undisturbed display of political partisanship, or interested and time-serving motives. We will only suggest what a wide field will be opened to a new system of electioneering tactics, by compulsory personal attendance.

But mark the further injustice of this enactment upon the poor man. The rich can and will employ the attorney or counsel to advise him out of court; the poor man, however just his claim or defence, cannot do so, because even success will leave him a loser. What engines of oppression may these courts thus become! And of all oppression, that under the guise of justice is the most willingly adopted, and most pernicious to the community. This, however, is not the only portion of the Act calculated to injure the poor and offer a premium to the rich. By sec. 18, all fees are in the first place to be paid by the plaintiff: he must deposit 5 per cent. of his claim for the fee fund, and if he claim a jury he must make a still further deposit; he must, as it appears by sec. 68, employ a bailiff of the court to summon the witnesses and pay his fees in advance, and this must be done in utter uncertainty how much costs the judge in his discretion, under sec. 71, may award to him in case of success. Look at his position as defendant. He may well be summoned in two places at one and the same time. How can he appear in both places? It is true, by sec. 62, he may appear by an agent, not an attorney, but by sec. 75 and sec. 62, it appears that that agent can in no case be entitled to any remuneration. He may not have any friend who can appear for him, and of what avail then is sec. 64, which empowers the judge to give time? He cannot even make the clerk his agent to excuse his absence (sec. 13); and, we presume, it is not intended that he should enter into a correspondence with the judge; and consequently he is at the mercy of any rogue or enemy that with or without a claim may be willing to pursue this course. The clever rogue would, especially where a debt had once existed, secure himself against any perjury with the greatest ease, and obtain judgment by default, and issue execution forthwith. But perhaps this is provided against? It is, in a way most satisfactory to the persecuted defendant—upon paying the costs of the first trial, and giving security for the costs of the second, he may have a new trial, if the judge shall think fit. (Sec. 63.) What is this but a premium to fraud and oppression? But there is still another clause added for this kind purpose. The 73rd sec. which gives an appeal to the superior courts, excludes it after execution levied. Nor is this all. The jurisdiction is so wide, that in numerous instances this double citation may occur, even without any scheme; for he may be summoned in any court, for "any district in which the cause of action shall have arisen, or in which the defendant shall dwell or carry on his business at the time of the action brought, or shall have dwelt or carried on his business at some time within six calendar months next before the time of the action brought." Words accurate and clear!—"shall have dwelt or carried on his business at some time." Did the framers of this Act ever refer to the numerous questions upon the London Court of Requests Act, as to "residence" and "seeking a livelihood?"

We will now consider a moment the position of the rich man under this Act. Are the peers and country gentlemen who "dwell" in town, or at some fashionable watering-place for the season, aware, that by virtue of this clause they may be summoned from one end of England to the other for any real or fictitious claim, and must appear in person, or by some agent, not an attorney, at the risk of judgment by default? Are they aware how easy service may be sworn to without their ever having heard any thing about it? That delivery of the summonses to "any servant or inmate at their usual place of abode," would suffice, without any explanation given at the time, and even if they are absent from home? Do merchants know this? Do those at whose "place of trading or dealing," twenty, thirty, or forty persons live, know that service on any one of these would suffice? Do lodging-house keepers know that they are at the mercy of their lodgers? Surely not; else no one would be anxious to save the County Courts Bill from its merited condemnation.

Again, what will the occupiers of tenements at 8*s*. a week (20*l*. a year) say to the power given to their landlords to proceed under this Act for the purpose of ejecting them at the close of their tenancy? And here we cannot but remark that a distinct power is given in sec. 103 to the agent of the landlord to enter the plaints. Is not this one law for the poor and another for the rich? The County Courts Bill will be a firebrand in every town and hamlet throughout the country; multiply unjust claims; legalize, and therefore in the eyes of numbers justify, a law-suit for the merest trifle, and the persecution of the smallest debtor. Every ill feeling between the parties will be embittered by their personal contact in the proceedings, and appearance as witnesses in their own cause, with their wives to support them, and bandy sweet words with feminine grace and volubility. The numerous instances of unjust claims or defences being successful will produce a baneful habit of suspicion. No man will be safe who pays even the smallest debt without taking a receipt or having a witness. Perjury will grow up as the favourite of the law. The County Courts will be rogues' paradise. Athens was demoralized by the spirit of never-ceasing litigation; and of the Civil Bill Courts' system in Ireland, in some respects less objectionable than the County Courts, for attorneys of some kind are allowed, Mr. O'Connell said, "I am, in my conscience, thoroughly convinced that if a society were instituted to discourage virtue and countenance vice, it would have been ingenious indeed, if it had discovered such a system as the Assistant Barristers' Court." (a) And is this what the country needs in the name of Law Reform? Yet, remember, that let the County Courts Bill pass, and every other plan of amendment will be weighed to the ground by the incubus of County Courts compensation.

Many of the evils with which this Bill is pregnant would be prevented or greatly lessened by the 75th section being struck out; but there are yet other and weighty objections to it. The enormous power in the hands of the judge, the virtual abolition of juries in suits for sums less than 5*l*., the substitution of a jury of five whose verdict is to be that of the majority, the re-establishment of the general issue system, are essential faults in the principles of the Bill. There are also numerous defects in the details, of which we will point out a few.

Secs. 2 and 3 empower her Majesty in Council to alter the local extent of the jurisdiction of each court as often as it may be thought fit—so that creditors must be always perusing the London Gazette, to ascertain whether they can sue in the local or in the superior court. Moreover, by sec. 42, no other notice is required of any alteration in the time of holding the court than a notice put up in some conspicuous part of the court-house and in the clerk's office; and no period is fixed for giving such notice.

The regulations as to service of the summons have already been commented upon, and cannot be too much reprobated. We will only here remark that summonses to witnesses may be served either personally or by being left at the usual place of abode; but payment or tender of the expenses must be made at the same time (sec. 69); the meaning of which we leave to the framers of the Bill to explain —if they can. Perhaps, as we are no longer to be indulged with professional learning, it will be discovered that, under the new system, tender to any inmate of the witness's house will suffice; and should any audacious wight suggest that the laws of England and common sense are outraged, he will receive for reply—Nous avons changé tout cela.

In sec. 68 it is said, these summonses are to be served "by one of the bailiffs of the court;" and as sec. 47 provides for service out of the jurisdiction of one County Court but within that of another, we understand this is to be compulsory. We should therefore like to know how service is to be effected in districts not blessed with a County Court, which, as this Act is only to be applied by degrees, will frequently be necessary. It is not provided for by sec. 47, or at least if it be, there will be this monstrous anomaly, that an officer of a court will act as such officer out of the jurisdiction of the court to which he belongs.

Sec. 72 secures the finality of the judge's decisions by a curious method, for it enacts, that the judge may, upon application to him at the next court after the trial or otherwise, order a new trial upon such terms as he may think fit. This—like the et cetera oath — may mean any thing and every thing. The habitual carelessness with which Acts of Parliament are drawn, may be illustrated by comparison of sections 98 and 110, with reference to certificates as to costs. The former requires the judge to certify in court, the latter mentions no time or place for the certificate to be given. Why this want of uniformity? Both, however, agree in omitting all provisions as to costs in cases of judgment on demurrer; and both omit to provide for cases tried before the sheriff; for it is a well-known rule that the word judge only means a judge of the superior court. Surely it would not have been too much to expect a Bill of this kind to have been drawn with some knowledge of the decisions on similar statutes.

We hasten to the conclusion of this notice of a most pernicious measure, by announcing that the "sum totle of the whole," the ultimate result of this "Cheap Law Delivery Bill," will be to fill the prisons, old and new, throughout the country, to overflowing with unhappy debtors. Is it credible, that in the year of grace eighteen hundred and forty-four a law can be passed not only authorizing imprisonment for the smallest sums, but enacting that the term of imprisonment shall in no case be less than twenty days? Twenty days' imprisonment for a debt of one shilling, or one penny!!

We give the clause verbatim:—

"No person shall remain in custody under any warrant against the body issued under this Act, longer than twenty days for any sum not greater than twenty shillings; or longer than one day for every entire shilling contained in the sum mentioned in the warrant, when such sum is greater than twenty shillings; and the term of imprisonment shall be in each case determined by the judge, not being in any case less than twenty days, and shall be expressed in the warrant."

So that, for fifteen pounds and costs, the term of imprisonment would probably be twelve months.

What joyful news to all who love persecution! Give credit to a poor man for a few shillings, choose your opportunity, summon him, obtain judgment, and glut your evil passions by consigning him to a gaol for twenty days! Such is, in fact, the Christian doctrine of Sir James Graham's County Courts Bill. If any body can doubt that it would be readily put into practice, we refer them to the return presented to the House of Commons in 1836, of the number of persons imprisoned in Ireland under the Civil Bill decrees during the preceding five years, from which it appears that nearly fifteen thousand had been sufferers during that time. But we hope and believe that this Bill cannot pass. It is a mere mockery. Not the omnipotence of Parliament can make cheap litigation and speedy injustice a boon to any—no, not even to the poorest man.

LECTURE VII.

In a recent case, in which the language of Lord Denman is important, it was decided that no amendment would be allowed in a writ of summons (Roberts v. Bates and Robins, 6 A. & E. 778). This was an action against the two defendants, to recover a sum of money deposited in their hands as bankers. The two defendants pleaded the non-joinder of a third partner. In the mean while, the time allowed by the Statute of Limitations had expired, and the plaintiff, if he failed in the action, could not begin again. The action was commenced against two, whereas the plaintiff ought to have sued all three; and the effect of the defendant's plea was to abate the action already commenced. The plaintiff might, under ordinary circumstances, have commenced a fresh action against the three; but in this case he could not do so, because, at the time when the first action abated, the six years had expired. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff applied to the Court to be allowed to amend the original writ of summons, by inserting the name of the third partner. The argument was this: "It is very hard that we should be deprived of our legal remedy on a technical point: under ordinary circumstances we should be enabled to commence a fresh action against the three; in the present case, as we cannot commence a fresh action against the three, allow us to do this instead: allow us, on paying the other party the costs, to amend our writ, by inserting the third partner, so as to put us in the same situation as if we had procured a new writ;" a similar amendment had been allowed in ——— v. Watson (4 Tyrrwhitt, 839).

This decision seems to go to the effect, that the writ cannot, under any circumstances, be amended. The Court of Exchequer, however, has not acted upon this rule, and the courts in similar cases have recently shewn a disposition to allow writs to be amended in cases where the claims would otherwise be defeated by the Statute of Limitations. See Eccles v. Cole (8 M. & W. 537); and a still more recent case, Bilton v. Clapperton (9 M. & W. 477), where it was laid down, that in general leave to amend will not be allowed where the sole object is to save costs. If a man has made a blunder, and the other party moves to set aside the proceedings for irregularity, the mere fact of its being expensive to the party who made the blunder will be no ground for not setting it aside; but he would be allowed to amend it in cases where otherwise the party would be deprived of his remedy altogether, as where the Statute of Limitations would operate to defeat his claim, or, under other circumstances, where, incidentally, he would be materially damaged in his cause.

We have seen that if the plaintiff succeeds in serving the defendant with a writ of summons, the defendant is thereby required to enter an appearance in court within eight days from the time of the service; and if he fails to do so the plaintiff may enter an appearance for him, and proceed in the action. If the plaintiff is unable to serve the defendant with the writ of summons within four months, he may sue out another or alias writ of summons, which, like the first, is in operation for four months; and if that is unavailing he may sue out another or pluries writ. If the defendant happens to be in a different county from that mentioned in the first writ of summons, the second writ is addressed to C.D. of ——, late of such and such a place, in the county of ——. An alias or pluries writ may be sued out merely to enforce the appearance of the defendant; but it is more frequently resorted to, to avoid the effect of the Statute of Limitations. For instance, if an action is brought for the recovery of a debt, and is not commenced within six years, the defendant may defeat it by relying on the Statute of Limitations; and when the action is commenced towards the expiration of the six years, if the defendant cannot be served within the four months during which the writ of summons is in force, it might happen that the plaintiff would be unable to enforce his claim at all. Suppose, for instance, that the action is commenced three months before the expiration of the six years, the action being once commenced before the expiration of the six years justifies all proceedings being taken to execution. There is one month during which the writ is in force after the expiration of the six years; if he can be served within that month, the action proceeds; if he cannot be served within that month, no new action could be commenced. Unless you can proceed with the action already commenced, your remedy is gone; for if a second action were commenced after the expiration of the six years, it would be defeated by a plea of the Statute of Limitations. In order to prevent the operation of the Statute, the plaintiff may continue the original action, by suing out an alias writ of summons. The first writ must be returned non est inventus, and entered of record within a month after its expiration; and also the second or other subsequent writ must be issued within one calendar month after the expiration of the preceding writ, and every alias writ must contain a memorandum shewing the date and return of the first writ. The object of this is to put some limit to the power of extending the period of limitation. The service of the writ may be made by the attorney of the plaintiff: the writ not being directed to the sheriff, as was formerly the case, may be served by the plaintiff himself or any other individual, and the return may be made on his authority or that of his attorney.

But an alias writ of summons is not the only mode of proceeding. If the defendant keeps out of the way in order to prevent being served with the writ of summons, and cannot be compelled to appear, the plaintiff may apply for a writ of distringas —a writ directed to the sheriff, requiring him to distrain on the goods and chattels of the defendant for the sum of forty shillings, in order to compel an appearance. To this writ a memorandum is subscribed, requiring the defendant to take notice that in default of his appearance within eight days after the return of the writ, the plaintiff may cause an appearance to be entered for him. A writ of distringas cannot be obtained as a mere matter of course, like a writ of summons. In order to obtain a writ of distringas, the plaintiff must apply to the Court, or, in vacation, to a judge: he must shew by affidavit such circumstances as will satisfy the Court or judge that the defendant kept purposely out of the way. What is usually required in practice is, that the plaintiff should shew that there were three attempts, at least, to serve the defendant with the writ of summons by calling at his place of abode; and that on the two first calls notice was given to the person seen in the house of the nature of the business, and an appointment made to call again; and that on the last call a copy of the writ of summons was left at his residence. (See Street v. Lord Alvanley, 3 Tyr. 162.) The object of leaving the writ of summons, on the third call, at the house of the defendant is, in order that he may not be misled as to the time in which he may appear; he is to have eight days from the time of the service of the writ of summons; the service is not complete till the third call, and for this reason, eight days must elapse from the last call before the distringas can issue. The writ of distringas may be issued in vacation, but it must be made returnable on some day in term, not less than fifteen days after the teste thereof. The writ is delivered to the sheriff, and he gives a warrant for the execution of it. The distringas is executed by distraining on the goods and chattels of the defendant to the amount of forty shillings, and the writ, or a copy thereof, must be served on the defendant, if he can be met with, but if not, it is left at the place where the writ is executed,—where the goods are distrained. If the sheriff return that he has levied forty shillings, and that the writ has been executed, and the defendant does not enter an appearance within eight days, inclusive, after the return, the plaintiff may enter an appearance for him, as a matter of course, without applying for the leave of the Court; but if the sheriff is unable to execute the writ, he returns non est inventus and nulla bona; on which the plaintiff may apply to the Court, or in vacation to a judge, for leave to enter an appearance for the defendant. (See Cornish v. King, 3 Tyr. 575.) This application will only be granted where all the proper means have been taken to sue out and execute the writ of distringas, and the application is rarely granted except in cases where it appears, from the facts set forth in the affidavits, that the defendant has endeavoured to evade the execution of the distringas. If a man have no house that can be called his own, and you can shew that he dodges about from place to place to avoid the execution of the distringas, you bring those facts before the Court. Why are those facts supposed to enable the Court to allow the plaintiff to enter an appearance? For this reason, if he can convince the Court that the defendant knows of the proceeding which has been taken against him, it is not very material whether he has been served or not; if you can shew that he puts himself out of reach in order to avoid being served, it is pretty clear that he knows service is to be made, and that he is aware of the proceedings taken against him. When permission has been thus obtained, the plaintiff may enter an appearance for the defendant, though he has not been actually served with any process whatever. This is the only case in which it can be done. This power of proceeding against the defendant behind his back, is one that requires to be exercised with great caution, and can be exercised with propriety in those cases only where the defendant actually knows of the proceeding, and obstinately refuses to take notice of it.

There are two more modes of proceeding, more stringent than the execution of a writ of distringas: one is by arrest, where there is a reasonable expectation that the defendant is going to quit the country; and the other is by outlawry. Outlawry was originally followed only on a writ of capias, but the general proceeding is now by distringas.

The law of arrest—the power by which a private individual, upon a certain complaint against another, has power to cast him into prison—has undergone great alterations from time to time; and the history of the law of arrest is such that it would appear to throw light, in an historical point of view, on the state of society in England, during the transmutations it has undergone. Originally, it was confined to cases where an offence had been committed against the king's peace. Where a man had committed any act against the king's peace, any trespass vi et armis, that person might be taken into custody. This power was afterwards extended to other cases by statute. It was extended, first of all, to actions of account, which were at that time chiefly actions by the feudal lords against their bailiffs, whom they were thus empowered to imprison till an account was rendered. After this it became extended to actions of debt, and by the statues of 19 Hen. 7, c. 9, and 14 Hen. 8, it was extended to almost all actions. Besides which, the power of arresting was exercised, by virtue of divers fictions of the courts, in almost every form of action; so that ultimately the power of arrest was exercised independently of the sanction that was given to it by Parliament. For instance, in the King's Bench the plaintiff sued out a Bill of Middlesex, or latitat, with an ac etiam clause. The writ alleged a trespass, and also, ac etiam, a debt. The writ being in point of form for a trespass, the defendant was at common law liable to be arrested; and when he was arrested for the supposed trespass, the plaintiff proceeded against him for the debt. A similar course was adopted in the Court of Common Pleas. In the Exchequer, by the fiction of complaining that the plaintiff was a debtor to the Crown, and that the defendant detained from him a certain sum, whereby the plaintiff was less able to satisfy the Crown, the prerogative of the Crown came to the assistance of the plaintiff, and he was entitled to a quo minus, whereby he was enabled to arrest the defendant; so that partly by statute, partly by the fictitious process of the courts, the defendant might be arrested in any action, whatever the form of action, and at one time, whatever the amount.

The objects of an arrest were two: to compel the appearance of the defendant, and to secure the execution of the judgment. We have seen that until defendant had appeared in court, the plaintiff could not proceed to declare against him, the defendant being at large, and there being at common law no power to enter an appearance. The primary object was to compel an appearance, which was done by securing his person, ready to be produced in court; but in order to secure the second object, which was, that the plaintiff should be secured of his execution, the person arrested was not allowed to enter an appearance simply, as in cases where serviceable process had been used. He was not allowed to say, C D appears, simply; his appearance was not deemed perfect unless the second object was secured. If he remained in custody, that object was obtained. But he might be bailed, and the original doctrine of bail is this: a person being arrested, the sheriff is required by an ancient Act of Parliament to accept bail for his appearance, and the bail were usually two persons, who entered into a bond with the sheriff, the condition of which was that the defendant should appear. If the defendant appeared, well; but if he did not appear, then other steps were to be taken, either against the bail or the sheriff. Now, what is the appearance of the defendant? The appearance of the defendant when he was arrested was not simply that he should enter an appearance, but that he should find bail to the action; and the bail to the action were persons who entered into a recognizance, the condition of which was, that if judgment passed against the defendant he should either satisfy the debt or damages, together with the costs, or render himself to prison; that is to say, that the plaintiff should have execution against the defendant. And if he did not, if he was unable to have execution against the defendant, then he came on the bail. These are called special bail. Afterwards other steps were taken. Sometimes there is an inconvenience in finding, at a moment's notice, two men of responsibility to be bail for the defendant; and the 43 Geo. 3 enacted, that if a man is arrested, instead of being obliged to find bail, he may deposit with the sheriff the amount that is claimed of him, together with 10*l.* for costs, to be repaid to him on his appearing and putting in special bail. This was afterwards followed by another provision, contained in the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 71, whereby a substitute was allowed for the special bail. The defendant is thereby enabled, instead of putting in special bail, to deposit the sum claimed, together with 20*l.* for costs. Formerly, where the person of the defendant was arrested for a small sum, he was allowed to give merely nominal bail; and afterwards, in actions under 10*l.* subsequently raised to 20*l.* real bail could not be taken, unless by leave of a judge: this was by the statute of 12 Geo. 1. That statute enacted that no arrest should take place when the cause of action was under 10*l.*; nevertheless, the writ of capias, the Bill of Middlesex, the latitat, and the writ of quo minus, the writs of each court by which the person might be arrested, continued to be the ordinary writs by which the action was commenced. If the cause of action was not a debt of 10*l.* (which was made 20*l.* afterwards), the defendant could not be arrested or held to special bail; the service was, in effect, a serviceable process, and amounted only to a summons. But, in point of form, the Court of King's Bench required bail to be given in order to perfect the appearance; this was a mere form, and the fictitious persons of John Doe and Richard Roe were deemed sufficient security.

By the Uniformity of Process Act no alteration was made as to the power of arresting; but a considerable alteration was made in the form of proceeding. All the original writs whereby actions were commenced were swept away. If a man was not to be arrested, the action was to be commenced by writ of summons. If the defendant was to be arrested, the action was to be commenced by writ of capias; but the writ of capias, as the commencement of an action, has since been abolished by the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. By that statute the action must be commenced, in all cases, by a writ of summons. One branch of the two modes provided by the Uniformity of Process Act has been cut off, and the other left. Every action must now be commenced by writ of summons, and the defendant can only be arrested when he contemplates quitting England, whether the action be for debt, or for any cause of action in respect of which he might formerly have been arrested under a judge's order. At common law, arrest took place only in cases where damages were sought to be recovered: this was afterwards extended to cases of debt by the operation of the 12 Geo. 1. The power of arrest was, as a general rule, confined to cases of debt. In other cases, the defendant could not be arrested unless by the special order of a judge. By the present statute, if the defendant is about to quit England, he may be arrested, whether the action be for debt, or for any cause of action in respect of which he might have been formerly arrested by a judge's order. The plaintiff may apply to one of the judges for a special order to hold the defendant to bail, and in order to support that application, he must shew a cause of action to the amount of 20*l.* damages sustained to that amount. On probable cause being shewn that the defendant is about to quit England, he may be forthwith apprehended; so that now every action must be commenced by writ of summons; but, under certain circumstances, a capias may issue to secure the person of the defendant. The circumstances under which the capias may issue, are three:—the action must be one in which the defendant was before the Act liable to arrest; secondly, the plaintiff must shew cause of action to the amount of 20*l.* or sustain damages to that amount; thirdly, probable cause being shewn that the defendant is about to quit England. First, if the cause of action was a debt of 20*l.* or upwards, he could be held to bail, under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. This provision has been construed to include all cases where the cause of action arises from a debt or money demand, or where it consists in a claim to recover damages, if this claim can be ascertained by mere calculation. If the cause of action consisted of a claim to recover damages, and the damages are such as cannot be ascertained by mere calculation without the intervention of a jury, the defendant could not be held to bail unless under a special order of the judge. For instance, in an action of trover, the damages will depend on the value of the goods, and cannot be ascertained by mere calculation only, without the intervention of a jury; therefore, in trover, for the recovery of damages, the defendant could not be held to bail as a matter of course—it cannot be done except by virtue of a judge's order. In such a case as this, the capias is not now granted, unless the circumstances are such as would, before the statute, have warranted a judge in making an order to hold the defendant to bail. Under the statute, the application for the capias must be made to a judge for his order, and it must be made on affidavit, showing first a cause of action amounting to 20*l.*; and the affidavit must show a probable cause for believing that the defendant is about to quit England unless forthwith apprehended. (See Bateman v. Dunn, 5 Bing. N.C. 49.) Now, with respect to the nature of absence: here the principle is, that if the defendant is only going out of England for a short time, the case does not come within the statute. This is not such an absence as to compel the defendant to find bail; but if he be going for such a purpose, or the length of time which he will be absent be such that he will not be forthcoming when the plaintiff would, in the ordinary course of proceeding, be entitled by the judgment to have his body in execution, he then has a right to prevent his departure. For instance, in the case of an officer of the army going to join his regiment stationed abroad, the Court allowed a capias to issue. (See Larchin v. Willan, 4 M. & W. 351.) He was going to join his regiment quartered abroad, and he might stay there till long after the judgment was obtained, and his body would not be forthcoming until it was secured by arresting him—that is, detaining the person, or compelling him to find bail. The special order of a judge may be given at any time after the commencement of the action, and before final judgment: it cannot be done before the action has commenced; that is to say, the first proceeding in the action must be the writ of summons; that writ must be in existence. But it is not necessary that any further steps should have been taken. It is not necessary that the writ of summons should have been served on him; provided the writ has been issued, the action has commenced, and the plaintiff may immediately apply for the order of a judge, on which a capias will issue, and he may then serve the defendant with the writ of summons at the same time that the writ of capias is executed on him. The writ of capias remains in force for one calendar month from its date, and during that time the sheriff is required to arrest the defendant; when arrested, the defendant is to be treated in the same manner as a person arrested under former acts. He remains in the custody of the sheriff until he finds bail, or deposits in lieu of bail. A person arrested may apply to the court or a judge to be discharged out of custody. The plaintiff is called upon to shew cause against the application, which application the defendant may support by shewing, by affidavit, that he is not about to quit England, or that the proceedings are irregular. The judge or the Court may either grant or refuse the application, and the matter is left in the discretion of the Court or the judge. If the application is made to a judge, his decision is not final; it may be brought before the Court afterwards.

The writ is directed to the sheriff, requiring him to take the body of the defendant, and safely to keep him to be in court on a certain day, unless, in the mean time, he shall find bail, or deposit in lieu of it, or be otherwise discharged in course of law. On receipt of the writ, the sheriff gives his warrant to a bailiff to execute the writ. This he does by arresting the defendant. In all proceedings under the warrant, the sheriff is answerable for the conduct of his officer, the bailiff. For this reason the sheriff always takes security from the bailiff, in order to indemnify himself from any loss he might incur though his misconduct. The parties being thus placed, if any responsibility occurs, the sheriff immediately comes upon the bailiff; so that, whenever the bailiff misconducts himself, though the action is, in point of form, against the sheriff, in point of fact it is defended by the bailiff, on which a question may probably arise in point of evidence. An action is brought against the sheriff for the misconduct of his bailiff, who has arrested the wrong man, or has neglected to arrest the right man, or has done some wrongful act of which the plaintiff complains. He brings an action against the sheriff; the bailiff is produced as a witness; and it is contended that the bailiff is an incompetent witness by reason of his interest. He would be so at common law; and the question would be, whether he would be made competent by Lord Denman's Act. The words are, "That no plaintiff or defendant named on the record, nor any person on whose immediate and individual behalf the action is brought or defended, shall be admissible." Now it appears that this action is, in point of fact, defended by the bailiff himself; but unless it can be said to be defended in his immediate and individual behalf, his evidence is admissible under the statute.

The arrest is made by actual seizure of the person; but if the defendant who is to be arrested is placed under restraint, actual contact is not necessary. (See Grainger v. Hill, 4 Bing. W.C. 212.) The officer is not justified in breaking the outer door of a house to effect an arrest; but, the outer door being opened, he may break open an inner door; or if the person arrested escapes into the house, the officer may then break open the outer door to retake him. It is the duty of the officer, on the arrest, to deliver a copy of the writ of capias; without this the arrest is not complete. By the 37 Geo. 2, c. 28, the officer, on arresting the defendant, shall not take him to any public-house, or to the officer's house, without his free and voluntary consent; nor take him to gaol within twenty-four hours, unless he refuse to be carried to some convenient house within the same county, not being the house of the defendant himself. But if he refuses to go to such safe and convenient house, he may be carried directly to gaol. If the provisions of the Act are not complied with, the bailiff or the sheriff incurs a forfeiture of 50*l*. It is the duty of the officer to ask any person arrested to nominate a house. Unless he be asked, he cannot be said to have refused, and the officer is not warranted in taking him straight to gaol. There are many cases on this point. Simpson v. R—— (5 B & A. 35); Dewhirst v. Pearson (3 Tyr. 243); Silk v. Humphrey (4 A. & E. 959). This being the state of things, if the defendant remains in custody, the plaintiff has the security of the person of the defendant, and is enabled to retain him in execution. The defendant is required either to give bail to the sheriff, or to deposit in lieu of bail, or in default of both these he remains in custody. If the defendant gives bail to the sheriff, he is required within eight days to put in sufficient bail to the action. The special bail are those who enter into recognizances that, if judgment passes against the defendant, or he does not render himself in execution, they will pay it for him. If the defendant, having given bail to the action, fails to put in bail, or to deposit in lieu of bail, there may be an action against the bail or proceedings against the sheriff. It is to be observed that the defendant is not now allowed, as he used to be, to deliver himself instead of putting in bail; he must either put in special bail, or deposit in lieu of bail. If he does not do either, then one of two proceedings may be taken. The bail have made themselves answerable for his appearance; he has not appeared to fulfil the condition of the bond, which is that he appear within eight days; and therefore they are answerable. The bond is given to the sheriff, and formerly it was necessary to sue in the sheriff's name. By the statute of Anne, the sheriff is, under these circumstances, enabled to assign the bond to the plaintiff: the plaintiff sues on the bond in his own name; he holds an assignment of the bail-bond, and sues upon it. The plaintiff, therefore, makes the bail answerable for the non-appearance of the defendant and the not putting in special bail to answer the action. It may be that the bail were insufficient persons; it may be that they cannot be found. If so, the sheriff is responsible; he is responsible for having put in insufficient men; and he is responsible, also, for their continuing insufficient. If they are not sufficient, he has neglected his duty, and in that case he may be attached for not having performed his duty; and the effect of that is, that he will have to pay the money, because he would be liable to be committed to prison until the money is paid. The effect of the attachment, therefore, is to compel him to pay the money. So that where the defendant has been set at liberty on a bail-bond, if he does not put in special bail to the action, or deposit in lieu of bail, the plaintiff may take either proceedings against the bail or proceedings against the sheriff. There were formerly, and there are now, certain persons against whom a capias will not lie. A capias cannot be issued against members of the royal family, servants in ordinary to the king, nor can any arrest take place within a certain distance of the royal palace. (See 5 T. R. Bartlett v. ——; and Reynolds v. Pocock, 4 M. & W. 371.) The consent of the Chamberlain must, however, be obtained. Peers of the realm are privileged from arrest (Cooke's Reports, 52); also, peers of Scotland and Ireland. (Coates v. Lord Hawarden 7 B. & C. 388.) Members of the House of Commons during the session, and for a time—not precisely limited, but supposed to be forty days—both before and after the session. Ambassadors and their servants are privileged, both at common law and by statute. The privilege also extends to servants and officers of the courts during Term. This privilege applies to barristers and attorneys; and the reason of this privilege is this, that they are engaged in public business, and that you have no right to take them from the court, because you are thereby damaging their clients. Now you, can only arrest a man if he is going to quit the country; and if an attorney is going to quit the country, you can do no more damage to his client if you place him in jail. That class of privileges seems to be done away with.

New Books.

A Treatise on the Law of Defamation: with Forms of Pleadings. By GEORGE WINGROVE COOKE, Esq. of the Middle Temple, barrister-at-law. London, 1844. Owen Richards.

THE Law of Defamation has recently been subjected to very important changes. The Act of the last session has removed many of its most objectionable features, and introduced many improvements, which in practice have been found to work extremely well, for since those changes there has been an entire cessation of the frivolous and vexatious actions for libel which formerly filled so large a space in the law reports of the newspapers.

Alterations so extensive as these are sufficient apology for submitting to the Profession a new treatise upon the subject. The masterly work of STARKIE has necessarily lost much of its value by reason of fresh legislation. Although the principles which he has laid down remain unimpaired, the practitioner would incur great hazard of error were he to rely upon his old authority for information upon any particular point. Therefore, the volume upon our table will not be unwelcome nor unrequired, provided its purpose be accomplished with correctness and industry.

Mr. COOKE divides his treatise into three parts. In the first, he treats of the wrong; in the second, of the remedy; in the third, of the forms of pleadings in civil and criminal proceedings for defamation. The two first parts he subdivides into chapters. In discussing the wrong, he discourses successively of libel affecting particular parties; of slanders affecting particular parties; of scandalum magnatum; of malice; of communications conditionally privileged; of those absolutely privileged; and of defamation as a public wrong. In the second part he treats of the remedy generally; of the civil remedy by action; of the declarations of the plea; of the replication; of the evidence for the plaintiff; of the defendant's evidence; of the trial; of the costs; of proceedings incident to the action; of the liabilities of authors and publishers of libels to each other, in respect of indemnity and contribution; of the criminal remedy by information; of the ex officio information; of informations by the Master of the Crown-office; of the affidavits; of the form of the information or indictment; of pleading thereto; of the evidence at the trial; of the trial; of the proceedings after the trial; of the proceedings incidental to the prosecution; and of the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in cases of defamation.

The third part contains an extensive collection of forms of pleadings, indictments, and informations. In an appendix, the statutes are given at length; then the report of the Lords' committee, and selections from the evidence of the law Lords. An alphabetical table of cases and a copious index make this work as complete as could be desired.

Mr. COOKE has displayed excellent workmanship in the putting together of his materials, and has given the gist of cases without setting them forth at length. He evidently possesses a legal mind; he can clearly see a point and clearly express it; he has expended much industry upon his task, and the result is, a book that will be an acquisition to the lawyer's library.

As a specimen of his manner, that will at once instruct the reader and suit our contracted space, we will take from the Chapter on Privileged Communications the section on the limits

OF PUBLIC CRITICISM.

"All criticisms are privileged. When a man becomes an author, the law allows any one to say or write of him as an author, or of his book, any thing which he may please; proof of express malice in this, as in other cases, destroying the privilege.

"The rule in this respect is usually laid down to be, that fair and honest criticism, however severe, is privileged. The decisions, however, seem to go rather beyond this.

"The two leading cases upon this subject are—Sir John Carr v. Hood (1 Camp. 355, n), and Tabbart v. Tipper (1 Camp. 350). Both these cases were tried before Lord Ellenborough, and the doctrine laid down has received the sanction of subsequent judges.

"In Carr v. Hood, the plaintiff, Sir John Carr, had written (it does not appear from the report that he had published) a book, called A Tour in Ireland. The defendant thereupon published a pamphlet, entitled My Pocket Book, or Hints for a righte merrie and conceited Tour, to be called The Stranger in Ireland in 1805, by a Knight Errant. This pamphlet contained a frontispiece, entitled 'The Knight leaving Ireland with regret,' being a caricature of Sir John Carr holding a pocket-handkerchief to his face, and appearing to be weeping, and having a man following him loaded with, and bending under the weight of, three large books, and carrying in one hand a pocket-handkerchief tied up at the corners, and having the word 'wardrobe' on it; thereby meaning, as the declaration averred, that one copy of the said first-mentioned book of the said Sir John, and two copies of the said book of the said Sir John secondly mentioned, were so heavy as to cause a man to bend under the weight thereof; and that his the said Sir John's wardrobe was very small, and capable of being contained in one pocket-handkerchief.

"The declaration laid as special damage, that the plaintiff had been prevented from selling the copyright of the book in question to Sir Richard Phillips for 600*l*.

"Lord Ellenborough said, 'Here the supposed libel has only attacked those works of which Sir John Carr is the avowed author; and one writer in exposing the follies and errors of another may make use of ridicule, however poignant. Ridicule is often the fittest weapon that can be employed for such a purpose. If the reputation or pecuniary interests of the person ridiculed suffer, it is damnum absque injuriâ. Where is the liberty of the press if an action can be maintained on such principles? Perhaps the plaintiff's Tour through Ireland is now unsaleable; but is he to be indemnified by receiving a compensation in damages from the person who may have opened the eyes of the public to the bad taste and inanity of his compositions? Who would have bought the works of Sir Robert Filmer after he had been refuted by Locke? But shall it be said that he might have sustained an action for defamation against that great philosopher, who was labouring to enlighten and ameliorate mankind. We really must not cramp observations upon authors and their works; they should be liable to criticism, to exposure and even to ridicule, if their compositions be ridiculous; otherwise, the first who writes a book on any subject will obtain a monopoly of sentiment and opinion respecting it: this would tend to the perpetuity of error. Reflection on personal character is another thing. Shew me an attack on the moral character of the plaintiff, or any attack upon his character unconnected with his authorship, and I shall be as ready as any judge who ever sat here to protect him; but I cannot hear of malice on account of turning his works into ridicule.'

"The counsel for the plaintiff, however, still complaining of the unfairness of the publication, and especially of the print, the case proceeded, and, in summing up his lordship said, 'Every man who publishes a book commits himself to the judgment of the public, and any one may comment upon his performance. If the commentator does not step aside from the work, or introduce fiction for the purpose of condemnation, he exercises a fair and legitimate right. In the present case, had the party writing the criticism followed the plaintiff into domestic life for purposes of slander, that would have been libellous; but no passage of this sort has been produced, and even the caricature does not affect the plaintiff, except as the author of the book which is ridiculed. The works of this gentleman may, for aught I know, be very valuable; but, whatever their merits, others have a right to pass their judgment upon them, to censure them if they be censurable, and to turn them into ridicule if they be ridiculous. The critic does a great service to the public who writes down any vapid or useless publication, such as ought never to have appeared; he checks the dissemination of bad taste, and prevents people wasting both their time and money upon trash. I speak of fair and candid criticism, and this every one has a right to publish, although the author may suffer loss from it. Such a loss the law does not consider as an injury, because it is a loss which the party ought to sustain. It is, in short, a loss of fame and profits to which he was never entitled. Nothing can be conceived more threatening to the liberty of the press than the species of action before the Court. We ought to resist an attempt against free and liberal criticism at the threshold.'

"In considering this ruling, so valuable to our literature, we must disconnect it from the facts of the case. His lordship expressly left it to the jury to determine whether the writer of the publication had travelled out of the work he criticised for the purpose of slander, and whether there was in the publication any thing personally slanderous against the plaintiff unconnected with the works he had written. If the jury in this case had returned a verdict for the plaintiff, upon the ground that a caricature of a man's person is no criticism upon him as an author, or upon the ground that a criticism of a man's wardrobe is no criticism upon his works, the ruling of Lord Ellenborough would still have been untouched.

"Indeed, this judgment of Lord Ellenborough hardly carries the rule to the full extent in which it is now understood. When his lordship says that the critic has a right to censure works if they be censurable, and to turn them into ridicule if they be ridiculous, he appears to introduce conditions which destroy the character of privileged communications, the very essence of which is, that they need not be true if made without malice. It is submitted that the rule is, that the critic has a right to censure works whether they be really justly censurable or not, and to turn them into ridicule whether they be really ridiculous or not; otherwise, it would be for the jury to determine whether the judgment of the critic be a right judgment, instead of being whether it be a bona fide judgment. We may infer, indeed, that this was his lordship's impression from his previous declaration, 'for aught I know, the works of this gentleman may be very valuable.'

"The case of Tabbart v. Tipper (1 Camp. 350) was an action by a publisher for a libel contained in a periodical work, called The Satirist, or Monthly Meteor, imputing to the plaintiff that he had published books of an immoral tendency, and ascribing to him some silly verses, which were admitted by the defendant not to have been published by the plaintiff, but it was contended that they were a fair specimen of his publications.

"Lord Ellenborough told the jury that it was certainly actionable gravely to impute to a bookseller having published a poem(a) to which he was a stranger, as the evident tendency of the unfounded imputation was to hurt him in his business.

"But upon a question which arose during the trial, whether a witness ought to be cross-examined as to the defendant having published particular books, his lordship said, 'The main question here is, quo animo the defendant published the article complained of; whether he meant to put down a nuisance to public morals, or to prejudice the plaintiff. To ascertain this, it is material to know the general nature of the defendant's publications to which the libel alludes, and I therefore think that the evidence is receivable. The plaintiff is bound to shew that the defendant was actuated by malice, and the defendant discharges himself by proving the contrary. Liberty of criticism must be allowed, or we should have neither purity of taste or of morals. Fair discussion is essentially necessary to the truth of history and the advancement of science. That publication, therefore, I shall never consider as a libel which has for its object, not to injure the reputation of any individual, but to correct misrepresentations of fact—to refute sophistical reasoning, to expose a vicious taste in literature, or to censure what is hostile to morality.'

"It has been held, also, to be fair criticism to write of a newspaper that it is the most vulgar, ignorant, and scurrilous journal ever published in Great Britain. (Heriot v. Stuart, 1 Esp. C. 437.) But to address its advertisers, and tell them that it is low in circulation, is to state a fact which must be justified.

"To say of the editor of a newspaper that his full-blown baseness and infamy hold him fast to his present connections, and prevent him from forming new ones, is not within the scope of privileged criticism. (Stuart v. Lovell, 2 Starkie's C. 73.)

"'The name of G. is to be rendered famous in all sorts of dirty works' is not a fair criticism. (Green v. Chapman, 4 Bing. N. S. 92; 3 Scott, 340.)

"The leaning of the Courts has certainly been of late to discourage gross and personal criticism, such as was upheld in Carr v. Hood. In Soane v. Knight (1 M. & M. 44), although it was expressly said that fair criticism on works of a professional artist cannot be the subject of an action, however mistaken in point of taste, yet it was left to the jury to say whether to impute to an artist that he acts on absurd principles of art was not unfair and intemperate, and intended to injure him in his profession; and the same question also was left to the jury, where it had been published of a painting, publicly exhibited, that it was a mere daub, with other strong words of censure. (Thompson v. Shackell, 1 M. & M. 187.) And in a recent case Lord Denman was of opinion, that to publish of a publisher that he had inserted in his magazine a series of articles, the greater part of which were false, as well as of a gross character, exceeded the scope of fair criticism. (Colburn v. Whiting and Another, H. T. 1843, N. P.)

"The right of criticism applies also to players,(b) public singers, painters publicly exhibiting, and probably also to architects, and to all persons who place themselves in a position from which it may be inferred that they submit themselves to the judgment of the public.

"But it has been decided that presenting a petition to Parliament is not an act which renders a man obnoxious to criticism. (Dunne v. Anderson, 3 Bing. 88.)

"It is hardly necessary to observe, that no criticism upon a book which it is a crime to publish can be libellous. (See Stockdale v. Duncombe, 5 Jur. 236.)

"Under this title we may also class a certain license which the law allows of discussing the public character and public acts of public men. This privilege seems to depend upon the same ground of public necessity which gave rise to the impunity of literary criticism. It is governed also by the same rules, and restrained within the same limits.(c)

"In Parmiter v. Coupland (6 M. & W. 105), Parke, B. said, 'There is a difference between publications relating to public and private individuals. Every subject has a right to comment on those acts of public men which concern him as a subject of the realm, if he do not make his commentary a cloak for malice and slander; but any imputation of wicked and corrupt motives is unquestionably libellous.' And in the same case Alderson, B. said, 'There certainly is a material distinction between a publication relating to a public and a private person whether they be libels. That criticism may reasonably be applied to a public man in a public capacity which might not be applied to a private individual. The same thing might be no libel on me which might be a very grievous and injurious libel on another.'

"Thus much for communications which require proof of express malice in order to render them defamatory."

A Letter to the Attorney-General, Sir W. Webb Follett, M.P., suggesting some Amendments in the proposed new County Courts Bill. By W. Johnson Neale, esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Pp. 31. London, 1844. O. Richards.

Mr. Neale proposes to amend the County Courts Bill. We believe amendment to be impossible, and desire the substitution of a better class of courts, with better judges, and a more reputable species of practitioners. But if there be no hope of this, there is no reason why the present measure should not be made as perfect as its vicious principle will permit; therefore, Mr. Neale's suggestions are entitled to grateful consideration.

He objects to the power given to the judge by the 54th section, to deny a jury in all suits not exceeding 5*l.*, and would give the option to either party to demand a jury; to the limitation of the number of the jury, which should be eleven, the majority to decide; and to the 66th section, empowering the parties to be heard on oath—to our minds, the worst portion of the scheme.

He expresses, and with justice, the strongest aversion to the extraordinary provisions empowering judges of existing Courts of Request to demand to be judges in the new courts; a sentiment in which every lawyer who knows any thing of Courts of Requests will cordially concur. Even compensation, à la Chancery, would be preferable to this.

The next objectionable provisions are those that exclude barristers and attorneys from acting as advocates without leave of the judge, and prohibit an attorney from recovering any thing, if the suit be for less than 2*l.*; giving him only 10*s.* if it be for less than 5*l.*; and no more than 15*s.* in any case. The consequence of this will be, as we have so often repeated, entirely to exclude the respectable practitioners, and to breed up a race of pettifoggers to infest the Profession.

Mr. Neale submits an extremely ingenious plan for avoiding the difficulty about costs, and securing respectability among the practitioners. Estimating the annual sum to be recovered in these courts at one million, he proposes that, for collecting this sum, the court should charge fifteen per cent., which shall include all fees and costs whatever, except that of witnesses; the per-centage to be paid in the first instance by the plaintiff on taking out the summons, but ultimately to follow the event of the suit. From this fund the entire expenses of the court would be defrayed, and the advocate receive a fee of ten per cent. upon the sum sued for; the suitor to name his own advocate, or if he does not do so, the Court to appoint one, by ballot, from the names to be kept in a register of attorneys in the district, and in which register any respectable attorney shall be permitted to enrol himself.

Mr. Neale distinctly shews, that to the suitor this would be a much more economical arrangement than the scale of fees awarded by the Act, while it would secure a reasonable, though not an adequate, remuneration to the attorney. A cost of 15 per cent. for recovery of a debt would be objected to by nobody: it is the uncertainty of expense that now deters men from availing themselves of the law. So highly, indeed, do we approve of Mr. Neale's suggestion, that we should like to see it carried further, and applied to the Sheriffs' Courts, indeed to the recovery of debts in every court: thus the cost, as it should be, would, in all cases, be proportioned to the amount sought to be recovered.

Mr. Neale throws out another suggestion, of which we entertain more doubt. He questions whether it be desirable in all cases to saddle the losing party with the costs; he would make each pay a certain fixed per-centage, which he considers would have the effect of preventing litigation by inducing settlements out of Court. The proposition is too new and startling to be hastily determined.

He concludes with an eloquent commentary on the importance of having every court of justice supplied with a class of practitioners reputable in character and competent in education, in which we heartily agree with him. It is far more important to the administration of justice than good laws.

It will be seen that this pamphlet deserves grave consideration; and the Profession is much indebted to the writer for the time and thought he has bestowed upon a topic, which is one of such very serious importance, that it cannot be too often or too searchingly examined. It will amply reward perusal.

A Practical and Elementary Abridgment of the Common Law, as altered and established by the recent Statutes, Rules of Court and modern Decisions: comprising a full abstract of all the Cases argued and determined in the Courts of Common Law and on Appeal; with the Rules of Court from M. T. 1824 to M. T. 1840, inclusive, and the Statutes during the same period. With connecting and illustrative References to the earlier Authorities, and explanatory Notes. By Charles Petersdorff, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. In 5 volumes. London. Stevens and Norton.

If the length of a review were to be proportioned to the worth of the book reviewed, this notice would extend over some half-dozen of our numbers; for it is undoubtedly the most valuable legal publication that has made its appearance since the Law Times commenced its labours. But there are many works, and those often the most truly important, which offer no field for extract, and of which it is difficult to say more than that they are so useful in design and so well executed, that every practitioner should place them in his library.

(a) This "poem" was as follows:—

"There was a little maid,
And she was afraid
Her sweetheart would come to her;
So she bound up her head
When she went to bed,
And she fastened her door with a skewer."

(b) Dibdin v. Bostock, 1 Esp. C. 29; Dibdin v. Swan, 1 Esp. 28; Thompson v. Shackell, 1 M. & M. 187; Green v. Chapman, 4 Bing. N. S. 92; 3 Scott, 340.

(c) Onslow v. Horne, 3 Wils. 177. The words were, "As to instructing our members to obtain redress, I am totally against that plan, for as to instructing Mr. Onslow, we might as well instruct the winds; and should he even promise his assistance, I should not expect him to give it us." See also Woodward v. Dowsing, 2 M. & R. 74; Reg. v. Collins, 9 C. & P. 456.

Mr. Petersdorff's Abridgment is one of these books, so perplexing to the reviewer. Its merit would deserve an eulogium of a dozen pages; yet we can do nothing more than simply set forth the particulars of its claims upon the patronage of the Profession and "bid them speak for us."

The original Abridgment by Mr. Petersdorff is well known. That learned and laborious work, embodying the substance of nearly 260 volumes, brought down the cases, rules, and statutes to Michaelmas Term, 1824. Since that time, the law has undergone many changes; scarcely has a single branch of it escaped the scrutiny of reformers; improvements have been effected by the processes both of modification and of restoration: novelties have been introduced, and in some cases there has been a wise return to ancient principles, which had been buried amid the load of decisions. A work which should collect in its comprehensive pages all these changes, that should shew the progress of recent decisions and exhibit the law precisely as it is, could not fail to be acceptable to the Profession. Mr. Petersdorff rightly observes that there is no publication "that comprises, under a connected but alphabetical arrangement, the Modern Law, as established by these changes." This difficult task he has successfully accomplished, and the plan he adopted is thus described in the preface:—

"A comprehensive consolidation of the whole of the modern cases, statutes, and rules of court, is now attempted to be given. The more effectually to execute this design, much time and labour have been devoted to arrange the materials according to a plan at once analytic and alphabetical. The following enumeration of the contents of the notes and references will shew the information sought to be furnished beyond the mere abridgment of the cases, statutes, and rules of court:—

"1. A reference to the different books in which the same case is reported.

"2. A reference to the cases in which the same point has been determined or affirmed.

"3. A reference to the cases or elementary writers in which the same rule or principle is recognised or adverted to.

"4. A reference to those cases which are at variance with the decision abridged, or to such as have expressly overruled it.

"5. A reference to the Acts of Parliament connected with each case.

"6. A series of notes, in which an attempt has been made to connect the cases with the present practice, and to explain the general effect; comprising such principles of the law as are not included within the general scope of the abridgment.

"An endeavour has been made to frame the abstract of the decisions on a plan simple and perspicuous. The reports themselves generally contain a copy of the pleadings, a full statement of all the facts, the arguments of counsel at length, and almost every sentence uttered by the several judges in pronouncing their opinions. In the present publication so much only of the pleadings, the facts, and the arguments of counsel, are introduced in a condensed form as may be necessary to connect the case with the decision. The judgments are compressed into one concise statement, including the most important observations, unless there is a difference of opinion on the Bench; in which case, the individual opinions are given seriatim."

A table of titles, with their subdivisions, and of the cases, is given with each volume. The notes are elaborate, and will greatly aid the inquirer. As a book of reference it will be invaluable, serving vastly to lighten the labour of research; and if they be kept noted up with the current of decisions, these volumes will certainly be the most frequently resorted to of any in the lawyer's library.

Time-Table Cards for the Use of Chambers and Offices. By Freelove Hammond, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London, 1844.

This is a very useful publication. Three cards, of convenient size for suspension against a wall, or for the desk or chimney-piece, present severally a Chancery Time-Table, a Common-Law Time-Table, and a Bankruptcy Time-Table—that is to say, a summary of the times within which the various processes in each class of courts are to be taken. The value of such a ready reference, ever before the eyes of the practitioner, and rendering a resort to books on every trifling occasion unnecessary, is so obvious, that we need do no more than inform our readers that such an acquisition is to be procured, at the very trifling price named in the advertisement, to which they are referred for further particulars.

WILSON v. WILSON.

Practice—Conflicting jurisdiction—Injunction to restrain proceeding in Ecclesiastical Court.

Lloyd moved for leave to give notice of a motion for an injunction to restrain a defendant in the Ecclesiastical Court from taking means to compel the plaintiff to this suit to file her libel in the Spiritual Court. The siut was instituted for nullity of marriage, and the libel, if filed, would affect the questions at issue in this suit. The next court-day in the Ecclesiastical Court would be on the 14th instant, and none of the Courts of Chancery would sit until after that day. The Vice-Chancellor of England, in whose court the cause is, had given leave to make the motion on a certain day, but had stated that he should not then be in town.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Order that the motion may be heard before Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce.

Wednesday, May 22.

BARNSLEY CANAL COMPANY v. TWIBELL.

Construction—Private Act of Parliament—Compensation for injury in constructing works.

This was an appeal from an order of the Master of the Rolls dissolving an injunction, by which the defendant had been restrained from taking the necessary steps under the Barnsley Canal Act (33 Geo. 3, c. 110), to have his compensation for injury done by the canal assessed by a jury. The case turned upon certain clauses in the Canal Act, which directed that if in the working of mines an approach shall be made to the canal as to endanger it, the company may be at liberty to purchase so much of the coal as they might think necessary to be left for the safety of the canal; and in the same way the "owner or worker" of mines might compel the canal company to buy so much of the coal adjoining the canal as should be sufficient to prevent an irruption of water into the mines. The canal company had settled with Mr. Beaumont, the owner of certain coal-mines, and paid him 200*l.* an acre for the coal lying by the side of the canal to the width of eight yards, which was the exact sum per acre the defendant, the lessee and worker of the mines, had agreed to pay to Mr. Beaumont as rent.

Tinney and Daniell contended, that the Act having directed the "owner or worker" to be paid for the coal, did not authorize both to demand compensation for damage done by the canal.

Wakefield and Glasse, contrà.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The interest of the worker of the coal is to be satisfied for the value of the coal after the expenses of working it had been deducted. Mr. Beaumont might have worked his own colliery, and so got the working profit besides the value of the coal to let. The right of the owner is to the value of the coal as it stands, and he may either take it and have the collier's profit, or let it to others. Is this Act to deprive the owner of his power to let his colliery? —— Order affirmed.

DREVER v. MAWDESLEY.

Liability of receiver for a banking account—Bankruptcy of bankers.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I have looked at the banker's books, numbers 7, 8, and 9, and I find that the defendant, the receiver, did derive a profit from the banking balance. The money was paid into the tithe account, and in an ordinary case the receiver could not be called upon to bear any part of the loss sustained by the bankruptcy of the bankers. The tenth account was not passed at the time of the banker's bankruptcy, but in the others the receiver was very much in default. The three first-mentioned of the books produced shew that he had a regular credit for, and drew out the exact amount of the interest on the deposit, which he appropriated to himself. Having derived a profit from the banking account, he made the bankers' his, and must, therefore, take the chance of loss by their failure. The decision of the Vice-Chancellor is right, but it is a hard case, as the receiver had no salary, and I shall give no costs against him. The plaintiff's costs will be costs in the cause.

Re DYCE SOMBRE, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy: allowance to lunatic petitioning to supersede the commission.

In this case the Lord Chancellor having refused to entertain Mr. Dyce Sombre's petition to supersede the commission until he should come within the jurisdiction of the Court, it had been arranged under the Chancellor's sanction, that he should be allowed to come to this country without personal restraint or molestation, unless by the express order of the Chancellor.

Walpole stated, that Mr. Sombre had come to Boulogne on his way to England, where his funds had become exhausted, and asked an order on the committee of the estate to remit him money.

Lloyd, for the committee offered no objection.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Let 100*l.* be sent.

Lloyd also, on behalf of the committee of the estate, asked his lordship's directions as to continuing the payment of certain pensions in India, which had always been made by Mr. Sombre; they are mere bounties, but the parties receiving them relied on their permanence.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I will hear the case as soon as possible. I shall leave these payments to the discretion of the committee of the estate; but there should be no unnecessary expense.

Re ——— a Lunatic.

Practice in Lunacy—Sale of parts of the estate.

Lowndes supported a petition by the committee of the estate, for an order to sell certain canal shares, the property of the lunatic, which are now at a premium, but, as appeared by the affidavits of local surveyors, are not likely to improve in value.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The sale cannot take place without a reference to the Commissioner to inquire whether it is for the lunatic's benefit that these shares should be sold.

WARD v. TRATHER.

Ex parte BAILEY.

Discharge of a purchaser under a decree for a sale after acceptance of title—Defective abstract—Error in title—Costs.

Under a decree in a creditor's suit for the sale of real estates devised by will, the petitioners as purchasers accepted the title to the entirety of an estate to which it was supposed the testator was entitled by survivorship, he having at one time held it as joint tenant with another person. And accordingly, in May, 1841, the petitioners, under the usual order, paid their purchase-money into Court, which was accordingly invested. In the month of July following, the petitioners for the first time received notice from the defendant's solicitors, that a severance of the joint tenancy had been effected between the testator and his joint tenant, by means of a certain deed executed in 1789, which had not been abstracted, and which, if valid, would have destroyed the testator's right to more than one moiety of the property. Notice of this objection was immediately given to the plaintiff, who returned for answer, that in consequence of the discovery he could not press the completion of the purchase just then. The objection was not, however, removed, but notice to complete the purchase was served by the plaintiff's solicitors upon the petitioners in January, 1842. This was met by the petitioners with a counter notice, requiring them to make out a title to the entirety of the property, the objection to the title was not removed, but in July, 1843, the plaintiff gave notice to the petitioners, that he was about to enforce the completion of the contract, when the purchasers petitioned the Court to be discharged from their purchase, and to be paid the costs occasioned thereby, but without prejudice as to how the costs are ultimately to be dealt with. Held, that they had a right to be discharged from the purchase, and to their costs, but without prejudice.

The petitioners, Richard Bailey and William Bailey, were purchasers of certain property that had been sold under a decree in the above-mentioned suit, and the present application was, that they might be discharged from their purchase, and the purchase-money, which had been paid into court and invested, might be transferred and paid to the petitioners, together with the costs of and incident to the purchase and the investigation of the title.

The suit was commenced in 1832, by a specialty creditor of the testator, John Trather, for the payment of his debt, and for the administration of his property in the usual manner. By an order made in July, 1834, it was referred to the Master to sell the testator's estates therein mentioned, as the devised estates, which also included the estates in question. They were accordingly put up for sale on the 29th day of March, 1836, and were purchased by the petitioners for the sum of 1,055*l.* The Master, by his report on the 10th August following, declared them to be the purchasers for the above sum. This report was duly confirmed on the 2nd day of November following. Soon after this, the plaintiff's solicitors delivered an abstract of title to the solicitors of the petitioners, and, so far as it appeared upon the face of that abstract, the testator and one W. B——, in 1789, became seised in fee-simple as joint tenants of the property in dispute, and that W. B. had died in the lifetime of the testator; so that, from any thing appearing upon the abstract, no severance had taken place during the lifetime of W. B.; but that the testator was entitled to the whole by survivorship. Under this impression, therefore, the petitioners accepted the title. Accordingly, on the 5th May, 1841, in pursuance of an order in that behalf, the petitioners paid their purchase-money into court, and the same was duly invested; but, on the 8th July, 1841, the petitioners were served with a notice from the solicitor of the defendants, to the effect that, by indentures of lease and release, dated 1st and 2nd October, 1789, a severance of the joint tenancy had been effected, and that the testator was, in consequence, entitled to only one moiety of the premises at the time of his death. The petitioners, therefore, objected to the latter, and immediately gave notice to the plaintiff of such objection. This gave rise to the correspondence already mentioned, which ended in the present application to the Court.

Stuart and Spurrier, in support of the petition.

Wilcock, for the plaintiff.

In opposition to the petition were two affidavits, one of the plaintiff's solicitor, and the other of William Ward, the executor of John Ward: the contents of which affidavits, together with the arguments of counsel, are referred to in the Vice-Chancellor's judgment.

His Honour, the VICE-CHANCELLOR, thought that, looking at the evidence as it then stood, the petitioners ought to be discharged from their contract. That although the error was mutual, so far as this, that neither the plaintiff nor the petitioners knew of the existence of the deed severing the joint tenancy, yet, in no other respect, was there a community of error between the parties, for an abstract had been delivered to the petitioners which was silent as to the deed in question. That the affidavit of the plaintiff's solicitor, stating the removal of the seals, was primâ facie an admission that seals had formerly been affixed to the deed, and that consequently the title to the entirety was not good. His Honour was moreover of opinion that the petitioners had not been fairly dealt with, or as purchasers ought to have been, and that they must therefore be discharged from their purchase, and have the costs occasioned by the sale paid to them; but reserving the question as to the manner in which those costs are ultimately to be paid.

Ordered as prayed, without prejudice as to how the costs are ultimately to be dealt with.

Monday, April 22.

Ex parte PARK.

Will—Partial revocation—Testamentary guardianship. A testator had by his will appointed his wife and the trustees and executors thereof to be also guardians of his children. He afterwards makes a codicil thereto, whereby revoking the appointment of three of the trustees and executors as trustees and executors, he appointed two others in their stead to act as trustees and executors, with the one retained. Held, that this did not affect the guardianship, but that the removed trustees and executors remained guardians to the children nevertheless.

This was a question arising out of the will and codicils of a Mr. J. Park, who, by his last will and testament, bearing date 13th March, 1829, after giving his property to G. S. Petty, C. Kennedy, G. Huddlestone, and J. Park, executors thereof, upon certain trusts, directs as follows:—"I give the guardianship and tuition of all my children to my wife and my trustees, the said G. S. Petty, C. Kennedy, G. Huddlestone, and J. Park, who are to educate them suitably to their property or estate." The testator made a codicil, bearing date March 2, 1841, in which he says, "Whereas I, the undersigned J. Park, in and by my last will, bearing date the 13th day of March, 1829, have appointed G. S. Petty, C. Kennedy, G. Huddlestone, and J. Park, trustees and executors thereof, now I do hereby revoke such appointment, so far as regards C. Kennedy, G. Huddlestone, and J. Park, and in lieu of the said C. Kennedy, G. Huddlestone, and J. Park, have and do hereby appoint George Mason and John Slater, their heirs, executors, and administrators, to act as trustees and executors of the said will and codicil thereto, along with the said G. S. Petty, in the same manner and with the same power as if they, the said G. Mason and J. Slater, had been originally appointed trustees and executors of my said will and codicil."

The question now raised was, whether the codicil which revoked the appointment of Kennedy, Huddlestone, and Park, as trustees and executors, amounted also to an implied revocation of their appointment as guardians.

A petition was presented on behalf of the testator's infant children, that the Court might declare who were guardians.

Walker and Stinton, for C. Kennedy, Huddlestone, and J. Park, urged that the guardianship was incident to their characters as trustees of the property, and but for the property, they would not have been appointed guardians; for where a legacy is given to an executor quâ executor, and he either refuses to act or the office does not continue, he will not be entitled to the legacy.

Cases cited: Roach v. Haynes (8 Ves. 593); Henfrey v. Henfrey (2 Curt. 468); Ravens v. Taylor (4 Beavan, 425).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The testator's intention is clear, and I must decide according to that intention. In the first place, he appoints his trustees; then, in a separate clause, he appoints his wife and trustees as guardians of his infant children. He then appoints Petty, Kennedy, Huddlestone, and Park executors. The testator, in his codicil, refers to their appointment as executors, and then by that instrument revoked such appointment so far as regarded C. Kennedy, G. Huddlestone, and J. Park, and in lieu of the said C. Kennedy, G. Huddlestone, and J. Park, thereby appointed George Mason and J. Slater their heirs, executors, and administrators, to act as trustees and executor of the said will and codicil. These parties must therefore remain guardians, for it is plain that the testator did not intend to revoke the guardianship.

ROLLS COURT.

BRIDSON v. M'ALPINE.

Injunction—Infringement of a patent.

The specification should distinctly state the principle, as well as the mode of bringing it into operation. If the principle claimed be not clearly stated, but is only to be made out by construction, by comparing the several clauses of the specification, an injunction will not be granted, but the defendant will only be put upon terms as to keeping accounts, &c. till the validity of the patent is tried at law.

In May 1838 the plaintiff took out a patent for an improvement in machinery for stretching, drying, and finishing muslins. Prior to the date of the patent, the mode of finishing was by attaching the selvidges of the muslin to two pieces of wood, called stenters, which were moved by the hand in opposite directions, like parallel rulers, so as to give a "diagonal motion" to the muslin; and the object was to remove the starch used in the manufacture from the interstices of the muslin, and also to prevent the adjacent threads from adhering, and so to give the muslin a finished glossy appearance. The plaintiff, adopting the stretching apparatus, invented a method of communicating to it by machinery the "vibratory" motion which had been previously produced by the hand. In his specification, however, he only claimed an improvement in machinery for stretching, &c.; but in a sort of notice or advertisement at the end of the specification, he added that there were many ways of giving vibratory motion for the purposes aforesaid, and that he claimed all such. The question was, whether he had sufficiently stated a principle as well as a mode of carrying it out, so as to entitle him to an injunction against the defendant, who had invented another and quite different mode of giving the vibratory motion to the "stenters" by machinery, which the plaintiff claimed as the principle of his patent.

Kindersley, Turner, and Bacon, for the plaintiff.

Roupell and Wilcock, for the defendant.

The following cases were cited: Minter v. Wells (1 Cr. M. & R. 405); Bloxham v. Elsee (6 B. & Cr. 169); Durergier v. Fellows (10 B. & Cr. 826); Web. P. C. 342, n.

The MASTER of the ROLLS was of opinion that the specification nowhere contained any express claim of a principle; but that, coupling the notice at the end with the other clauses, it might possibly be inferred that the principle of the finishing process—i. e. the communication of the vibratory motion to the stenters by machinery—was claimed. This conclusion, however, was only to be arrived at by construction; and he was therefore unwilling to grant an injunction, if, pending the trial at law, which at all events was necessary, the defendant would enter into the usual undertaking to keep accounts, &c. &c. Accordingly, the defendant having agreed to do so, arrangements were made to have the validity of the patent tried at law.

——— v. ———

Motion to extend the common injunction.

If, after an answer is reported insufficient, the plaintiff obtain an order (not stating it to be "without prejudice") to amend, and that the defendant answer, &c., and then on the same day obtain the common injunction, the latter is not dropped because of the former.

On the [illegible] of April last, the defendant in this cause put in an answer which on the 25th of May the Master reported to be insufficient; and on the same 25th of May the plaintiff obtained an order to amend, and that the defendant should answer the amended bill and exceptions together, but did not state that it should be "without prejudice." On the same day, also, the plaintiff obtained the common injunction, and having now moved to extend it, he was met by the objections—1st, that the common injunction was at an end by reason of the order; and, 2ndly, that by the 2nd order of 9th of May, 1839, there should have been in the order an undertaking to amend within one week.

The following cases were cited: Stratford v. Lewis and Stratford v. Cooke, 22nd of May, 1844, before the Vice-Chancellor of England (not reported); Adney v. Flood (1 Mad. 449); Dipper v. Durant (3 Mer. 465); Ferrand v. Hamer (4 Myl. & Cr. 143); Simes v. Duff (8 Sim. 270); Newland Pract. 335.

Kindersley and Hallett, for the motion.

Turner, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS was of opinion, that as the Vice-Chancellor of England had decided in favour of the motion under exactly the same circumstances, he must do so too, unless he was satisfied there was manifest error. The common injunction must therefore stand, and the motion to extend it must be granted.

LAWRENCE v. BYGRAVE.

16th Order.

If a plaintiff, who, though a solicitor, is not the solicitor for the plaintiffs named on the record, join with the other plaintiffs, representing himself to be their solicitor in obtaining an order on petition to take a defendant's answer without oath, the order will be discharged for irregularity on the application of the party consenting to the order, but with costs as against him.

In this case a Mr. Harrison was solicitor for the plaintiffs entered on the record; and the other plaintiffs having joined with Mr. Wm. Lawrence, who represented himself as acting as solicitor for himself and the other plaintiffs, obtained an order, upon petition, to take the answer of one of the defendants without oath, the petition being signed by Lawrence on behalf of himself and the others. It being found that the order was not such as the plaintiffs wished to abide by, it was now sought to set it aside for irregularity, since, according to the 16th of the late orders, Mr. Harrison alone was to be considered the plaintiffs' solicitor for every such purpose, and no other could be recognized till notice of order for a change was served on the other side; and the motion was resisted on the ground that the applicant was a consenting party, and now wished to draw back.

Shebbeare, for the motion.

Turner, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS thought the 16th order imperative, and that the motion must be discharged, but as Mr. Lawrence was the cause of all the difficulty, the applicant must pay the costs. The defendants were not to suffer. A new order to answer without oath must be by special application.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

Wednesday, May 29.

CRAMER v. HOSKINS.

Where the donee of a power of appointment executed such power by will, and afterwards made unattested alterations in the will, with a view to revoke and re-appoint, and the whole will had been admitted to probate—Held, to be a valid execution of the power.

The question in this case was, whether a power of appointment had been properly executed, and what the effect of it was. By an indenture of settlement, on the marriage of Mary Ann Pennington, the sum of 2,000*l.* was assigned to trustees, upon trust, to pay the interest to Mrs. Pennington for life, and after her decease, for her children; and in default of children, upon trust for such person or persons, and for such uses, intents, and purposes, and under and subject to such conditions and limitations as she, by her last will and testament, in writing, in the presence of, and attested by, two or more credible witnesses, should direct, dispose of, limit, or appoint; and, in default of appointment, upon trust for her legal personal representative. Mrs. Pennington, being thus both the donor and the donee of the power, made her will, which was duly executed by two witnesses, in conformity with the power of appointment; but upon her decease, the will was found to be altered in several places, and the alterations to be unattested. The alterations were, the substitution of a bequest of 1,000*l.* for 2,000*l.* and the change of the word "two" into "one," wherever it stood in the will. The will was admitted to probate, and referred to this Court to say what the effect of it was. The contest, therefore, was between the appointees of the power and the persons who would take in default of appointment, under the ultimate remainder to the legal personal representative, which being in the singular number, gave rise to the question as to who would be entitled under that term, and to the consideration, whether such term comprehended words of limitation or of purchase.

Romilly, Q.C. and Hall, for the appointees.

K. Parker, Q. C., Jenkins, and Gifford, contrà.

Cases cited: Kirke v. Kirke (4 Russ. 435); Onions v. Tyrer (1 P. W. 343); Hyde v. Mason (8 Vin. Abrid. tit. Devise); Ex parte The Earl of Ilchester (7 Ves. 348); Lock v. James (11 M. & W. 901).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—His Honour was of opinion that the will was properly made in execution of the power of appointment; that the testatrix had reserved to herself no power of revocation, although she had attempted to revoke and reappoint by the alterations she had made, but in which, however, she had failed; and therefore the will, as proved, must operate as a good and valid execution of the power.

BROUGHTON v. BROUGHTON.

Practice—24th Order of August 1841.

His Honour stated in this case, that the practice of the Court was, that the copy of the bill served under the 24th order, must be stated by affidavit to be a true copy without setting forth the mode of its verification.

Re POSTLETHWAITE.

In this case, which was reported in the LAW TIMES, p. 102, ante, and was heard on the last day of last Term, we regret that the confusion of the last day of Term prevented our reporter from catching the exact judgment of the Court. From the peculiar nature of the case, we hope that Mr. Postlethwaite has sustained no injury from the error. The rule was not absolute to strike him off the rolls, but the matter was referred to the Master, in consequence of strong affidavits denying the charges against him.

REG. v. WILLIAMS.

Costs of prosecution of indictment for nuisance.

Cole moved for a rule calling upon a gentleman of the name of Worthington to show cause why the side-bar rule in this case should not be discharged, or why the Master should not be directed, upon the taxation of costs on such rule, to allow to the said Worthington such costs only as he had really incurred in the prosecution of the said indictment. This was an indictment for a nuisance, which the defendant had removed by certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench, and upon the trial a verdict was found against the defendant, who was thereupon sentenced to two months' imprisonment. Upon a verdict being found against a defendant on such an indictment, a side-bar rule issues as a matter of course, under 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 11, s. 3, to tax the costs of the prosecution. But it was submitted, that although Worthington was the nominal prosecutor, he was not "the prosecutor and party grieved" within the meaning of that Act, inasmuch as he was only one of several who had subscribed together a sum of money for the purpose of conducting the prosecution, and was at any rate only entitled to so much of the costs as he had personally subscribed; citing Rex v. Dricsnap (1[illegible] East, 194); Rex v. Cook (1 Mo. & R. 526); Rex v. Dewhurst (5 B. & Ad. 405); Reg. v. —— (2 Q. B. 341).

The Court refused the rule in the alternative.

Rule nisi to set aside the side-bar rule.

Reg. v. Tollemach.

Mandamus to steward of manor to enter certificate of enfranchisement on the Court Rolls under 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 50, s. 3.

Bramwell showed cause against a rule calling on the defendant, who is the steward of the manor of Staines, to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding him to enter on the court rolls of the said manor an order of the Poor Law Commissioners for the enfranchisement of a part of the said manor, under 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 50, s. 3. It appeared that the guardians of the Staines Union had made an arrangement for the purchase of certain lands, which are a part of the manor, and were thereupon conveyed to a Mr. Sullivan, in trust for the guardians, but it did not appear that the lord was aware that Mr. Sullivan was a trustee. Subsequently, the Poor Law Commissioners, under the 3rd section, had ascertained the difference between the value of the land as freehold and the same as copyhold, including all fines, heriots, &c. The guardians thereupon tendered that amount to the lord of the manor, who refused it, and they then obtained the certificate of the Poor Law Commissioners, that all the requisites of the Act of Parliament had been complied with, and this mandamus was obtained in order to compel the steward to enter that certificate on the rolls of the manor. It was submitted that the guardians were not in a situation to require the lord to register the certificate of enfranchisement until they had tendered such a fine as they would be called upon to pay upon their own admittance, and that the lord was justified in refusing the money, as the enfranchisement would otherwise have taken place immediately upon the payment of it. 2ndly, that the rule asked too much, as it required the defendants not only to make the entry, but also to give a certificate on parchment; and next, that the lord had not sufficient notice of the valuation to enable him to appeal against it.

Kelly, in support of the rule, was stopped by the Court.

The Court held it clear that the guardians were entitled to the mandamus, as the Act of Parliament gave the Poor Law Commissioners the power to purchase and enfranchise lands in this way without payment of the fine, which was to be calculated in the difference in value of such lands as of customary tenure, and the freehold or fee-simple thereof, and was therefore clearly included in the amount tendered by the guardians.

Rule absolute.

Branscomb v. Scarborough.
Same v. Heath.

A judge has jurisdiction to order proceedings in an action upon a replevin bond to be stayed, upon payment of the penalty of the bond and the costs of the action, inasmuch as such an order is not an order for relief under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 23, but an order for payment of all that can be recovered under the bond.

M. Smith moved to rescind a judge's order directing that, on payment of the penalty of a certain bond and of the costs of the trial thereon, all proceedings in the cause should be stayed. This was an action upon a replevin bond, and it was submitted that the learned judge had not power to make such an order; but that, under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 23, it was the Court only which had jurisdiction to make orders in actions on such bonds; and that, at any rate, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the costs of certain interlocutory proceedings connected with the action, the amount of which would far exceed the penalty of the bond; citing Lord Lonsdale v. Church (2 T. R. 388); Wild v. Clankson (6 T. R. 303); Gore v. Wynne (Moo. & Mal. 393); Maclure v. Dunken (1 East, 436); Grant v. Grant (3 Sim. 341, S. C. 3 Russ. 598); Jeudwine v. Haggett (3 Sim. 129); Francis v. Wilson (Ry. & Mo. 105); Fetter v. Ardley (3 C. & P. 12).

The Court held that the learned judge had jurisdiction to make the order in question, which was not an order for relief under the statute, but an order to stay proceedings on payment of the full penalty contained in the bond, which was all that the defendant could possibly be called upon to pay.

Rule refused.

Reg. v. Justices of Cheshire.

This was a rule calling on certain justices of Cheshire to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding them to appoint separate overseers for the township of Little Barrow, in that county. Upon the 20th of April last, cause had been shewn against the rule (3 Law T. 74), when it was referred to the Master to report, whether any instance could be found of the appointment of separate overseers for Little Barrow and Great Barrow.

Townsend now moved that the Master's report be read, at the same time, stating he had been informed that Jervis wished to be heard upon the report itself, but submitting that he had no right to be heard.

The Court held that he had no right to be heard, as they had referred the matter to the Master for their own satisfaction, and therefore neither party ought to be allowed to come in and deny the correctness of the report. The report was then read, and Townsend prayed that the rule might be discharged.

Rule discharged.

Davies v. Clarke.

Nonsuit—Ambiguity—Bill of Exchange.

Thesiger, S. G. shewed cause against a rule to set aside a nonsuit, and for a new trial. This was an action by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, and the declaration alleged, that one John Hart made his bill of exchange and directed the same to the defendant, who thereupon accepted it, and that Hart then indorsed to the plaintiff.

Plea denying the acceptance. The instrument when produced on the trial appeared to be in the following form:—

"£100 "March 8th, 1838.

"12 months after date pay to me or to my order the sum of £100, value received.

"To Mr. Jno. Hart. "Jno. Hart.

"Accepted, H. J. Clarke, payable at 319, Strand, London."

The learned judge at the trial considered there was a variance, and nonsuited the plaintiff. It was submitted that the learned judge was right in so doing, as this was not a bill of exchange, but a promissory note: citing, Polhill v. Walter (3 B. & Ad. 114); Gray v. Milner (3 B. Moore, 90).

Petersdorff, contra, submitted that this being an instrument in an ambiguous form, it was capable of being treated either as a bill of exchange or a promissory note, at the option of the holder: citing Penny v. Innes (1 C. M. & R. 439); Jackson v. Hudson (2 Camp. R. 447).

The Court held this instrument was [illegible] exchange, but a promissory note, as against the defendant, because there was no acceptance of the person to whom it was addressed, viz. John Hart; that at any rate it was addressed to another party than the defendant, and they could not consider him estopped by having put his name to an instrument which was not addressed to him.

Rule discharged.

Dixon v. Wing.

New trial—Evidence.

Baines and Tomlinson shewed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit, on the ground of want of stamp upon certain accounts; or for a new trial, upon the ground of the rejection of evidence. This was an action by a coach-proprietor against his co-proprietor for the amount of certain monthly balances of accounts. Upon the trial it appeared that up to the 5th of July, 1842, the plaintiff and another proprietor horsed the coach between them; that on that day, the latter sold a part of his interest to the defendant, upon certain terms contained in a written agreement of that date, which, although not seen by the plaintiff, was communicated to him, and on the terms of which the business was afterwards carried on. This was offered in evidence by the defendant, but the learned judge considered that as it could not bind the plaintiff, it was therefore inadmissible in evidence against him, and rejected it. Two other objections were raised, viz., first, that the accounts in question being made out by a settling clerk, authorized by both parties to do so, were in the nature of awards and required award stamps; and secondly, that the action was not maintainable, on the ground of its being an action at law by one partner against his co-partner before any final adjustment of the accounts. Cases cited: Brierly v. Cripps (7 C. & P. 709); Fromont v. Coupland (2 Bing. 170); Carr v. Smith (7 Jur. 600); Sibray v. White (1 M. & W. 435); Rackstraw v. Imber (Holt N. P. C. 368); Wray v. Milestone (5 M. & W. 21).

Hoggins, in support of the rule, was stopped by the Court on the first point.

The Court held that the agreement ought to have been received, as it probably contained the terms on which they agreed to carry on their business, and the authority by which the clerk made out the accounts.

Rule absolute.

Saturday, May 25.

King v. Birch and Another, Assignees, &c.

In a feigned issue, the successful party is not entitled to take the money out of court after verdict, and before judgment signed. Quære, whether a bill of exceptions lies upon a feigned issue which is not directed for the purpose of informing the conscience of the Court?

Pashley shewed cause against a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why two sums of money paid into court in pursuance of a judge's order should not be paid out to the defendant.

Two actions had been brought by the plaintiff against the defendants, and certain sums of money paid into court in pursuance of a judge's order; and a feigned issue had thereupon been ordered, to ascertain whether or not there had been a trading, in which the plaintiff in the present action had been made defendant. The issue was tried at the sittings after Hilary Term 1843, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiffs, the present defendants; but the present plaintiffs, the then defendants, tendered a bill of exceptions to the ruling of the learned judge, which had not yet been sealed, but was expected to be ready in a few days. There might be a doubt whether or not a writ of error would lie in such a case. It was submitted, however, that it would, as it was different from an issue directed by the Court to inform the conscience of the Court. But whether or not that was so, the rule could not be made absolute until judgment had been signed.

Humfrey, in support of the rule, contended that it was the regular practice in issues under the Interpleader Act, that as soon as ever the verdict is entered, the successful party applies to the Court for leave to take the money out of court, as in the present case; citing Bland v. Delano (6 Dowl. 293).

The Court held, that although such might be the usual practice if the point is not taken, yet that if it is taken, according to Cooper v. Lead-smelting Company (9 Bing. 634), it must prevail; and, therefore, they would enlarge the rule so as to give the plaintiff time to sign judgment, and the defendant opportunity of getting his bill of exceptions sealed by the learned judge who tried the cause, otherwise it would not operate as a stay of execution, if judgment should be signed before it was sealed.

Rule enlarged.

Ferguson v. Clayworth and Wife.

Arrest of judgment—Slander.

E. James moved for a rule to arrest the judgment given for the plaintiff. This was an action of slander brought by plaintiff for slanderous words spoken by the female defendant to one of the plaintiff's daughters. The words complained of were as follows:—"Mrs. Ferguson is a notorious thief, she has brought up her family to theft, and all crimes that are bad; the whole family are notorious thieves; another of her daughters robbed us a fortnight ago, and the father lives on the plunder." The objection was, that inasmuch as the slander ought to impute some crime that is punishable, there was no cause of action on the face of the declaration, as it imputed no crime to the father, who was the only plaintiff, unless it were the allegation that he participated in the theft, knowing it to have been committed; citing Slowman v. Dutton (10 Bing. 402); Tomlinson v. Brittlebank (4 B. & Ad. 630); Esdaile v. Russell (12 L. J. C. P. 4).

The Court held it actionable on the part of the father to say that "the whole family were thieves," particularly as it appeared that the family only consisted of the plaintiff, his wife, and daughters.

Rule refused.

Herbert v. Sayer.

Amendment of record.

Atkinson moved for a rule calling on the defendant to shew cause why the judgment in this case should not be amended by inserting on the record an order of Williams, J., enabling the defendant to withdraw the first five pleas to the declaration, and for leave for the plaintiff to enter a retraxit in pursuance of that order. This was an action brought by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, to which the defendant pleaded seven pleas, the first five containing issues in fact, the 6th and 7th containing issues in law. The 6th plea referred in general terms to the 4th, referring to, but not setting out, an agreement contained in that plea. In making up the demurrer-books on the 6th plea, it was requisite to set out the 4th plea for the purpose of making the 6th intelligible. Upon the argument on the demurrer to the 6th plea, this Court gave judgment for the defendant, who thereupon took out a summons to withdraw the first five pleas. An order of Williams, J. was thereupon made to that effect, costs were taxed, and a sum awarded in favour of the defendant, and an action for the amount commenced in the Court of Common Pleas. Upon the demurrer to the 7th plea, this Court gave judgment for the plaintiff. A writ of error having been brought upon the judgment of this Court, upon the 6th plea, the Exchequer Chamber reversed that judgment, and gave judgment for the plaintiff, who thereupon applied to sign judgment and issue execution thereon, but was informed that he could not do so, as there was an issue in fact still remaining undisposed of upon the record. It was submitted that the defendant himself having withdrawn the 4th plea, although the plaintiff had re-entered it for the purpose of explaining the 6th plea, he ought not to be prejudiced by so doing, as it was a mere transcript of the demurrer-book, in which that plea had been entered, not as a separate issue, but merely to render the 6th plea intelligible.

The COURT held, there could be no entry of the judge's order on the record, suggesting that the proper course to adopt would have been to have moulded the plea itself, by putting in a part of the 4th plea, so as to make the 6th intelligible; but not having done so, but left an issue of a fact upon the record, going to the whole cause of action, that must be disposed of before the plaintiff could have judgment.

WAKEFIELD v. NEWBON.

(Argued April 15.)

An action for money had and received will lie to recover back money which a mortgagor has paid to the solicitor of a mortgagee, in respect of charges for work done by the defendant for the plaintiff, in consequence of the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, and which the plaintiff has paid under protest, on the defendant's refusal to give up the title-deeds upon the repayment of the mortgage-money, and the reconveyance of the estate.

Knowles and Miller shewed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and enter a nonsuit, or to reduce the damages.

This was an action for money had and received, to recover back from the defendant, who was the solicitor to the mortgagee of certain property mortgaged by the plaintiff, certain sums of money which the plaintiff had been compelled to pay the defendant, in order to get the morgage-deeds back, upon the mortgage-money being paid off, and the estate reconveyed. The verdict had been given for the whole of the money which had been paid. One of the charges in the defendant's bill was a charge for the reconveyance of the property; but the remaining part consisted of items arising from the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, and the defendant had refused to deliver up the deeds until the whole amount was paid.

It was submitted, that he had no right to detain them upon any such ground, and therefore the action for money had and received was maintainable in the same manner as where money is obtained by duress of goods; that the plaintiff was at any rate entitled to keep his verdict for the sum of 6*l.* 11s. 10d. the amount of the difference between the [illegible] which the defendant might possibly have a right to charge, and the other sums which he had compelled the plaintiff to pay; and that a nonsuit could not therefore be entered even if the damages were reduced.

Platt, in support of the rule.

Cases cited: Hollis v. Claridge (4 Taunt. 807); Parker v. Great Western Railway Company (13 L. J. C. P.); Skeate v. Beale (3 P. & D. 597); Ashmole v. Wainwright (2 Q. B.; S. C. 11 L. J. Q. B.).

The COURT held that the case of Hollis v. Claridge (4 Taunt. 807) decided that a mortgagee, by handing over a mortgage-deed to his attorney, did not thereby create any new lien on them in favour of his attorney; that Parker v. Great Western Railway Company (13 L. J. C. P.) had established, that money obtained by duress of goods might be recovered in an action for money had and received by the person on whom the duress was exercised, which was wholly different from the case where parties come to a settlement, in consequence of which one of them erroneously pays money without being liable to pay it. That the payment in the present instance was not voluntary, but made under protest, and therefore there was sufficient privity between the parties to maintain the action, because there is always a privity in law, and an implied promise thereby created, in every case in which the plaintiff is forced to pay money to get back property that is wrongfully withheld from him.

Rule discharged.

FIFE v. BOUSFIELD.

Penal action—Venue.

This was an action brought by the party aggrieved for the recovery of the penalty imposed by the 1st Phil. & M. c. 12, for taking more than fourpence for one whole distress. The plaintiff obtained the verdict; and a motion to arrest the judgment had been made, on the ground that the venue had been laid in Surrey, although the distress appeared to have been made, and actually was made, in Middlesex; and by 18 Eliz. c. 5, and 21 James, c. 4, the venue ought to be laid in the county wherein the offence was committed.

The COURT now discharged the rule, on the ground that neither of the statutes applied to a party aggrieved, but only to actions brought by common informers.

Rule discharged.

MARRIOTT v. MACAULAY.

(Argued May 3, antè, p. 100.)

This was an action brought by one attorney to recover from another the amount of the disbursements made by the former, in opposing a projected extension of the Birmingham Railway, and in endeavouring to establish a company to be called the Churnett Valley Railway Company. Two questions were raised: first, whether on the facts, the credit was given to the defendant or his principal; and, secondly, whether proof should be given of the statements in an allegation set forth by way of inducement to the first count.

The COURT held that the plaintiff was warranted in inferring that the defendant held himself out as liable to the plaintiff for the work done, and that the statements, set forth by way of inducement to the allegation, were sufficiently proved, and gave judgment for the plaintiff. Judgment for the plaintiff.

DOE dem. MARQUIS OF ANGLESEA v. THE CHURCHWARDENS OF RUGELEY.

SPECIAL CASE.

The case stated a lease by the lessor of the plaintiff to the defendants, of certain land for the purpose of erecting a workhouse. The lease contained a covenant "not to convert, and not to employ the profits to any use or purpose whatsoever;" and a clause of forfeiture in the event of the covenant being broken. In consequence of the Poor Law Commissioners having removed the paupers to the union, the parish officers had shut up the workhouse and let the land, and the present action was commenced in consequence.

The COURT now held that there had been no breach of covenant, but a substantial performance according to its terms, inasmuch as the occupation might be resumed, and no precise date could be alleged for the breach of the covenant; the defendant was entitled to the judgment of the Court.

DOE dem. EARL OF EGREMONT v. STEPHENS.

(Argued Jan. 26.)

SPECIAL CASE.

The special case stated that the late Earl of Egremont, who died in 1837, was tenant for life of four tenements under a will of a former Earl of Egremont, who died in 1763, giving a power to the respective persons who should have an estate for life actually in possession in the said premises to demise the same, for any number of years not exceeding twenty-one, [illegible] rent; and a further power to lease for one, two, or three lives any part usually so letten, at the usual rents, heriots, suits, to the lord's mill, &c. with the usual covenants, clauses of re-entry for non-payment of rent, non performance of covenants, and so that there should be no exemption from waste. The late earl, in the year 1828, had granted a lease of the four farms in question to the defendant, and this action was brought by the present earl, the remainder-man, on the ground that the lease was not in accordance with the powers.

Erle, for the plaintiff, submitted that there were four objections:—1st. That the lease comprised lands within the power, and lands not within it; citing Doe dem. Douglas v. Locke (2 Ad. & E. 747); Lord Mountjoy's case (5 Cr. R. 3); Co. Lit. 44 b.; Doe dem. Bartlett v. Rendle (3 M. & Sel. 69); Doe dem. Williams v. Matthews (5 B. & Ad. 298). 2ndly. That it comprised parcels of tenements not usually letten; citing Sugden on Powers, 433, 6th ed.; 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 41; Orby v. Lord Mohun (2 Vern. 542); Doe dem. Shrewsbury v. Wilson (5 B. & A. 363); Doe dem. Vaughan v. Meyler (2 M. & Sel. 273). 3rdly. That the lessee was dispunishable for waste; citing Com. Dig. Copyholds, M. 3; Cole v. Green (1 Liv. 309); City of London v. Grimes (Cro. Jac. 180); 2 Roll. Ab. "Waste," 815, pl. 17, 30; Simmons v. Newton (7 Bing. 640); Doe dem. Lord Darlington v. Bent (5 B. & C. 855). 4thly. That there was an omission of the covenant to grind at the lord's mill; citing Doe dem. Douglas v. Locke (2 A. & E. 735); Com. Dig. Covenants in Law.

Kelly, for the defendant, citing Doe v. Wilson (5 B. & A. 363), and Doe v. Earl of Burlington (2 B. & Ad. 517).

The COURT held that, as to two of the farms, the plaintiff must fail, as it did not appear what estate the late Lord Egremont had in them; but with regard to the other two, he was entitled to succeed on the first and fourth objections.

Judgment for the lessor of the plaintiff.

DOE dem. EARL OF EGREMONT v. BURROUGHS.

This was a case similar to the last. The objections were, first, that there was no covenant to do suit of court; or no condition of re-entry for breach of covenant to do suit of court; secondly, that, under the covenant to do repairs, there was no such condition of re-entry as made the covenant a usual one.

Erle, for the lessor of the plaintiffs.

Cockburn, for the defendant, citing Smith v. Doe dem. Earl of Jersey (2 B. & B. 290).

The COURT held the lease bad on the second ground.

REG. v. SHIPSTON-UPON-STOUR.

Examination—Jurat.

This Court does not feel bound to send a case back to the sessions merely because the parties choose to insert a clause that it shall be sent back in case the Court decides in a certain manner.

This was an appeal touching the removal of Sarah Sutton, single woman, and her illegitimate child, William, aged about seven weeks, from the parish of Shipston-upon-Stour, in the county of Worcester, to the parish of Atherstone-upon-Stour, in the county of Warwick. The examinations sent to the appellant parish were as follows:

"The examination of Sarah Sutton (the pauper), taken upon oath before us, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the county of Worcester, who upon her oath saith, 'I am about 24 years of age, and have not, to the best of my knowledge and belief, gained any settlement in my own right. About seven weeks ago I was delivered of a male bastard child in the parish of Shipston-upon-Stour, which has since been christened William.

"The mark ⋈ of Sarah Sutton.

"Taken and sworn before us this 31st of December, 1842, "WILLIAM DICKINS,

"H. TOWNSEND."

Then immediately followed, upon the same sheet of paper, the examination of Patience Randall, the wife of Thomas Randall, of Shipston-upon-Stour, in the county of Worcester, labourer, taken this 31st day of December, 1842, who upon her oath saith, that 'the pauper, Sarah Sutton, is my daughter, that she was born at the parish of Atherstone-upon-Stour, in the county of Warwick, and is about the age of 24 years, and is illegitimate, having been born before I was married.'

"The mark ⋈ of Patience Randall.

"Taken and sworn this 31st day of Dec. 1842, before us, "WILLIAM DICKINS,

"H. TOWNSHEND."

These two examinations filled the second and third pages of the sheet of paper, the first page of which was occupied by the notice of chargeability and order of removal. There were twelve grounds of appeal, but those upon which the Court of Quarter Sessions grounded their decision were as follows:—1st. That the said examinations are defective and insufficient in this, that it is nowhere therein alleged, nor does it appear, that the said Sarah Sutton is not a widow, or that she never acquired any settlement by marriage. 2nd. That the examination of the said S. Sutton contains no legal evidence shewing that she, or her said child, are or either of them is, settled in our said parish of Atherstone-upon Stour. 3rd. That it does not appear in and by the said examinations, or any part thereof, that the examination of the said Patience Randall was taken before two of her Majesty's justices of the peace of the county of Worcester, touching the place of the legal settlement of the said S. Sutton, or before the justices who signed the said order of removal. 4th. That the said order of removal, as regards the said William, is bad and erroneous in this, that it adjudicates as to his settlement in our said parish of Atherstone-upon-Stour absolutely, whereas it should have adjudged and ordered, that as an illegitimate child he should have and follow the settlement of his mother, the said Sarah Sutton, until he should attain the age of 16 only.

The Court of Quarter Sessions quashed the order, upon the objections contained in the grounds of appeal, subject to the above case, whereby it was stated to have been agreed between the parties that if the Court were of opinion that the sessions were wrong in admitting each of the three first objections, the order was to be quashed, and if they ought not to have admitted the fourth, the case was then to be sent down again to the sessions to be heard on the merits.

Before the case was gone into, DENMAN, C.J. observed that the Court did not consider themselves bound to send a case back to the sessions merely because the parties chose to insert a clause to that effect.

Selfe and Beadon, in support of the order of sessions, submitted that the order of the sessions was correct, because the word single-woman did not exclude the possibility of her having been married. 2nd. That there is no distinction between orders and examinations, as to the strictness of construction required, and therefore the examination of Patience Randall was bad, because the parties before whom it was taken were nowhere described in that examination to be justices of the peace, and did not appear to be the same who made the order: citing Rex v. Inhabitants of Stepney (Bur. S.C.); Reg. v. Silkstone (2 G. & D. 396); and 3rdly, that the adjudication as to the child, should have been that he was to have his mother's settlement until he should attain the age of 16 years, or until he should have gained a settlement of his own, according to terms of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 71.

Whitmore and Huddleston, contra, were stopped by the Court as to the third point. They then submitted, that it could not be requisite to negative every settlement a pauper might by possibility acquire, and it was quite sufficient to show a primâ facie settlement, as in the present instance, by birth, citing

Rex v. Wicksley (2 Bott. P. L. 13); Rex v. St. Mary, Leicester (3 A. & E. 644); and that, with regard to the second objection, that it was not necessary that it should appear on the copy of the examinations sent with the pauper, that the examinations had been taken before two justices, but that if that was necessary, it was clear that it had been so taken in the present case; because here was identity of names and identity of dates; and it would follow there must be identity of person; that the examinations were sent on the same piece of paper as the order, and therefore it did appear that the magistrates who took the one examination were the same as those who took the other, and who made the order.

By the COURT.—It has been stated that it is not material whether an exact copy of the examinations be sent or not; but we think it much safer, and better, to send an exact copy of the whole, and we must, therefore, take that what was sent was called a copy, and was a true copy. But suppose the jurat struck out and omitted, the second examination would still appear to be an examination, but it would be one on which it would not be possible to assign perjury; and, assuming it to stand alone, it would appear not to have been taken before justices of the peace, but before two individuals, and therefore would be bad.

Order of Sessions confirmed.

BURGESS v. BOTLEFFUR.

A demand upon one overseer for moneys recovered under the 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, is a demand upon all.

The term conviction means actual judgment against the parties, and when under the above statute, parties are proceeded against, and a verdict obtained during the time of one set of overseers, unless there is judgment their successors will be liable for the reward given by the statute.

Byles, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be entered, or a new trial had. The declaration was in debt for 20*l.* forfeited by the defendant under an Act for the better preventing persons keeping gaming and other disorderly houses.

Plea—nil debet.

The 25th Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 5, was passed to encourage prosecutions against persons keeping houses of that character. In the present case, three persons having been prosecuted for keeping disorderly houses at the Middlesex Sessions, pleaded guilty. The appearances were respited to receive judgment, and in the meantime the nuisance was abated. On coming up to receive judgment, they were fined one shilling each. This was in June 1843, in April of the same year, the old overseers went out of office, and in November there was a demand, by the plaintiff, on the present overseers, the defendant and another, for 10*l.* The demand was served on both personally. There was no point as to the service of notice; the only question was, ought they to be served or not? The action was brought on the 2nd of December; and on the 16th of January, certain admissions were entered into to satisfy the statute. It was objected at the trial that the demand should have been made on their predecessors in office, as also that the churchwardens should have had a demand made upon them as well as the defendant. The Act allows all reasonable expenses to be paid to the constable or other prosecutor, in case the party prosecuted shall be convicted. If by the word conviction is meant judgment, and judgment did not take place until the time of the present overseers, there is an end of the case. Conviction in this case means conviction followed and ratified by the judgment; and the overseers for the time being are the parties to be charged. (Sutton v. Bishop, 4 Burr. 2283; 1 Wm. Black. 665; 2 Geo. 2, c. 24, s. 8; Lee v. Gansell, Cowp. 1; 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 11; Reg. v. Ackroyd, 1 Car. & Kir. 158.) In the last case it was expressly laid down by the learned judge, Cresswell, that a certificate of conviction which does not state that any judgment was given, was not sufficient. If, as is contended, conviction means verdict or nil dicit, where the proceedings are removed by certiorari, unless the expenses are recovered during the time of the former overseers, they cannot be recovered at all. All the books shew that such moneys are to be paid by the then overseers. (4 Chit. Burns, 1 edit. Poor; Pybus v. Mitford, 2 Leviaz, 77.) With respect to the term "forthwith," all that the Act requires is, that the thing to be done shall be done in reasonable time. The word overseers does not mean churchwardens. The 43 Eliz. constitutes them only overseers ex officio. (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 28; Street Act, 57 Geo. 3; 59 Geo. 3, c. 12.) Public officers are not to be held liable without express words. With respect to notice, notice to one is notice to all. (Rex v. Justices of Warwickshire, 6 A. & E.; Clark v. Rice, 1 B. & Ald. 694.)

Channell, Serjt. (V. Lee with him), contrà.—The distinction between verdict and judgment is a matter of legal cognizance. (4 Black. 325.) The inhabitants are not the prosecutors in the indictment. The constables or overseers must prosecute; they are bound to give material evidence of such offences as are charged. If they give material evidence of such offences, and a verdict of guilty has passed, from that time they have nothing to do with the matter. If the Court never determined it, this Court could not take judicial notice of that fact, and there would be no mode by which the inhabitants could obtain the reward under the statute. The statute does not point out any duty to be done by the constable after trial. The duties close with the period when evidence has been given; and that should be the dividing line, making the overseers for the time liable. Clarke v. Rice shews that the defendant is not liable. There had not been a proper demand made, and the defendant was not responsible. A demand had not been made upon the churchwardens. It was objected that the demand had not been made upon all, but a portion only. A demand upon one overseer is not a demand upon the other, and there could be no default by one unless default by each.

TINDAL, C. J. delivering judgment.—This case comes before us on a motion. First, that the defendant may enter a nonsuit upon certain grounds reserved at the trial; and secondly, for a new trial on the ground that there was no evidence of any material allegation contained in the declaration. The grounds of nonsuit are three in number: first, the action was brought against the wrong overseers. The offence which is the subject of the action being charged against the overseers of 1842, whereas the overseers of 1843 were made the present defendants. The second ground was, that a demand had been made against these particular defendants, by which the parties were misled, and that the demand was an improper one. Thirdly, that the churchwardens as well as the overseers were liable. It appears to me the first is the main and principal ground. The action is brought under the 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 5, against the overseers of the parish of Paddington; the demand being for 10*l.* reward given in that section for putting down disorderly houses. The overseers neglected or refused, whereby an additional sum by way of penalty was incurred. Although the subsequent Act, the 52 Geo. 3, puts it in the power of parish officers, if they think proper, to indict disorderly houses by summons before the magistrate, yet it allows the law to go on exactly as it did before, where, as it appears in this case, in the exercise of their discretion, they do not interfere. The case must stand as before the Act was brought into operation. The question which arises on the first point is, who were the overseers at the time of the conviction? The information was in 1842, and at that time the parties were brought before the quarter sessions, and it appears pleaded guilty. On the part of the defendant, it is contended that the plea of guilty is the conviction intended by the Act. On the other side, it is argued that the plea of guilty does not amount to a conviction within the meaning of the statute, but is afterwards, when the party is brought up for judgment and is ordered to pay a shilling by way of fine. The word conviction is verbum equivocum: used in a strictly legal sense, it means conviction on a judgment of the Court. In this case it would open the door to fraud if the mere conviction of a jury were sufficient to satisfy the Act; or a mere conviction by confession without calling on the party at all. I therefore think the word conviction means actual judgment against the parties, and as that took place within the time of the present overseers, the proper overseers are made defendants in this case. The defendant was not in a condition to raise the second objection, that not being made at the trial. The third objection is, that the churchwardens are, by virtue of the 43 Eliz., to all intents and purposes overseers: it seems unnecessary here to determine whether such is the case or not. From the construction of the statute it appears that it is not necessary to serve all the overseers with a demand; some might be absent from the parish, and it would, in fact, be throwing an unnecessary burden upon the prosecutor. I find the words of the statute are, the said "overseers and each of them;" that is, "after demand," if the other overseer paid the money, that would be an answer to the action. These three objections go for a nonsuit, the other for a new trial. It is said there is no evidence; the constable was the prosecutor, and the party ought to have a new trial. There was some evidence to go to the jury. It was true, Wontner, the attorney, said he looked for funds from the inhabitants, but Wallis entered into recognizances to prosecute, and swears he was himself the prosecutor. Suppose the parish refuse to put down disorderly houses, it is better that the constable should take it up. He is very often a poor man, and how can he go on without the aid and assistance of the inhabitants of the parish? I cannot say there is a total absence of evidence to send the case down to a new trial. But upon the whole, I think the rule must be discharged.

(a) It is due to the defendants to state, that the whole of the amount found to be due to the plaintiffs by the Master, who had reduced the costs one-fourth on taxation, was paid before argument, the subject-matter in dispute being only the costs of the action.

The other judges delivered judgment to the same effect.

ELLIOTT v. ALLEN and OTHERS.

Misdirection—Separate Damages.

Shee, Serjeant, moved for a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be had, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence, misdirection, and excessive damages; or why a nonsuit should not be entered on the ground of notice not being given. The action was in trespass, in which plaintiff complained the defendants assaulted him. One defendant allowed judgment to go by default. The other had pleaded not guilty, and a special plea that the defendant was a lunatic, and likely to injure himself. 4thly, leave and license. The misdirection consisted in telling the jury they could not assess separate damages.

Cases cited: Beck's Medical Juris. 429; Dagueseau, case in France, Adele; Austin v. Wither (Cro. Eliz. 860); Sir John Heyden's case (11 Coke, p. 8.); Brownlow v. Goldsboro' (1 Bulstrode, 233); Sampson v. Crampfield (1 Bulstrode); Rodney v. Strode (3 Mod. 101); Blair v. Ward (Cro. Car. 54); Hill v. Goodchild and Another (5 Burr. 2790).

TINDAL, C. J.—It appears right to grant the rule, 1st, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence, in respect of one, two, or more of the defendants; and, 2ndly, on the ground of the damages being excessive. I am always slow to alter a verdict on that ground, but it is right it should be brought before the Court, in order that they may consider whether it should be submitted to another tribunal or not. Upon the ground of the nonsuit, the rule will also be granted. But I do not think you are entitled to a rule upon the ground of misdirection, because the facts of the case appear to bring it within the rule that you have laid down, namely, where separate trespasses have been committed by several defendants the jury may be empowered to assess different amounts of damages. Then it appears to me, the defendants, who have pleaded guilty, were guilty of the same trespasses, or not guilty at all; [illegible] you are entitled to complain on the ground of the two allegations in the plea having been left distinctly, because it was competent for the party who dissented from it to have put the plaintiff in a position to contend before me that I should leave that one point. Therefore, on the limited grounds let the rule go. Rule nisi.

Saturday, May 25.

WALTON v. RUMSEY.

New trial—Inadmissibility of evidence—Nonsuit.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be had, or why, in the event of certain documents being declared inadmissible in evidence, there should not be a nonsuit. The action was for money had and received by the defendant to the use of the plaintiff. The only plea, was never indebted. Rule refused.

IMMERSON v. BROWN.

Service of a writ of summons in an unsealed envelope will be held good service where the affidavit in which a rule nisi is founded does not explicitly deny notice of the service.

Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the appearance entered by the plaintiff for the defendant should not be set aside, and why the defendant should not pay the costs of the action and of this application, upon the ground that the defendant was not served with process and copy of the writ of summons. The action is in covenant. The writ was served by a clerk of the attorney of the plaintiff upon Brown, enclosed in an unsealed unvelope, by laying it on a table in the bedroom of Brown; but it was alleged that the service was made without notice, or without his being aware of the action commenced against him, and that at the time the summons was served he was not made acquainted with the contents of the envelope. (Morris v. Cole, 2 Dowl. 79.)

Byles, Serjt.—The rule should be made absolute. True, he had notice of the proceedings, but he had no notice until he was served with notice of the declaration. There was no notice before the appearance, and he knew nothing of the writ, and nothing was said at the time of the service what was in the envelope. The question is, whether that is a good service.

TINDAL, C. J.—There are none so blind as those that won't see. If a man, having an opportunity of seeing, wilfully exclude it from his notice, that is a virtual notice. It turns very much on a question of will and disposition. He has not in his affidavits explicitly denied notice of the service.

Rule discharged with costs.

—— v. WOODS.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the defendant should not add certain pleas. Rule nisi.

BROOKS v. HODGSON.

When the endorsement on a writ of execution corresponds with the judgment rule, but there is a variance in the body of the writ, the variance is fatal, and cannot be amended.

Sir T. Wilde shewed cause against a rule obtained by Channell, Serjt. In this case judgment was signed on the 29th Feb. for 1,459*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*. The judgment rule bears the only date of Feb. 29, 1844, and, after the usual recital, concludes, "which said debt and damages amount in the whole to 1,390*l*. 15*s*. 6*d*." In this case the judgment is founded on a judge's order. It is doubtful from the terms whether it was an order to sign judgment at all. The demand in the action was 4,800*l*. The damages are made at the conclusion to amount to 1,390*l*. 15*s*. 6*d*. On the writ it purports to be for a judgment recovered for 4,800*l*. and 6*l*. 17*s*. costs. The endorsement on the writ of execution corresponds with the judgment rule, but the body of the writ does not. The judgment rule cannot be amended so as to make it conformable to the order, inasmuch as it is signed for a totally different sum.

VALLANCE and BIERLY v. DUKE OF BRUNSWICK.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for an order calling upon the Duke of Brunswick to pay the sum of 788*l*. 18*s*. 8*d*. The present application was made for an order to pay the sum found by the master.

REYNOLDS v. BARFORD.

When the sheriff enters under a fi. fa. and, upon notice, pays rent due, but which, in his return, he does not distinctly state is due at the time of the seizure: Held, that the return is not thereby bad for uncertainty.

Byles, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Channell, Serjt. why the return to a writ of fi. fa. should not be set aside, and why the sheriff should not pay the plaintiff the costs of the application. The seizure of the goods was made on the 1st of February by the late sheriff of Surrey. A claim was put in by one Clark, and an order made by Coltman, J. that the sheriff be discharged, and the goods seized under the fi. fa. be sold, the proceeds to be paid into court, unless, within a week, satisfaction be given to the Master. An issue to be tried at the next Surrey Sessions. The question to be, whether the goods are the goods of the claimant? The claimant did not proceed to trial, and another order was made on the 13th of April to the sheriff to pay the money to the execution creditor. On the same day, the 13th of April, the plaintiff obtained an order for the sheriff to return the writ, which was accordingly done. The return stated the proceeds after sale to be 22*l*. 10*s*. out of which 11*l*. 5*s*. was paid for rent due, leaving a residue, after payment of expenses of levy, &c., of 4*l*. 5*s*. ready to be paid over. The objection appeared to be twofold,—first, that the rent deducted was not due at the time of the seizure; and next, that the return was not in form, if it were. It is not disputed the sheriff cannot deduct the rent due while he is in possession. A notice had been received from the landlord, from which it was clear the rent was due. The sheriff is a mere stake-holder, acting under the direction of the Court, and has no interest in the matter. The plaintiff had no right to question the accuracy of this return now. The first order is not discharged at all, quoad the sheriff. (Hepworth v. Sanderson, 8 Bing. 19.)

Channell, Serjt. contrà.—No receipt is set out, nor has the sheriff sworn his belief that the rent was due. The sheriff did not sell the goods at that time. The return is bad on the face of it. The sheriff is an officer of the Court, and he makes such a return as if untrue; in point of fact, gives the execution creditor an action against him for a false return. He is bound to make such a return as will be distinct. He is bound to say whether the rent was due. The form of the return does not comply with the statute, nor with two out of three of the precedents in Tidd. It would be a dangerous principle to say the sheriff was at liberty to make a return, meaning one of two things (1 B. & Ald. 190). There was no reason why the sheriff should be allowed to make an uncertain return.

TINDAL, C. J. delivering the judgment of the Court, after reciting the facts of the case, went on to say, that the principal objection was, that the return did not distinctly shew, that the rent paid by the sheriff to the landlord was due at the time of the seizure, and that it was consistent with the return that the rent was due at that time. It was urged that there must be a reasonable intendment in support of the sheriff's return, and that there was no authority for a rule of such extreme rigour as that pressed against the sheriff; cases were not wanting to shew that a reasonable intendment, as in pleading, must be exercised. The return supposed payment of rent, due to the landlord, and it must be intended to be due to the landlord at the time of seizure. If the rent was not due, and it was paid by the sheriff, an action would lie for a false return. With regard to the possession-money, the sheriff was entitled to claim a part; and it did not appear he had misconducted himself in either case.

Rule discharged.

CURLING v. ROBERTSON.

On the taxation of costs, the Master will not allow the costs of a witness who has been examined before one of the Masters for the purposes of the trial, but who is not called by the party examining.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the Master should not be required to review his taxation of the defendant's costs.

The action had been tried at the last sittings after Hilary term. The Master proceeded to tax the defendant's costs, and, among the witnesses, was one Vertue, who was examined here before the Master; counsel had advised he was a necessary witness. The trial had been postponed on two occasions on his account, and the other party had joined in the examination. Upon a consultation held before the trial, it was not thought expedient to call him; and the Master declined to allow the costs of that witness. He stands in the situation of a witness, who is bona fide on the successful party's brief. It was quite clear he was bona fide on the brief of the defendants.

CRESSWELL.—By a compulsory process of the Court you ascertain what his evidence will be, and then you do not like him.

TINDAL, C. J.—You say you examined him bonâ fide, and then you rejected him. I do not think the Master is wrong. Rule refused.

Wednesday, May 29.

REDMOND v. SMITH and ANOTHER.

A plea to a declaration on a policy of insurance, traversing an averment in the declaration, that the policy was effected by one A B, as the agent of the plaintiff, is bad, as amounting to the general issue.

A plea to the same declaration, that there was no written contract between the master and crew of the vessel pursuant to 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 19, s. 2, is bad in substance, the want of such contract not making the voyage illegal, nor rendering the vessel unseaworthy for want of a proper crew.

Declaration was in assumpsit on a policy of assurance for 3,000*l*. effected by the plaintiff, by his agents, Messrs. H. and J. Johnston, with the defendants, on a steam-vessel, lost, or not lost, from Liverpool to London. The declaration contained an averment, that the policy was made by H. and J. Johnston, as the agents of and for the use and benefit of the plaintiff, and that H. and J. Johnston received the order for and effected the said policy as such agents of the plaintiff, of all which the defendants had due notice. To this declaration, the defendants, amongst other pleas, pleaded, secondly, that the policy of assurance was not made by H. and J. Johnston, as the agents of the plaintiff, or on his account, or for his, the plaintiff's, use and benefit; and that H. and J. Johnston did not receive the order for, or effect the said policy of, assurance as such agent in the declaration mentioned, concluding to the country; and, sixthly, that the policy was made, and the vessel lost, after the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 19; that the vessel was a British registered ship, exceeding the burthen of 80 tons; that the crew consisted of 20 seamen, and 20 other persons, not being apprentices, and one master, and that at the time of sailing, there was not any written agreement with the master and seamen, or any or either of them, specifying the wages to be paid, &c. as required by the second section of the above Act, and that therefore the voyage was wholly illegal, concluding with a verification.

The plaintiff demurred specially to the second plea, on the ground of its amounting to the plea of non-assumpsit; and to the 6th plea, the plaintiff demurred generally.

Channell, Serjt. for the plaintiff.—The second plea is bad, as amounting to non-assumpsit, on the authority of the case Sutherland v. Pratt (2 Dowl. N.S. 813, & 11 Mee. & W. 296); this was no contract with the plaintiff, unless through the agency of H. & J. Johnston. Under non-assumpsit the plaintiff would have to prove, not merely that the policy was effected, but also the agency of Johnston. [COLTMAN, J.—Suppose the case of a policy effected by a known agent, without a previous order, but which is afterwards ratified by the principal, independent of 28 Geo. 3, c. 56, this is good; but is not this a statutable defence, and must therefore be specially pleaded?] The want of proof of a person effecting the policy according to the provisions of that statute would shew that there was here no contract made with the plaintiff, because it would not be a contract made with the plaintiff's legal agent. The 6th plea, to be good, must shew that the non-compliance with the regulations of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 19, s. 2, does not merely make void any contract with the seamen, but renders the voyage itself illegal; or otherwise, it can be no answer to a contract of insurance between the owner and underwriters. [TINDAL, C. J.—The object of the statute is not that the government may see that British subjects should be employed, but is only for the benefit of the seamen.] Yes—it differs from Suart v. Powell (1 B. & Ad. 266). The vessel being unseaworthy for want of a competent crew, would no doubt be a defence, but that is not the effect of a want of contract pursuant to the statute. The cases of Law v. Hodson (11 East. 300); Little v. Pool (9 B. & C. 192); Wetherell v. Jones (3 B. & Ad. 221); Forster v. Taylor (5 B. & Ad. 887); and Cope v. Rowlands (2 Mee. & W. 149), were cited to shew when the contravention of a statute makes the contract void, and that the contract so rendered void for illegality is the one sued on, and not a collateral contract, as the one here between the owner and the underwriters.

Byles, Serjt. contrà.—The second plea is good both in form and substance; the plea is founded on 28 Geo. 3, c. 56, s. 2. The name of the plaintiff does not appear in the policy: it was necessary therefore to aver that H. and J. Johnston were the agents of the plaintiff. The objection raised by the second plea is, that there was not inserted in the policy the true name of the agent, as required by the Act. This defence is not open to the defendants under the general issue; rule Hilary Term, 4 Wm. 4, title Assumpsit, p. 3, takes this out of the case of Sutherland v. Pratt, if that case is law. under the general issue, the plaintiff might shew a subsequent adoption of the agency of Johnston; it would not, as here, be requisite to prove that Johnston was the agent at the time of effecting the policy. [TINDAL, C. J.—This same evidence may be given under the general issue as under the special traverse; you cannot alter the law, and if evidence of a subsequent adoption would be good in the one case, it would be equally good in the other.] The sixth plea either shews an absence of sea-worthiness, or that the voyage was illegal. The Act says, that it shall not be lawful for any master, without such agreement, to carry to sea any seaman. [COLTMAN, J.—It does not say that he may not carry to sea the vessel.] The effect of it is so. Suart v. Powell is in point. If the voyage is void, the policy is bad. Law v. Hollingworth (7 T. R. 160), and the observations on that case by the Court of Exchequer Chamber in Sadler v. Dixon (8 Mee. & W. 900), were cited. The plea also may be taken as an informal plea of unseaworthiness, and the words at the end, "therefore the said voyage is illegal," be struck out as surplusage. (Clifford v. Hunter, M. & M. 103; Tait v. Levi, 14 East. 481; Hollingworth v. Brodrick, 7 Ad. & Ell. 40.)

Channell, Serjt. in reply, was stopped by the Court.

TINDAL, C. J.—The cause assigned in the demurrer to the second plea is, that it amounts to the general issue. I consider that this is the legal effect of that plea. The plea of non-assumpsit puts in issue not only the promise but the consideration. The question is, what is the consideration here, and whether, upon an issue taken of such consideration, the facts traversed under this second plea are not put in issue? The declaration shews that the policy was effected in the name of H. and J. Johnston, as the agents of the plaintiff, and as agents for those virtually interested therein—there is then stated mutual promises. [His Lordship here read the same.] Under the plea of non-assumpsit, the plaintiff must prove that H. and J. Johnston effected the policy in their own names, and for those interested therein; therefore it seems to me that the same proof must be given in evidence under non-assumpsit as under the issue raised by this traverse. It is said that, under this plea, it would be necessary to shew that H. and J. Johnston were the plaintiff's agents at the time of effecting this policy, while under the plea of non-assumpsit, the plaintiff might set up a subsequent ratification; but I deny that there is any such difference. Sutherland v. Pratt, which has been cited on the part of the plaintiff, cannot be distinguished from the present; therefore the demurrer to the second plea must prevail. By the sixth plea, the defendants set up as a defence, that the policy was on an illegal voyage, contrary to the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 19. No doubt a policy on an illegal voyage cannot be enforced; and that if the contract between the persons themselves cannot be enforced, so also cannot be enforced a contract of indemnity as to the same; the policy, therefore, must follow the fate of the original contract. But it appears here that the provisions of this Act are for a collateral purpose; the intention manifested by the Act is to give a readier mode to seamen for enforcing the agreements between themselves and the master. The Act does not make the voyage illegal, but gives a remedy against the master for carrying seamen out to sea without such written agreement. This cannot either be considered as a case of unseaworthiness. Where such has been held, there has been a want of a proper crew to man the vessel, but it does not appear that there was not sufficient power for the management of the vessel.

COLTMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. When a policy is made through the intervention of an agent, the power of the agent to make such a contract necessarily involves the authority of the agent, and that authority must be such as the law permits; therefore, the general issue would cover the defence raised by the traverse in the second plea. As to the sixth plea, the question is, whether this was an illegal voyage. The argument on the part of the defendants must go to the extent, that if there is a single person on board in whose case the provisions of this Act have not been complied with, the whole voyage is illegal. The object of the statute was not for the public benefit, but to prevent seamen being imposed on, and to give them a remedy for a breach of the agreement under which they sailed, and for this purpose penalties are imposed. Although the imposing a penalty does not prevent the probibition in an Act of Parliament from being general, yet it is a clue as to the intention of the Act, and here it appears to be for the benefit of the seamen. Judgment for the plaintiff.

Instant judgment—Execution.

Shee, Serj. applied for judgment to be signed that day.

TINDAL, C. J.—It must take its regular course. You must apply to the judge who heard the trial; we cannot alter the course; you have come to the wrong forum. The statute says the judge who tried the cause shall, if he sees fit, order execution. You must give a day's notice of taxation; to-morrow the party may come to this court and ask for a new trial.

FUSSELL v. FARIENTE.

Feigned issue—Money paid into court.

Shee, Serjt. moved for a rule to be made absolute in the first instance for the payment of 623*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.* to the assignees. The money had been paid into court pending the result of a feigned issue, ordered to be tried by Erskine, J. He was entitled to ask for the costs of the feigned issue, as also the costs of the application.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Friday, May 24.

REG. v. THOMAS JAMES STOWELL.

Semble, the proper course for a party disputing the fact of his having entered into a recognizance which has been estreated into the Exchequer, is to come in and traverse it.

The Solicitor-General appeared to shew cause against a rule obtained last term by Charnock, to shew cause why a certiorari should not issue for the purpose of quashing a recognizance, or the writ of execution founded thereon, or to discharge the defendant out of custody. The application for the rule nisi was reported ante, p. 105. The rule was obtained upon affidavits, that the party had never entered into the recognizance now estreated.

The Solicitor-General said, on behalf of the Crown, that inquiries had been made, and no information whatever obtained, but that the Crown was willing to submit to the discretion of the Court.

Charnock suggested that it would be much better if the parties always signed these recognizances.

POLLOCK, C.B.—Probably it would.

The case ultimately stood over for the Crown to make further inquiries, the defendant to have leave to apply again upon additional affidavits, or to come and plead non est factum to the recognizance.

Authority: Price's Exchequer Practice, vol. 1, p. 655. Rule enlarged.

ROOM v. ANDREWS.

Crompton applied for further time to move for a new trial in this case, which was tried before the registrar of the Borough Court of Liverpool, on the ground that the registrar had not furnished his notes. The Court granted him till Tuesday next, but expressed a strong opinion against its being drawn into a precedent. Rule accordingly.

BROWN v. FOTHERGILL.

In an action for a trespass to the person, alleged by the plaintiff to have caused him serious injury, his refusal to permit an inspection by medical men on behalf of the defendant, is matter of comment to the jury, and not a ground for a new trial.

Watson, Q.C. moved to set aside the assessment of damages, and for a new inquiry, or to reduce the damages. It was an action of trespass, by a servant against his master, for striking him a violent blow over the eye with a pitchfork, by which the eye had, as was stated by the surgeons on behalf of the plaintiff, been permanently injured. Judgment had gone by default. At the inquiry before the sheriff of Glamorganshire, the jury found a verdict for 500*l.* damages.

It appeared, by affidavit, that the plaintiff had refused to permit any medical man, on behalf of the defendant, to inspect his eye; and that, although notice had been given to him to appear in court, he did not do so. There were also affidavits of persons impugning the amount of injury suffered.

Watson contended that the damages were excessive, and were obviously given, either from local prejudice or from an idea that permanent injury had been occasioned to the eye, and that plaintiff's conduct had not entitled him to the benefit of any such hypothesis. His refusal to be inspected was strong evidence of his consciousness that the injury was not so great as was pretended.

By the COURT.—There are doubtless many cases in which it is highly important that there should be an examination, and where it ought to be allowed, but the difficulty is this: suppose we were to grant a new trial, and the plaintiff was still to refuse the inspection, and another jury were to give 700*l.* would that be ground for another new trial? Could we be asked to go on granting them toties quoties until he does appear? Surely the refusal was matter for the jury to consider, and should have been submitted to them. If it were not, it was probably from the fear of giving the plaintiff a reply; but the defendant cannot do that and complain to us afterwards. This is not a case in which we should be anxious to interfere. It is not at all clear that the jury might not have properly given much heavier damages if there had been no doubt about the permanent injury. Rule refused.

LEES v. THE CALDER AND HEBBLE NAVIGATION COMPANY.

The usual clauses in a canal or railway Act binding the proprietors to replace watercourses, &c. which they may remove or interfere with, only refer to land taken under the compulsory clauses of the Act; and where the land is conveyed to them voluntarily, they have the same powers over watercourses, &c. without reference to the Act as any other person would have.

Action on the case for obstructing a watercourse, and for not repairing a pipe, by which water was conveyed from a certain brook across the land of the defendants into the land of the plaintiff for purposes of irrigation.

The cause was tried before Coltman, J. at the York Summer Assizes, 1844, when the facts appeared as follows:—

By 6 Geo. 4, c. 17, the defendants were authorized to make a canal from Salter Hebble Bridge to Halifax. The Act contained the usual compulsory clauses in case the owners of lands required for the canal refused to sell. The 7th section required that when any watercourse, &c. should be turned, a new one should be made by the company. The 14th section empowered the company to purchase lands, &c. The 84th enacted that nothing in the Act contained should extend, or be construed to extend, to lessen, abridge, affect, or prejudice the rights, &c. of owners of premises contiguous to the Halifax brook, or enable the company to take the water of the brook under any pretence whatever.

The ancestors of the plaintiff before the passing of the Act were the owners of three fields called the Holmes, which were bounded on one side by the Halifax brook, and which had always been irrigated from the brook by means of a watercourse or feeder, running from the brook into the land, and into which the water from the brook was turned from time to time. The water was of great value to the land, from its peculiar qualities. The canal was made in 1828, and that portion of the Holmes on the side of the brook was taken for the purpose. It quite cut off the watercourse. In 1832 a conveyance was made to the company, by the parties entitled, of the land taken by the company, with all waters, watercourses, &c. &c. using the general words, but reserving to the vendors "the spring of water arising in the Little Holme." This spring arose in part of the land conveyed, and was quite distinct from the watercourse now claimed. At the time of making the canal, and before the execution of the conveyance, the company placed under it a pipe for the purpose of conducting the brook water to the land in question, and it was at first used for that purpose, but had become stopped up, and the company had ultimately removed a part of it altogether. At the trial, Coltman, J. directed the jury that if they were of opinion that there was a watercourse, and a right to the water at all times, that the conveyance was no answer to the action, and he would be entitled to a verdict on the first count, and also on the second, for that the company by the Act were obliged, upon taking away the old watercourse, to provide a new one, and they must be taken to have supplied the pipe for that purpose. The jury found for the plaintiff, and leave was reserved by the learned judge to the defendants to move to enter a verdict for them. In Easter Term a rule was obtained by Martin, Q.C. for a new trial, or to enter a verdict for the defendants. The principal question was whether the plaintiff's right to the watercourse was taken away by the conveyance.

Knowles, Q.C. Crompton, and Addison, now shewed cause. The watercourse was vested in the owners of the land. It is not an easement, and is quite distinct from a right of way, which may be destroyed by unity of possession. The deed must be construed, not strictly according to its words, but according to the intent of the parties. The construction of the deed is to be governed by the Act of Parliament under which it was made; but even if it was a voluntary conveyance, it is clear that it was made because the plaintiff was aware of the powers of the Act, and that it was intended to be in pursuance of the Act. The Act expressly prohibits the company from interfering with rights to this water.

By the Court.—The Court think that the conveyance of the land under these circumstances puts an end to any right, if there was any, to have the water in the manner claimed. The 7th and 84th sections do not at all apply to cases where there is a voluntary sale. That is the case here. It may be that the party voluntarily sold because he was aware of the powers of the Act. We cannot entertain here any argument founded upon the act of the company in making the substituted watercourse, or pipe, after the contract, and before the execution of the deed. If any thing can be founded on that to shew that the conveyance did not fulfil the intent of the parties, or that it was executed in ignorance of its effect, that would be matter for an application to another sort of court; but now that the conveyance has been actually executed, and the land parted with, together with all the rights belonging to it, the plaintiff cannot, in a court of common law, maintain his present claim.

Rule absolute, to enter a verdict for defendant upon the 3rd, 4th, and 5th issues.

Saturday, May 25.

PRICE v. BARLOW.

Chilton, Q.C., shewed cause against a rule ob- [illegible] a scire facias and for leave to plead plene administravit.

Upon condition of defendant's paying the costs of this application, taking short notice of trial, and putting the plaintiff in every respect in the same position as if he had pleaded at proper time,

Rule absolute.

REG. v. JOHN SANDALL.

The Court will not interfere upon motion between the Crown and a defendant to discharge him from liability as surety, or to decide upon the continuance of his suretyship.

Jervis, Q.C., shewed cause against a rule obtained by M. Chambers to acquit the defendant of the charge upon a writ of extent at the suit of the Crown, or for a supersedeas to issue to the sheriff of Surrey.

Th rule was obtained upon affidavits stating that the person for whom the defendant became surety was bankrupt in 183., and that his son had since carried on the business, that of a maltster, and that the defendant was wholly unaware of any continued liability, and had not therefore given any notice to the excise upon the subject. It was also stated that the Crown had compromised with parties who held property of the maltster which they might have seized, and that the surety was in consequence placed in a worse position. The question was, whether the Court could interfere by motion. For the defendant, 33 H. 8, c. 39, s. 79, was cited. The Court held that they could not decide the question upon motion.

Rule discharged.

GOME v. FYLOR.

A party moving for a new trial must produce copies of all documents of which he intends to avail himself. Semble, that the Court would compel the other side to furnish him with them on payment of costs.

Knowles, Q.C., moved for a new trial on the ground of reception of improper evidence. The evidence objected to was an agreement of which no copy was now produced.

By the Court.—It is not expected that a judge takes copies of all written documents which are used on the trial. The proper course for the parties who wish to move for a new trial, is to apply to the other side for copies of such documents as have been used as they require, offering to pay the costs of giving them; and if they are refused, an application should be made to us on the subject. Rule refused.

EMPEY v. KING.

Practice—Staying proceedings in second action.

Warren moved to stay proceedings as vexatious and against good faith, or to stay them until payment of costs of former action. A former action had been brought and referred, and had been decided against the plaintiff. He had applied to set aside the award, and failed to do so. The plaintiff was sworn to be a pauper.

POLLOCK, C. B.—Such applications have been refused in much stronger cases than the present. In this case, objections have been taken to the award already, and we have no reason to suppose that the object of the plaintiff is any other than bonâ fide to rely upon those objections. It may be that the plaintiff is liable to an attachment, for not performing the award; but if the defendant will not resort to that, he cannot ask the Court to do something irregular, because he will not avail himself of what is regular.

Authorities cited: Lush's Practice, 797; Mihart v. Harwidge (3 Wilson); Carnaby v. Welby (7 Dowl.); Lowes v. Curdo (8 Taunton). Rule refused.

WHITMORE v. BLACK.

After an interpleader rule obtained by the sheriff, and payment, in pursuance thereof, of the proceeds of goods, taken under an execution, to the adverse claimants, the Court will not stay proceedings, in an action by the claimant against the creditor; nor will they inquire whether he seeks nominal or substantial damages.

Sir J. Bayley moved for a rule to stay proceedings, or if plaintiff shall not recover more than nominal damages, to shew cause why he should not pay costs to the defendant.

This was an action of trover by assignees of a bankrupt against execution creditor. 1st count, conversion on day of seizure; 2nd, on day of sale. Judgment had been signed against the bankrupt on the 16th of June, 1841. Execution issued 17th June. Notice of bankruptcy was served on the 12th of July, and while the goods were still unsold. The sheriff obtained an interpleader order on the 13th of July, and subsequently, as the execution creditor would not proceed further, the question in Whitmore v. Robinson and Skey v. Carter being then undecided, the proceeds of the goods were paid out of court to the present plaintiff.

For the defendant it was contended, that the interpleader rule and the order to pay the money out to the plaintiffs were a settlement of the whole question, and that at all events, as the plaintiffs had received the proceeds, and as no special damage was alleged, the plaintiffs could only recover nominal damages.

By the Court.—We cannot inquire on motion whether the plaintiffs seek nominal or substantial damages. Rule refused.

BROWN v. WILKINSON.

Demurrer to plea.

Action on a bill of exchange.

Plea.—That the bill was given by defendant as surety for A B, to the plaintiff, as agent of a loan society, and that the money had been advanced upon terms different from the usual rules of the society, and deductions made without the knowledge of the defendant.

The ground of the demurrer was, that it was not alleged that the defendant had agreed to become surety according to the rules of the society.

Peacock, in support of the demurrer.

Pearson, for the defendant, had leave to amend, or

Judgment for the plaintiff.

RICHARDSON v. STURTON.

A declaration by one tenant in common against another, as bailiff, for not accounting, must allege that he has received more than his just share.

Demurrer to a declaration in account.

This was an action under 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, s. 27, by one tenant in common against another, as bailiff, for not accounting. The only point argued was, whether a declaration under that statute must allege that the defendant had received more than his share of the profits.

Archbold, in support of the declaration, contended that the very object of the statute was to do away with the necessity for the plaintiff to shew what the defendant had received, which he could only do by proceedings in equity; but that, if this allegation were necessary, the plaintiff might by a traverse of it still be put to the proof, and be driven for that purpose to his bill of discovery.

By the Court.—You must either shew an appointment to make him a bailiff at common law, in which case he would be liable for not accounting whether he had received any thing or not, or you must shew that he has received more than his just share, to bring him within the statute. The duty, and the breach in the declaration itself, are not inconsistent. You merely allege that it was his duty to account for what he had received more than his just share, and then you only allege that he has not accounted, without shewing that he has received more than his share. The same construction has been put upon the statute for centuries, and there is no authority to the contrary.

WILLIAMS v. JARMAN.

Demurrer—Right to begin.

In this case the defendant demurred to the first count, and the plaintiff also demurred to the plea to the other counts of the declaration. Willes, for plaintiff, and Best, for defendant, both claimed to begin.

The Court thought the plaintiff should begin.

HODGSON v. WALKER.

It is no excuse for not making profert of a deed, that the party pleading, being a party to the deed, has no part of it.

Demurrer to plea.

M. D. Hill, Q.C. in support of the demurrer.

Chilton, Q.C. contrà.

Defendant had pleaded that he had entered into a composition by deed with the plaintiff and other creditors, by which he had conveyed his property to trustees for their benefit, and that the plaintiff had released him. He excused profert of the deed by saying that it was in the hands of the trustees, who refused it to him.

By the Court.—There is no authority to shew that this is an excuse. Where there are several parties to a deed, of the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd parts respectively, it is supposed in point of law that each takes a part. This is sometimes neglected in practice, on account of the stamp acts, but we cannot take notice of a practice of that sort. The proper course with a view to ulterior proceedings is for each to take a part. The rules of law upon this subject are of great importance, and are not idle or capricious. In this case, however, the parties who have the deed are trustees, and a Court of Equity would probably have compelled them to produce it.

Hoggins moved for judgment against the casual ejector. There were several tenants in possession. The notice, as to one of them, contained the name of Hannah instead of John, but the declaration and notice were served upon John, and he was told that he was the person for whom it was intended.

Henderson moved to make a rule absolute for the discharge of a prisoner, no cause being shewn.

The officer of the Court doubted whether the service of the rule was sufficient. The affidavit stated that it had been served on the housekeeper at the office of the attorney.

The Court.—That is not enough. She may have been the housekeeper of a place where there are several offices; you do not shew her to be the servant of the attorney. Rule enlarged.

SPECIAL CASE.

On looking at the case, ALDERSON, B. suggested, that it did not appear by what judge the order had been made, or that he was a judge of the superior courts. Upon inquiry, it turned out, that although recited to have been stated by order of a judge, it had not been so in fact. The case was struck out, with instructions to the officers never to allow a case to be entered without having made this inquiry.

SPECIAL CASE.

Under a contract for sale of a house, and also of furniture at a certain valuation, as soon as the title and sale of the house shall be completed, the furniture does not vest immediately in the vendee.

The question was, whether, an agreement having been made by the plaintiff for the sale of a house to A, accompanied by a covenant to sell the furniture at a certain valuation, as soon as the title should have been completed and the contract for the house carried into effect, the property in the goods passed from the plaintiff unto the vendee, before the completion of the title, so as to make them liable to be taken in execution by his judgment creditor.

Warrant of attorney.

Quære, as to sufficiency of authority to enter an appearance.

Butt moved to set aside the appearance and judgment herein, and to discharge the defendant out of custody. In this case, judgment had been entered up on a warrant of attorney, which empowered J. W. ELLWOOD v. BEADLE

Frivolous demurrer.

Crompton moved to set aside the defendant's demurrer to the declaration herein, as frivolous, with costs.

The declaration was in debt, and it alleged that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in 20*l.* for goods sold and delivered, and in 20*l.* for board and lodging, and in 20*l.* on an account stated. To this declaration the defendant demurred, the grounds being that it does not appear whether the declaration consists of one, two, or three counts, and that there was no formal commencement to each count, and moreover, that the 2nd count does not contain the word "then." It was now insisted that it is immaterial whether the declaration be considered as composed of one count or of three, and that the formal commencement of the first count was sufficient for the others. This application had been made to Mr. Justice Wightman, at chambers, who, on having the dictum of Mr. Justice Parke, in Morse v. James (12 L. J. E. S. 417), cited to him by the other side, referred the plaintiff to the Court. Rule nisi.

REG. v. SEALEY.

The Court will not grant a mandamus against an officer of a corporation for neglect of a duty imposed upon him by an Act of Parliament until a demand has been made upon him to perform it.

Cox moved for a mandamus against the defendant, who is the receiver of revenues and treasurer for the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of Bridgwater, under the following circumstances. By a local Act of the 34 Geo. 3, for the regulation of the tolls and duties of that port, the receiver of revenues for the corporation is required annually to deliver in at the midsummer quarter sessions for the county of Somerset, an account of the receipts and expenditure under the statute; to which account any person paying the tolls may object. And the said receiver is to furnish to such person on demand, after the 30th of April, a copy of such account so intended to be delivered in; and by a subsequent section, the Quarter Sessions are empowered to reduce or remove such tolls and duties, should the produce exceed the expenditure. The defendant was the treasurer for the corporation, and receiver of its revenues. No such account as required by the statute had been delivered at the quarter sessions for upwards of thirty years: As a large revenue had been received, much more than sufficient for the purposes to which, by the provisions of the Act, it was to be applied, a demand had been made upon the defendant to deliver an account to the deponent, on whose affidavit this application was made; and he had accordingly furnished one, which shewed a large balance, upwards of 1,200*l.*, in hand, sufficient to justify the sessions in greatly reducing, or abolishing, the tolls and duties; but in consequence of the neglect of the defendant to deliver in his annual account as he was required to do, the Quarter Sessions were unable to make the reduction, [illegible] from their burdens. He, therefore, moved for a mandamus to the receiver to deliver the account at the next sessions.

COLERIDGE, J.—Has any demand been made of him to deliver the account?

Cox.—The only demand has been that with which he has complied, to deliver a copy of the account to the deponent.

COLERIDGE, J.—That is not enough. The return would be, that no demand had been made upon the defendant for the performance of the duty. The Court will not grant a mandamus in such a case, without a previous demand and refusal. You must make your demand upon the defendant to deliver in the account required by the statute at the next quarter sessions. Then, if he refuses or neglects to comply, you can come here for redress. Rule refused.

REG. v. THE CORONER OF POMFRET.

Certiorari to remove a coroner's inquisition, with the view to quashing same, for defects apparent on its face.

Tomlinson moved for a certiorari to remove an inquisition of the coroner of Pomfret in Yorkshire, with the view to its being quashed.

The application was made on the grounds of the inquisition being bad in the following particulars:—

1st. That no jurisdiction appeared on the face of the inquisition, the coroner being styled as for the liberty of the Honour of Pomfret in the West Riding of Yorkshire, and the inquisition appearing to have been taken at the house of William Stephenson, of Bradford, in the parish of Bradford, in the West Riding, &c. and omitting also to state that the inquest was taken where the body was found lying.

2nd. That the deodand was laid upon a steam engine and boiler, which from the description appeared to be fixtures, and not therefore the subject of a deodand.

3rd. That the death appeared to be caused by the escape of boiling water, notwithstanding which, the engine was described as the cause of death.

HUDSON v. SPARKS.

Setting aside copy and service of a writ of summons for irregularity.

Prentice moved to set aside the copy and service of the writ of summons herein, on the following grounds:—

1st. That the copy stated the writ to have been issued on the 13th of May, 1840, and that it was served on the 20th of May instant (more than four months from the date of its apparent issuing).

2nd. That the indorsement states the attorney to be "attorney for the said Charles Stone, of Oxford;" Charles Stone being neither the plaintiff nor the defendant. Rule nisi.

(See 3 Law T. 108.)

COLERIDGE, J. gave judgment in this case, which was an application to refer an attorney's bill to taxation, two promissory notes having been given for the amount, which became due within a year of the application, but which were given more than a year before it; and the question was, whether or not this was an application within a twelvemonth after payment, according to the provision of the 41st sec. 6 & 7 Vic. c. 73? His lordship was of opinion that the application was in time, and that payment in this case must mean the honouring of the instrument by actual payment, and not the giving of it in the first instance.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

FORBES v. WHALLEY.

Motion to set aside copy and service of writ of summons, and all subsequent proceedings, with costs, on the ground of there being no actual service of the writ.

R. Allen moved for a rule, calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the alleged service of the writ, or copy of the writ of summons, and also the appearance according to the statute, and all subsequent proceedings, should not be set aside, with costs, no personal or other sufficient service having taken place, nor any sufficient indorsement having been made of such alleged service in the original writ of summons, pursuant to the rule of Court.

The motion was made on affidavits, shewing that no service in fact had been made by the party who had sworn to it, or by any one else, and that the first intimation which the defendant had of any action pending against him was through the service of the notice of declaration. Rule nisi.

REG. v. NUTTALL.

Where, upon an application to admit a party to bail on an inquisition, the coroner and prosecutor consent to the motion, the Court will admit to bail before the expiration of the rule to shew cause.

Crompton, having on a former day (see 3 L. T. [illegible] taken before the coroner of Bolton, when a verdict of manslaughter was returned against the prisoner, and also a rule to shew cause why he should not be admitted to bail, now applied accordingly. The rule, as served upon the coroner and the prosecutor, was to shew cause on Saturday next; however, both these parties had given their consent to the defendant's being at once admitted to bail.

WIGHTMAN, J. As they have until Saturday to shew cause, circumstances may arise before then to induce them to withdraw their consent.

Crompton. They have given their consent, and know that this motion will be made; the prosecutor is the next of kin of the deceased.

Admitted to bail, himself in 100l. and four sureties in 25l. each, or two in 50l. each.

DOE dem. EVANS v. SNEED.

Where a judge at chambers declines to make an order, it is equivalent to saying that the party is not entitled to the subject of his application.

In this case, which was argued last term (see 3 L. T. 107), WIGHTMAN, J. said he had looked over the affidavits, and he directed the rule to be discharged, unless the defendant would undertake not again to set up the title upon which he failed in the former ejectment.

Williams asked that it should be discharged with costs, as the application had before been made to Erskine, J. at chambers, and refused.

Bramwell.—It was not refused; the judge simply declined to make an order.

WIGHTMAN, J.—It is now considered by the judges that making no order is equivalent to saying that you are not entitled to your application.

Rule as above, but without costs.

RICHMOND v. LORD OXFORD.

Application to cancel the entry of satisfaction, the same having been made collusively, and with the view of defrauding a party beneficially interested in the judgment.

Ogle moved for a rule calling upon the defendant to shew cause why the satisfaction entered upon the roll herein should not be cancelled. The affidavits disclosed that, in 1842, the defendant gave the plaintiff his bond to secure 2,000*l.*, that, subsequently, the plaintiff Richmond assigned the bond to one Bennett for 800*l.* of which the defendant had notice, who nevertheless colluded with Richmond to get him to enter up satisfaction, in consideration of paying him 50*l.* which was accordingly done.

This application was made at the instance of the representative of Bennett. Rule nisi.

Reg. v. The Trustees of the Weymouth, Melcombe Regis, and Dorchester Turnpike Trust.

Ex parte Trenchard.

Application for a mandamus to trustees of a turnpike-road to compel them to complete an arrangement for stopping-up and conveying to the applicant an old and unused road.

Erle, Q. C., moved for a rule nisi for a mandamus, commanding the above trustees to stop-up an old road which had been abandoned under the following circumstances. Many years since it was deemed advisable to divert an old road (the subject of this motion) and to construct a new one, more commodiously situated for the public, which new one was to pass over the estate of the applicant, who consented to the arrangement, on condition (amongst others) that the soil of part of the old road should be made over to him. It was now insisted, by the applicant, that this arrangement was not carried out by the trustees, and that the public were still admitted to use the old road, notwithstanding the new road had been used for some years. On the part of the trustees, it was contended that they had no power to surrender the old road; but in answer to this it was argued that the 84th and 88th sections of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126 gave them ample authority upon the subject. Rule nisi.

Irish Reports.

QUEEN'S BENCH.

Wednesday, January 24.

Reg. v. O'Connell and Others.

Several thousand copies of a printed document were hawked about and sold during the entire day at a meeting in which some of the traversers took an active part, and no endeavour was made to stop their circulation: Held, that the crown had a right to read the document in evidence for the purpose of shewing the object of the traversers in bringing the meeting together, and to shew the general character and objects of the meeting.

It appeared in evidence that a repeal meeting, attended by a vast multitude of persons, was held on the 1st October, 1843, at the Rath of Mullaghmast; some of the traversers were present and took an active part; various mottoes and inscriptions were displayed at it; amongst them, "Mullaghmast and its Martyrs," and "a Voice from the Grave;" in the crowd there were a number of persons having labels on their hats, with the inscription "O'Connell's Police," and carrying wands or staves, who were employed keeping order about the platform and a pavilion erected on the ground. A policeman, named John Healy, proved that from an early hour in the morning until nightfall, persons were crying about and selling through this meeting a paper, the same as one put into his hands; and the witness stated, that he believed several thousands of them were disposed of; there was no evidence of any attempt to check their circulation. The paper, which was of considerable length, purported to be "a full and true account of the dreadful slaughter and murder" of 400 Irish by the English at Mullaghmast, in the time of Philip and Mary; it contained extracts from Taaffe's and Leland's Histories of Ireland, accompanied by comments upon the conduct of the English towards the Irish, and concluded in these words: "Warned, at all events, they (the Irish) should be against her treachery; a picture of the slaughter of Mullaghmast should be hung up in every Irishman's room to remind him of the brutality and perfidy of England, by the latter of which, much more than by her valour, she obtained dominion in this country." There was no signature to the document, but merely the words "Dublin, printed by John Hanvey, 2, Fleece-alley, Fishamble-street."

Smith, A. G. then proposed that this document should be read for the Court and the jury.

Moore, Q. C. and Mac Dough, Q. C. for the traversers, objected to its being received in evidence. These documents or ballads were not distributed gratuitously, but sold for profit, just as any thing else was sold at the meeting. There was not the slightest proof given of any connection between the traversers, or the persons who spoke on the platform at the meeting, or the Repeal Association, or any member of it, and the persons who distributed the papers in question. The traversers are responsible for every thing done at the meeting for their common purpose, and with their knowledge, but not every collateral declaration of one conspirator even would be evidence against the others. If this evidence was admitted, it would be in the power of any ill-designing person to convert a legal assembly into an illegal one by the distribution of documents at it. It was also relied on that the name of the printer attached to the document was not that of the authorized printer of the Repeal Association.

Smith, A. G.—In Rex v. Hardy (24 St. Tr. p. 437-8), it was decided that the Court had a right to look at a document offered in evidence, to see its purport and nature, and ascertain its tendency. It has been proved that Mr. O'Connell, at this very meeting, said, at Mullaghmast, "I chose it (the Rath) for an obvious reason; we are on the precise spot in which English treachery, aye, and false Irish treachery too, consummated a massacre unequalled in the crimes of the history of the world, until the massacre of the Mamelukes by Mehemet Ali. It was necessary to have Turks to commit a crime in order to be equal to the crime of the English; no other people but Turks were wicked enough, except the English." (The learned Attorney General then read several other extracts from Mr. O'Connell's speech, to shew that it corresponded in sentiment with the document in question, and referred to the same topics.)

This document enabled thousands of persons at the meeting, who were unable to hear Mr. O'Connell, to understand the meaning of the mottoes "Mullaghmast and its Martyrs," and "a Voice from the Grave." It is clearly admissible to shew the view with which 250,000 people were brought together; to shew that it was for the purpose of sowing discontent and disaffection amongst them, and to shew the general character and objects of the meeting.

Monaghan, Q.C. followed on behalf of the traversers, and Greene, S. G. replied.

Pennefather, C. J.—The Court are of opinion that this document must be admitted in evidence, without saying what effect it ought to have as evidence, but merely that it ought to go to the jury as evidence of what they are hereafter to form their judgment upon. Mr. Monaghan has said that he could not deny that the document would be admissible, if it could be proved to have been circulated with the consent, or as forming part of the object, of those who called the meeting; but see how the case stands upon the evidence already adduced, and consider it with reference to the existence of the principle which Mr. Monaghan admits. There is evidence before the Court of the existence of the Repeal Association, consisting of large numbers of persons, assembling in different places, at different times, and causing the publication of documents for various purposes consistent with their object. We have evidence that those meetings were commenced by the authority of the Association, of which the several traversers are proved to be members. That in furtherance of that common practice, it was determined that a great monster meeting of the province of Leinster should be held on the 1st of last October, and that the place had been appointed a considerable time before, and therefore premeditatedly. That directions had been given to Mr. Brown, the printer, by the secretary of the Association, to strike off a large number of printed advertisements, one of which, printed on yellow paper, and in very large type, called together a meeting of the people of the province of Leinster, the people so called on to assemble receiving this significant hint at the bottom of the placard, "Remember Mullaghmast!" Now why was Mullaghmast so brought to their recollection? It is in evidence that Mr. O'Connell attended at the meeting there, and at the banquet which followed, and that he, on both these occasions, fully explained why he, acting on behalf of the Association, had chosen Mullaghmast as the place of meeting. He admitted that he had chosen it for the purpose of bringing to the recollection of those assembled the scenes alleged to have taken place there in former times. Whether that was calculated to produce excitement or not, it has been proved that such was the reason assigned by Mr. O'Connell himself, that the people might have in remembrance the cruelties and treachery of the Saxon race, with whom it was unsafe to have any dealings. It requires some consideration to say, whether the fact of Mr. O'Connell or the Association taking upon themselves to collect in this manner 250,000 persons, was not in itself, and without going further, an illegal act. I do not say whether it was or not, but this I will say, that those persons who venture to call together such a meeting, must abide by the consequences of their own act in so doing, and must be responsible for the acts done by the persons assembled. These documents, detailing the slaughter of 400 persons at Mullaghmast, were, it appears, largely circulated throughout the field, and whether the people were required to pay for them or not, seems to me to be of very little consequence; it is sufficient if they were circulated for the purpose of informing them of what previously occurred, and I cannot help observing, that it is extraordinary that Mr. O'Connell and the other persons who spoke at that meeting referred in their speeches to the very same topics which are mentioned in these documents, and called upon the people never to trust the Saxon again. In my opinion, therefore, so far from these publications being unconnected with the professed objects of the meeting, they were intimately connected with it; it would be impossible to say that a meeting of 250,000 persons was called together by advertisements at a particular place, and that then these documents relating to that particular place, and which were circulated at the meeting, were totally unconnected with it. I see not the slightest objection to receiving this evidence.

Crampton, J. was also of opinion that the evidence was admissible. All persons present at a meeting, whether legal or illegal, are primâ facie taking a part in it, and must be so considered, unless testimony to the contrary is produced, for which reason it is, that what was said a quarter of a mile from the platform might be given in evidence against those who were on the platform. Suppose a person read aloud to the people the contents of one of these documents, even at a considerable distance from the platform, would not that be evidence against the traversers? Certainly it would; and in the same way, if this document be distributed to thousands at the meeting, no lawyer can, in my opinion, contend that it is not admissible in evidence against those who spoke at the meeting. It is then said, to shew that the speakers had no connection with this document, that they were sold for a halfpenny each. Now I think it would be a most dangerous rule to lay down, that seditious documents should not be considered as connected with a seditious proceeding, if distributed at it, because they were sold. However, I will not go so far as to say that if ballad-singers went and sung their ballads at such a meeting they would be admissible in evidence in all cases, though in some they might be. Under the present circumstances, I am of opinion that the document tendered in evidence ought to be received.

PERRIN, J.—I am of the same opinion. The conduct and character of the meeting are already in evidence, as well as the declarations of the parties there assembled. It appears that from "morning till night," several persons were occupied "circulating and crying" (these were the witness's words) these documents through the meeting, and no one appeared to prevent it, or to endeavour to stop them. I do not say what the effect of the evidence will be, nor could I, for I know nothing of the document; but I cannot see how it can legally be excluded, nor do I say that it will affect the Association or the traversers; that is a question for the jury to decide upon.

The document was then read by the officer of the court.

REG. v. O'CONNELL and OTHERS.

The Court having this day unanimously refused the motion in arrest of judgment,

The Attorney-General moved that the defendants should be brought up for sentence to-morrow morning; upon which

Moore, Q.C. the traversers' leading counsel, stated that notice had been served on behalf of the traversers of an application to the Court, that in case their sentence should include imprisonment, the satisfaction of the sentence should be postponed until such time as the writ of error, which the defendants were about to sue out, should be disposed of.

The learned counsel stated that the motion would not occupy any considerable length of time, therefore it is not unlikely that sentence will be passed to-morrow (Thursday).

It is understood that no affidavits in mitigation of punishment will be filed. Great anxiety was evinced during the entire day up to the hour of adjournment, to ascertain the result of the proceedings, many persons being under the impression that sentence would have been passed to-day. The hall was densely crowded, and the interior of the court was filled almost to suffocation by the members of both branches of the Profession, and the public.

Meeting of the Judges.—The question whether or not attorneys have a right under the Prisoners' Counsel Act, to address juries, has just been decided in the negative by a majority of the judges. The question was brought under their lordships' consideration by the Chief Baron, in consequence of the right having been disputed in a case tried before his lordship at the last Spring Assizes for the county of Cork, on which occasion decisions both ways were cited. The judges, however, by a majority of ten to two, have resolved that the Act does not give attorneys the right to address juries.

It is said to be in contemplation to hold the Summer Assizes in future at a much later period of the year than has been the practice hitherto, so that a more equal interval of time may elapse between each gaol delivery; already a memorial against the proposed change has received the signature of a good many members of the Bar, who are opposed to the change.

SENTENCE OF MR. O'CONNELL AND THE OTHER TRAVERSERS.

Thursday, May 30.

At four o'clock this day sentence was pronounced by Mr. Justice Burton upon Mr. O'Connell and the other traversers.

The sentence upon Mr. O'Connell was twelve months' imprisonment and 2,000*l.* fine.

The sentence upon Mr. John O'Connell, Mr. C. G. Duffy, Mr. T. M. Ray, Dr. Gray, Mr. Richard Barrett, and Mr. Steele, was, nine months' imprisonment, and a fine of 50*l.* each.

Mr. O'Connell was further ordered to give sureties to keep the peace for seven years, himself in 5,000*l.* and two sureties in 2,500*l.* each. The other traversers for the same period to give securities in 1,000*l.* each, and two sureties for 500*l.*

Sentence having been passed—

Mr. O'Connell immediately rose, and said that he wished to remind the Court that he had made a solemn affidavit, declaring that he had never entered into a conspiracy with the other traversers, or committed the crime with which he was charged. He had now only to say it was his painful conviction that justice had not been done. A sudden and vociferous cheer from nearly all parts of the court followed this result; and although it was accompanied with the clapping of hands amongst the junior bar, and was two or three times repeated, the judges did not interfere, although evidently displeased.

The traversers were given into the custody of the sheriff of the city of Dublin, to be conveyed to the Richmond Penitentiary, on the Circular-road.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

CRIMINAL APPEALS.

THURSDAY, May 30.—Mr. FITZROY KELLY, in moving for leave to bring in a bill to provide an appeal in criminal cases, stated the reasons on which he based it. In all cases of civil action, a defendant can have a verdict set aside, and a new trial granted, on good grounds assigned; but in criminal causes, involving the character, property, or the life of an individual, the decision of a single judge, and the verdict of a single jury, rendered him amenable to all consequences. The reason why this anomaly in the law had been so long suffered to remain, was probably owing to the fact, that the middle and upper classes of society—those who had the framing and the improvement of our judicial code in their own hands—were comparatively little exposed to the operation of the criminal law, which fell chiefly on the humbler classes. He mentioned some striking instances, coming within his own personal experience, in one of which an individual had suffered death for a murder of which he was innocent, and in another in which, with great efforts, the life of the individual had been saved, after conviction, and he was subsequently restored to society. Had it been a matter of 5*l.* or even 40*s.*, a defendant had the power of carrying it by appeal up to the House of Lords. No doubt, in criminal cases, the presiding judge may reserve points of law for the consideration of the judges sitting in the Exchequer Court; but this was not a judicial, hardly a formal proceeding. The judges deliberated in private; if counsel were heard, it was only as a matter of favour: the decisions of the judges were not publicly announced, so that they might be recorded, and thus gradually accumulate a body of decisions, constituting a code of criminal law. Yet in civil causes, the parties concerned had the advantage of their appeals being heard in open court, in the Queen's Bench or the Common Pleas, with the aid of counsel. He proposed, by his bill, to assimilate, so far as it can be done, the criminal to the civil law, in this respect; giving to a prisoner convicted the right of moving the superior courts, to shew cause why the verdict should be set aside, and a new trial obtained, and, if the verdict were against law, why it should not be substituted by one of not guilty. He also proposes to give the power of carrying the case before the House of Lords, by a bill of exceptions or writ of error; leaving it to the discretion of the judge to suspend the execution of the sentence, by directing the prisoner to be kept in custody, or else admitted to bail, pending the final decision. It might be objected, that by leaving the arrest of a sentence to the discretion of a judge, a prisoner might still be exposed to the operation of prejudice or prepossession, and have to suffer a punishment which it might be finally decided he ought not to have endured. But this was incidental. Taking experience as our guide, we were warranted in presuming that justice would be done, and by giving the judge the power of directing the execution of the sentence, there was a check upon frivolous objections or appeals. Another objection might be made to the bill, that it would give the rich a great advantage over the poor. This also was incidental; the bill would confer the right on all; it would remedy many grievous wrongs, falling mainly on the poorer classes, through the present state of the law; it would save the House of Commons, and the public press, many of those discussions, arising out of allegations of injustice, especially in political cases; it would interfere with no existing right or interest [illegible] place our criminal law on a pure and righteous basis.

Mr. GODSON seconded the motion with a few observations.

SIR JAMES GRAHAM could not, against so eminent a lawyer, and in the face of the able speech with which he had prefaced his motion, resist the preliminary proceeding of introducing the bill. But he inculcated great caution in entertaining the proposed alteration. There was this difference between civil and criminal cases, that in the one it was frequently of great importance that long delay should take place, while in the other, as punishment was intended for example, it was frequently as of great importance, for the sake of the public, that execution of the sentence should speedily follow conviction. His own experience led him to place great reliance on the purity and comparative freedom from error of the administration of criminal justice by the judges of the land; and the proposed appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases would involve the necessity of increasing their number—a step the propriety of which he much doubted. But he abstained for the present from discussing the subject, for which, indeed, he was not prepared.

After a few explanatory observations from Mr. F. KELLY, he obtained leave for the introduction of his bill.

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

PAUPERISM.—The following is an abstract of returns just presented to Parliament respecting paupers in Union workhouses in England and Wales. Returns have been received from 486 unions in England, and from 24 in Wales. The number of married paupers in the workhouses in England, on the 30th March, 1843, "who have been there above five years," was 671, and one in Wales. The number of such paupers in English union workhouses above 50, was 555, and one in Wales. The number of such paupers under 50 years of age was 116 in England, and none in Wales. 58 of such paupers in England, and none in Wales, may be considered able-bodied. There were 5,697 married paupers in the workhouses of England, and 445 in those of Wales, who have been therein less than five years. In England, 2,160 of such paupers had been admitted more than once, 1,514 twice, 750 thrice, 361 four times, 161 five times, 87 six times, 69 seven times, 52 eight times, 33 nine times, 21 ten times, 9 eleven times, 22 twelve times, 23 thirteen times, 6 fourteen times, 3 fifteen times, 3 sixteen times, 15 seventeen times, 5 eighteen times, and 12 twenty times and upwards. The numbers for Wales, under the same heads, are 53, 37, 11, 2, 3, five times, and none oftener. There were 4,799 married male paupers in England who had "died in the workhouse since the passing of the Poor Law Amendment Act," and 43 in Wales; while there have died 3,271 females in England, and 22 in Wales. The next return relates to absconders. In 332 unions that have sent returns in England and Wales, in 1839, 298 persons were charged with having absconded from within the workhouse, and 2,326 from without the workhouse, leaving their wives and families chargeable to the union; in 1840, the number was 299 from within, and 2,535 from without the workhouse; in 1841, 324 from within, and 2,494 from without the workhouse; in 1842, it had increased to 2,451 from within, and 3,709 from without the workhouse; and, lastly, in 1843, the number was 447 from within, and 3,600 from without the workhouse (exclusive of the returns from unions and single parishes under Local and Gilbert Acts). From those numbers 4,265 have been apprehended, and 3,864 became re-united to their families without being previously apprehended. Such is an abstract of returns that occupy nearly fifty folio pages of figures.

THE PROPERTY TAX.—A return of the net amount of duty collected for the year ended the 5th of April, 1843, also of the number of claims of exemption received at the Tax-office up to the 20th day of May, 1844, &c., has just been issued on the motion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. We find, on examining this paper, that the gross total amount of the collection for the year in question was—in England, 4,989,801*l.*, and in Scotland, 394,324*l.*, making a grand total for the whole of Great Britain amounting to the sum of 5,384,125*l.* Of the former amount (4,989,801*l.*), the sum of 2,150,412*l.* was collected under schedule A; the sum of 298,763*l.* under schedule B; the sum of 812,892*l.* under schedule C; the sum of 1,466,985*l.* under schedule D; and the sum of 260,657*l.* under schedule E. This account is made up on the amount of duty collected to the 5th of April, 1844, in respect of the year 1842, ended April, 1843. The amount collected in Scotland cannot at present, it appears, be distinguished in schedules. The second branch of the return informs us that the total number of claims of exemption under the Property Tax Act received at the Tax-office up to the 20th of May, 1844, amounts to 82,854 (of which about 6,000 have been found defective, and returned to the surveyors for correction or amendment); that the total number of claims in which the duty has been repaid, amounts to 75,500; that the amount of the duty repaid is 69,101*l.*; that the total number of claims in which orders have been issued by the Board of Taxes for discharging the property of the claimants from assessment amounts to 49,370; and the total number of claims remaining in the office for examination and inquiry to 1,354, which were to have been disposed of during the past week.

POOR LAW RETURNS.—Mr. W. O. Stanley has moved for and obtained, in addition to the voluminous statistics on the same subject already presented to Parliament during the present session, a return of the average annual expenditure of the parishes comprised in each of the unions in England and Wales during the three years prior to union; the amount expended for the relief and maintenance of the poor, and number of paupers and illegitimate children relieved in the years 1841, 1842, and 1843; also the number of unions now without workhouses. From these returns the following general summary is obtained:—Taking all the counties of England, it will be found that the total number of unions amounts to 548, being an average of about 13 unions to each county; that the gross total population in 1841 amounted to 13,109,794 souls; that the average annual expenditure for the relief and maintenance of the poor three years prior to union, amounted to the sum of 6,332,904*l.*; that the expenditure for the relief and maintenance of the poor in the three following years amounted, in 1841, to 4,028,287*l.* in 1842, to 4,172,018*l.*, and in 1843 to 4,406,088*l.*; that the total number of in-door and out-door paupers relieved during the winter quarters of the same years, 1841, 1842, and 1843, amounted respectively to 1,043,118, 1,153,256, and 1,250,466, and that the total number of illegitimate children (in-door and out-door) relieved during the same periods was, respectively, 25,361, 25,679, and 25,899, It appears further, that the proportion of illegitimate children in 1843 to every 1,000 of the total number of paupers relieved in that year was 20·7; and that the proportion of illegitimate children in 1843 to every 1,000 of the population, was 2·0. In Wales, the total number of unions amounted to 42, being an average of 3½ to each county; the population, in 1841, to 884,173 souls; the average annual expenditure for the relief and maintenance of the poor three years prior to union, to 276,030*l.*; that the expenditure for the relief and maintenance of the poor amounted in 1841 to 260,233*l.*; in 1842 to 266,642*l.*; and in 1843 to 273,407*l.*; the number of in-door and out door paupers relieved during the winter quarters of those years, amounted respectively to 73,405, 82,181, and 82,781; whilst the number of illegitimate children (both in-door and out door) relieved during the same period, amounted to 3,762, 3,678, and 3,800 respectively. The proportion of illegitimate children in 1843 to every 1,000 of the total number of paupers relieved in that year, was 45·9; and the proportion of illegitimate children, in 1843, to every 1,000 of the population, 4·3. Under the head of expenditure for the "relief, &c., of the poor," the following items are included, viz., in maintenance, out-relief, establishment charges, with salaries, workhouse and emigration loans repaid, and other purposes "immediately" connected with the relief of the poor.

BEER.—A return to an order of the hon. the House of Commons, dated the 2nd of April, 1844, for an account of the quantity of beer exported, from the 5th day of January, 1843, to the 5th day of January, 1844, gives 146,621 as the number of barrels of beer on which drawback was paid.

CRIMINAL LUNATICS.—The hon. and gallant member for the city of Lincoln has moved for and obtained a return of the number of criminal lunatics now under confinement, specifying the name, age, and sex of each person, the place of confinement, the nature of the offence committed, and the period at which such confinement commenced. The following appear to be the results:—The number of criminal lunatics at present immured within the various gaols of Great Britain amounts altogether to 118, the crimes committed by whom, whilst labouring, we suppose, under "morbid delusions," comprise all sorts of offences, both against the person and against property, including murder, arson, burglary, rape, cutting and maiming, assaults, &c. One man, named David Davis, is confined in consequence of having fired at Viscount Palmerston, M.P. in the year 1818. The number of criminal lunatics now confined in lunatic asylums in the different counties of England and Wales, amounts—in Bedford to 3, in Chester to 11, in Cornwall to 8, in Devon to 6, in Dorset to 2, in Durham to 6, in Gloecster to 10, in Hants to 4, in Herts to 1, in Kent to 7, in Lancaster to 17, in Leicester to 4, in the licensed asylums of this metropolis to 22, in Norfolk to 1, in Norwich to 2, in Notts to 1, in Oxford to 2, in Salop to 3, in Somerset to 4, in Stafford to 2, in Suffolk to 6, in Sussex to 1, in Warwick to 2, in Wilts to 8, in Worcester to 3, in York (west riding) to 3, and in York (east riding) to 2. The return does not give any particulars respecting Wales.

WOOLLEN MANUFACTURES AND WOOL.—Accounts of the quantities of wool imported and exported in the year 1843, also of the quantities and declared value of British woollen manufactures exported from the United Kingdom in that year, have been printed, on the motion of the members for London and Leeds, Mr. Masterman and Mr. W. Aldam, jun. It appears from this paper, that the gross total quantities of sheep and lambs' wool imported into the United Kingdom in 1843 amounted to 47,785,061lb.; and that the net total quantity retained for home consumption amounted to 46,443,032lb., of which 17,736,388lb. were entered at a duty of 1d. per lb.; 7,804,918lb. at ½d. duty per lb.; and 20,901,726lb. duty free. The total quantities re-exported from the United Kingdom in the year 1843 were 2,734,541lb., and the quantities remaining warehoused in bond on the 5th of January, 1844, 3,827,513lb. By far the greatest quantity of the above wool, &c. comes from Germany and New South Wales. The total quantity of British sheep and lambs' wool and woollen yarn exported from the United Kingdom in 1843, amounted (the former) to 8,179,639 lb., and the latter to 7,410,313lb. The total quantity of Alpaca and Llama wool imported into this country last year, was 1,458,042lb., and that of mohair, or goats' wool, 575,523lb. More than two-thirds of our exports of sheep and lambs' wool are taken by Belgium, and the remaining third (on a rough calculation) by France. We also find that the gross total declared value of British woollen manufactures exported from Great Britain and Ireland during the year 1843 amounted to 6,790,232*l.*

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

No subject relating to the administration of the Law claims the particular attention of the magistracy or the Profession, save the protest which appears among the leading articles of the Surrey Grand Jury against the continuance of this useless and troublesome tribunal. It is to be hoped that Parliament will speedily interfere for its supression.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

No appointment has yet been made to the vacant Bankruptcy Commissionership. It will be seen that some new orders of importance have been issued by the Court of Review, an early copy of which we have procured. The Term has brought forth little of interest, but the subsequent sittings will doubtless yield some important judgments that are in arrear.

LAWYERS FROM CAMBRIDGE.

SIR,—Turning to the Cambridge calendar to see in what year the Lord Chief Baron was admitted to the degree of Bachelor of Arts, I was surprised at observing the number of students who took a first class or Wrangler's degree that had thrived at the Bar. Yours,

A CANTAB.

[illegible], May [illegible]. The Queen was this day pleased to confer the honour of knighthood upon Frederic Thesiger, Esq., her Majesty's Solicitor-General.

WHITEHALL, May 27.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed William Bickley, of Sheffield, in the county of York, gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Mr. William Bell one of the official assignees in the Court of Bankruptcy, in the room of the late Mr. Lackington.

MIDDLE TEMPLE, May 25.—This being the first call-day, in Trinity Term, of those students of this honourable society who had kept the usual number of terms to qualify them for admission to the bar, the undermentioned gentleman only was sworn in before the benchers present:—Mr. Joseph Nicholson, the only son of the Rev. Edward Nicholson, rector of Pentridge, in the county of Dorset.

GRAY'S INN, May 29.—William Shaw, Esq., was this day called to the degree of barrister-at-law, by the Honourable Society of Gray's-inn.

ATTORNEYS' GOWNS.—We understand the attorneys in many places have adopted the practice of wearing their official costume when they appear in public, in the discharge of their duties; and that several legal gentlemen in this town intend, immediately after the New Town Hall shall be opened, to do the same when attending the Courts of Quarter and Petty Session, Courts of Trial, and otherwise.—Essex Standard.

THE BAR.—It is stated positively to be the intention of the solicitors to reduce the fees accustomed to be paid to the members of the bar to one-half. This step has been determined on in consequence of the schedule of fees issued by the Lord Chancellor.—Dublin Monitor.

THE LAW OF ARREST IN THE CITY.—A curious circumstance, exemplifying the benefit of the law of arrest in the city, occurred a few days ago. A mercantile house in Jamaica, having determined upon a speculation of shipping a large quantity of goods for the markets of Central America, engaged a German, who was proceeding to those parts on some business of his own, to undertake the management of the speculation. The German accordingly proceeded on his errand, and the house in Jamaica received from him several letters, announcing sales from time to time made, until it appeared that nearly 5,000*l*. had been received, when the correspondence suddenly ceased, and the house could get no more answers to their letters. Under these circumstances, the firm naturally became alarmed, and set on foot inquiries concerning the German, when they learned that he had gone to New York; and, subsequently, that he had sailed for England. They forthwith despatched one of their clerks to England by a steamer, which was fortunately on the point of starting, in search of the party. The clerk arrived in London late on the evening of the 11th ult., and on the following morning proceeded to the house of the correspondents of his employers. The correspondents, without delay, accompanied him to their solicitors, an eminent firm in the City, and, on their way, to adopt means of frustrating the palpable object of the German, they were lucky enough to meet the identical person coming out of the offices of the Columbian Mining Company. A messenger soon learned that the German had called at the office of the company in order to obtain an introduction to a bullion broker, and that he had been referred to a well-known City house of that description. At this critical time the parties ran off to the bullion broker's, who informed them that the German had left with them to be assayed a very large quantity bullion and gold dust, and was to call at two o'clock that afternoon to receive the value. Application was then made to a judge for the arrest of this wholesale robber, to effect which a warrant was granted, and an officer was posted ready to meet him at the place where the treasure lay. As might be expected, the German was punctual to his appointment, and on making his appearance was shocked and astonished at being grabbed for the sum of 5,000*l*. On being arrested he exclaimed, "Hang dis England—half an hour more and it would have been all right." He could not, of course, procure bail, and the only alternative he had was to make a full acknowledgment, and to give up the key of his luggage, which, upon being searched, was found to contain bills and securities, amounting, together with the bullion and gold dust, to nearly the full sum for which he had been seized. The not least curious part of the story is, that the German arrived in London only a few hours before the arrival of the clerk of the Jamaica house, and that both put up at the same hotel, neither of them being aware of the locus in quo of the other. The business of the clerk, it will be observed, was completed in the most satisfactory manner in two hours, and in less than two days from that of their arrival, they were both passengers in the same vessel for Jamaica.

JUSTICES' JUSTICE.—From the Preston Guardian, of May 25.—The grand jury at this place ignored the bills against John Holgate and Richard Anderton, charged with stealing six drinking-glasses, at [illegible] on the 9th of April. On handing in these ignored bills, the Chairman requested to know from the foreman upon what ground no bill had been returned, as it appeared to him that it was a clear case of theft. The foreman replied that it appeared to them, from the evidence adduced, that it was a mere "larking" affair. The Chairman expressed to the Grand Jury his strong disapprobation of their finding in these cases, and explained to them the nature of the oath which they had taken. The foreman and his coadjutors remained firm; but, at the request of the chairman, they again retired to consider their finding in these two cases. At the close of their duties, the foreman again returned the bills ignored, when the chairman severely censured the conduct of the jury, as a clearer case of theft never had come under his observation, the accused party having been actually found with the glasses in his pockets. The foreman, in reply, said the jury believed they had not been used as gentlemen by the court when their judgment was called in question by the chairman, who had been pleased to say that they were not men of common sense; and he (the foreman) wished to know whether they had not the power to ignore any bills that came before them? The chairman replied that the grand jury were not there to call in question the decisions of the court, and he believed they had manifested an unusual degree of obstinacy in still ignoring these bills, and ignorance as to the nature of their oath. The foreman said they had most impartially examined the evidence in both cases. The chairman answered that his opinion, and that of the bench of magistrates, was, that they had not done their duty. The jury were then dismissed.

THE CHANCERY COMPENSATION JOB.—It will be seen by our Parliamentary report that Lord John Russell defended Lord Cottenham from the imputation of having assented to the compensation clauses of the bill relating to the abolition of the office of the six clerks. In the debate upon Mr. Watson's motion, Sir James Graham defended the scandalous job by intimating that it had received the assent of Lord Cottenham. The right honourable baronet said that he had made the statement upon the authority of Mr. Wainwright. It is quite clear this matter cannot rest without some further explanation. Lord Cottenham's authority, cited by Sir James Graham, was quite enough to turn the division by the small majority—only sixteen—by which Mr. Watson's motion was refused. It would appear, that a gross imposition was practised upon the House of Commons in this misrepresentation of Lord Cottenham's opinion. Mr. Wainwright must explain how he came to lead Sir James Graham into this error, not less a reflection upon Lord Cottenham's character, than an insult to the House of Commons.—Chronicle.

WILL OF VISCOUNT SIDMOUTH.—The will and codicil of the late Henry Addington Viscount Sidmouth have just been proved in Doctors' Commons by Thomas Grimston Bucknall Estcourt, Thomas Hoskins, and William Townsend, esqrs. The will is dated in 1841, and gives nearly the whole of the property to his son, Leonard Addington (now Viscount Sidmouth), to Earl Powis "the full-length portraits of George the Third and Queen Charlotte," and the remainder of his pictures (which are considered one of the finest collections, including many by the old masters) to his son. To valet, butler, housekeeper, footmen, grooms, and a host of other domestics, legacies varying from 5*l*. to 200*l*. The codicil is dated as lately as 1843. The personal property is sworn under 35,000*l*. After a very few unimportant legacies, he gives the residue of his property to his son.—Britannia.

WILL OF THE MARQUIS OF WINCHESTER.—The will of the Most Honourable Charles Ingoldsby Paulet, Marquis of Winchester, of Amport House, Andover, has just been proved by Henry Beaumont Coles, Esq., one of the executors, power of proving hereafter being reserved for Sir John Walter Pollen, Bart., the other. The will, which is very short, and dated 1843, gives nearly the whole of his property to his son (styled by courtesy Earl of Wiltshire), now Marquis of Winchester. To his executors 200*l*. each, as an acknowledgment for their trouble in acting as such; to butler, housekeeper, and very many other servants, annuities and legacies respectively, varying from 10*l*. to 100*l*. The personalty is sworn under 18,000*l*. The deceased was styled "Premier Marquis of England." the title of marquis having been bestowed on the family of Winchester on the creation in 1551.—Britannia.

THE DERBY AND LEGER LOTTERIES.—It has just transpired, from a source on which the most implicit reliance can be placed, that it is the intention of government to adopt measures for the immediate suppression of the above speculations. Arrangements are about being made with the magistracy to carry this intention of the government into effect; for which purpose the police authorities will receive instructions to give ample notice to publicans, that if they for the future permit "lotteries," or "sweepstakes," to be held, they will not only subject themselves to heavy penalties, but, by permitting them to take place on their premises, such an illegal proceeding will endanger the licenses of their respective houses. The great extent to which these lotteries have been carried has induced the government to come to the above resolution, and the suppression of every species of gambling at all public races will be followed up by strict regulations being issued for the abolition of the numerous Derby, Oaks, and Leger lotteries and sweepstakes which are established in almost every town and village of the least importance, from the Lands'-end to John O'Groat's. It is only within these last few years that the rage for this sort of speculation has become popular; consequently, the Derby lotteries have been supported by all classes of society, from the peer to the peasant. The amount of prizes varies from 2,000*l*. to 20s., the Bishes of the Derby world being Bake, of Manchester; Ashley, of Sheffield; and Evans, of Covent-garden. Some of these numerous lotteries have been, as is well known, conducted on the most rascally system, with a view solely to the aggrandisement of the scheming proprietors, who have not unfrequently held out the most tempting allurements by means of specious advertisements in the public prints, in order to victimize the public. The government assert that the existence of these lotteries, particularly being invariably held in public-houses and taverns, is pernicious to the public morals, begets an inordinate desire for gambling, and engenders habits of intemperance and profligacy, which justify the government in interfering to prevent the further spread and progress of this description of clubs, of the illegality of which there is not the slightest doubt, the suppression of which is consequently fully determined upon.

DETERMINATION OF THE HOME SECRETARY TO PUT DOWN GAMING AT RACES.—A letter was received yesterday morning by Robert Blunt, Esq., the mayor of Windsor, from the Right Hon. Sir James Graham, the Home Secretary, stating that it was the determination of her Majesty's government to suppress, by means of the strong arm of the law, every description of gaming at the various race-courses throughout the kingdom, and calling upon the authorities of Windsor to render every aid in their power, during the ensuing races at Ascot, to carry into effect the intentions of the executive by preventing gambling of every description from being carried on within the boundaries of their jurisdiction. Previously to the receipt of the communication from the Home-office by the mayor, a public notification had been issued by the magistrates, to the effect that no gaming-tables will be allowed in the borough during the race-week. Sir James Graham stated in his letter to the mayor, that if any extra force were required, in addition to the local police, to prevent gaming within the borough, a detachment from the metropolitan police would be forwarded from London to assist the police of the town in the suppression of gambling during the Ascot gathering. The Windsor police, however, being quite sufficient to carry the instructions from the Home-office into full effect, the offer of Sir James Graham was very respectfully declined.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

"At all events, the fact is now palpable that capital punishment operates as an obstacle to the administration of justice, and consequently as an encouragement to crime."—Leading Article of the LAW TIMES, Vol. 3, No. 55, p. 46.

SIR,—Whether in the actual state of society capital punishment should continue a part of our criminal code, has become so very grave and engrossing a subject, one so deeply interesting to every thinking human being, for if unnecessary, it is no more nor less than a question of social suicide, that a letter advocating its continuance, however weak in premises, and illogical in conclusions, cannot, when published in your columns, be allowed to go unanswered.

Your correspondent, Mr. W. Giles, has entered his protest against the abolition of capital punishment, and having ventured, at the same time, to give publicity to his reasons for doing so, I may be permitted to examine them.

"The question," he says, "divides itself into two parts: whether the civil power has a right to inflict capital punishment; and whether the exercise of such right is expedient."

I apprehend that much might be said by skilful casuists on both sides of the first part of the inquiry, but as the consideration of it is unnecessary for the purpose of the present discussion, I am willing to concede to Mr. Giles the full benefit of Sir James Mackintosh's opinion to the extent he states it, viz. 'as a part of the right of self-defence with which societies, as well as individuals, are endowed." One thing, at any rate, may be regarded as certain, that whenever societies are placed in the emergent necessity of shedding blood in self-defence, blood will be shed with or without any pre-existent law expressly authorizing it.

But we are not discussing the right in extremis; the question agitating the public mind, and now at issue, is, whether the circumstances under which capital punishment is in the ordinary course of things, inflicted by our laws, are such, looking even to the extremest case of guilt so punished (murder), as render that infliction justifiable or even expedient?

Admitting the existence of an extraordinary emergency, in which the sudden stroke of death were required by society in self-defence—(I can really hardly conceive of such a necessity in time of peace!)—but admitting it for the sake of argument, such necessity we will say might be pleaded in justification of the extreme measure. It may well be questioned whether mere expediency would render the act justifiable;(a) but if we (the advocates of abolition) can make the expediency of capital punishment appear merely doubtful, surely humanity is entitled to a merciful construction of that doubt? But if, further, we can demonstrate the inexpediency, nay more, the downright mischievous tendency (and we say we can), of capital punishments, the further continuance of them becomes an abomination, clearly inconsistent with Christianity. Because, independently of the question of necessity or expediency, I deny and undertake to prove that no sanction can be found in the Sacred Writings for their perpetration in the present advanced stage of the world and of civilization.

Let us examine Mr. Giles's arguments. He begins: "With regard to the former (the right of inflicting capital punishment), Blackstone remarks on murder: 'The words of the Mosaic law (over and above the general precept to Noah, that "whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed") are very emphatical in prohibiting the pardon of murderers. "Moreover, ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer who is guilty of death."'"

I reply,—First, the argument from the general precept proves too much, because if by the Mosaic law murder was punished capitally, so was blasphemy (Lev. xxiv. 10—16 incl.); where we find the two precepts put in juxtaposition. "He that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, dying let him die," v. 16. "He that striketh and killeth a man, dying let him die," v. 17. Neglect of the Sabbath (Num. xv. 35). Witchcraft (very emphatically, as judges formerly did not fail to remark: "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live," Ex. xxii. 18). Adultery (b) ("They shall both die," Deut. xxii. 22).

(a) "Under the New dispensation, (says M. Woolrych), if even the great end of prevention were effected by the stroke of death, it might be questionable how far upon many occasions we should be justified in maintaining such severity in the land."

(b) This crime was capital here even in the days of Cromwell, and met not with the slightest mercy among the Hebrews.

Fornication in certain cases (Lev. xx. 17—19; Deut. xxii. 13—21 incl.). Striking, cursing, obstinately refusing obedience to father or mother (Ex. xxi. 15—17; Deut. xxi, 18—21 incl.). To suppress the truth—"He shall bear his iniquity," "which is usually understood of capital punishment."—Calmet, tit. "Perjury." (Lev. v. 1). Refusing obedience to the commandment of the priest on appeals in "hard and doubtful matters in judgment between blood and blood, cause and cause, &c." (Deut. xvii. 8—12 incl.) Many other instances of like severities might be gathered from the Mosaic code. Who would now think of quoting it, in favour or excuse of capital punishment for blasphemy, infidelity, or contempt of an Ecclesiastical Court! But by what reason does Mr. Giles, or any one else, distinguish between these awful denunciations? How is he taught to put his finger on one part of the Jewish code and say we are bound or justified by this, but this command is of no force whatever? How would he answer the law-givers of Cromwell's time, strangling the adulterer and the adulteress? Will it be urged (asks an able writer on the subject, Mr. Woolrych, in his "History and Results of Capital Punishment in England"); that abuse of parents should be forthwith punished capitally? "The reason," he adds, "fails at once." It is also to be borne in mind, when looking to the administration of the laws among the Hebrews, that they lived in a widely different state of things from what we have any experience of; that their government itself was a theocracy, signalized by the frequent immediate interference of the Deity, facts which open a field for much observation. But it will suffice to conclude my remarks on this point with a quotation from the last-mentioned work, which appears to me eminently appropriate:—"Reasons," says its author, "which we dare not venture to interpret no doubt actuated the Divine mind in those days (of the Jewish dispensation) in permitting the life of man to fall more frequently than at present a sacrifice to justice; but now that the Christian dispensation has been bestowed upon us, while we submit in silence to the sovereignty of Jehovah concerning that which is past, we cannot be surprised at the anxiety which is universally manifested in favour of life, nor at the increasing dislike of capital punishment."

I cannot help adding that, secondly, Mr. Giles's argument is bad; because, if the Mosaic precept be obligatory, we find it, as Blackstone remarks, "emphatically forbidding the pardon of murderers;" a power which, nevertheless, the Crown is continually exercising! Is the "prerogative" superior in this particular to the "Divine command?" The learned author of the Commentaries, who, in vol. iv. p. 47, had cited the general precept, gives us no explanation of the anomaly, where, in p. 457 of the same book, he tells us, "It is remarkable that there is no precedent of a pardon in the register for any other homicide than that which happens se defendendo, or per infortunium, to which two species the King's pardon was especially confined by the statutes 2 Edw. 3, c. 2, and 14 Edw. 3, c. 15."

In which "remarkable" instance, let me add, our law then bore a striking resemblance to the Jewish ordinances (Ex. xxi. 29, 30)—a fact which would seem to have invited the learned judge's attention. But, no; he passes on without one word of comment, to inform us that the stat. 13 Rich. 2, c. 1, enlarged the royal power, "provided the King were not deceived in the intended object of his mercy." At the revolution, he continues—"the doctrine of non obstantes ceasing, it was doubted whether murder could be pardoned generally;" but "it was determined by the Court of King's Bench that the King may."

It is clear that the divine command was obligatory on the Jews during the Jewish theocracy. It is equally clear that the able commentator did not look upon it as binding in his days in the light of a command; but he introduced it as a shift—an ad captandum" argument—in favour of the existence of a punishment, the propriety of which was not then much questioned; and consequently, having adopted so much of it as suited his convenience, he dismissed any further consideration of it; nor did he feel himself called upon to give any explanation of that course, or to shew (looking to the command as divested of its obligatory character) that what was good legislation one thousand years before the coming of Christ (Noah's epoch) is equally so nearly two thousand years after the opening of his divine mission, when the promulgation of his benevolent doctrines has gradually enlarged the sympathies and ameliorated the still progressive condition of the great human family. Nor has Mr. Giles, of Frome, done so.

It is much shorter work to start than answer objections; and I have been induced, knowing its popular character, to treat the argument from the Mosaic law at such length, that (with your kind permission) I will defer to a second occasion my reply to Mr. Giles's remarks on the sanction which "Christianity" and "reason," as he says, confer on capital punishment.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

GEORGE JOHN DURRANT.

Chelmsford, May 13, 1844.

ANSWERS

To some of the questions circulated by the Criminal Law Commissioners, for a copy of which see 2 Law Times, p. 358.

Question 1.—So far as my experience (acquired in the criminal courts of the county, and which has been generally as prosecuting solicitor) enables me to judge, I think, that the present procedure for the purpose of preliminary inquiry on criminal charges is as perfect as can be hoped to be attained, having regard to the necessary imperfection of all mundane affairs. The practice that vests in the justices the power to permit or disallow professional aid to persons under a charge of felony, for their defence on such preliminary inquiry, appears hard, but, in practice, the privilege, I believe, is rarely denied, where the ends of justice do not urgently require it. The present mode of binding over prosecutors and witnesses appears to me efficient, and I do not think that it would be prudent to alter or extend the powers of bailing.

2.—I think the present mode of formal charge by indictment is good, but I am of opinion that in cases not involving the life of the person charged, or where the punishment is less than transportation for life, and a preliminary investigation has been had before magistrates in petty sessions, which has been followed by a commitment, that the inquiry before a grand jury might well be dispensed with, and the accused party be put on his trial without the intervention of a grand jury; but in cases where the charge has been dismissed by the magistrates, and also in the above excepted cases, the jurisdiction of the grand jury should be retained. I should give a coroner's verdict involving a criminal charge against any person the same force only as a commitment by magistrates, and would put the party charged by such verdict upon his trial by indictment before the petty jury, without the intervention in any such case of a grand jury. I believe it is now the universal practice to arraign parties accused by the verdict of a coroner's jury as well on the coroner's inquisition as by indictment; this is done, to guard against the frequent errors that are found in coroners' inquisitions, which are usually prepared in haste, and often by coroners who have had no legal education.

3.—I most decidedly approve of the rule, so far as regards criminal charges, that requires the verdict to be unanimous.

4.—This is, I conceive, a question of much difficulty; it is, no doubt, most desirable that there should be some better and more extended power to correct the erroneous verdicts of juries in criminal cases, but I fear that such can hardly be attained but at a considerable expense to the accused party, which could only be borne by the rich; and it appears questionable whether it would not be more prudent to leave the matter as it is, than create a remedy which could only be useful to the wealthy, and thereby cause discontent among the poorer classes of society. I think the present practice of the judges at assizes, reserving questions of law for the opinions of the judges, is good, and power should be given to the justices at sessions to reserve points of law arising in criminal cases in those courts, upon which they should take the opinion of the judges at the next assizes, who should have power, where the case needed it, to consult with the other judges in the same way as upon the points reserved in their own courts.

6.—I am of opinion that the forfeiture of the property of a felon to the state is a proper penalty for his crime against society, but I would have felonies and misdemeanors better classified, and would put the petty larcenies among the latter class; corruption of blood appears only a relic of barbarism.

9.—The guilt of accessaries before the fact appears equal to that of the principal, and the moral guilt is frequently greater; therefore, I would abolish the distinction so far as regards principals and accessaries before the fact, but retain it as to accessaries after the fact; for an accessary after the fact is often induced to become so from a wish, produced by a benevolent inclination, to screen the guilty.

ADVERTISEMENTS OF SESSIONS, &c.

The time is approaching for announcing the various County and Borough Sessions; we, therefore, again call the attention of our readers to the importance of procuring them to be advertised in the Law Times, for the information of the Profession, to whom a knowledge of their times of meeting is almost essential. The Clerks of the Peace for Boroughs have generally authority to do so without special permission of the Councils, and we hope they will act upon it. In the Counties, the magistrates must consent.—Many have already done so. In others, the Law Societies have passed resolutions and framed petitions to the Justices, setting forth the utility of the information to them, and requesting that the notices may be inserted in the Law Times specially for the use of the Profession, and these petitions are to be presented at the next Sessions, and will no doubt be acceded to by the magistracy. This has been done in Yorkshire, and other Law Societies might beneficially follow such an example.

THE APPENDIX.

The First Part was published on Monday last. It embraces Mr. Redgrove's valuable Statistics of Crime in England and Wales as returned to the Home Office; an Analysis of the Criminal Statistics of the Metropolis; the Report just issued by the Tithe Commissioners; Lord Brougham's interesting and remarkable speech on the Introduction of the "Bill for the Consolidation of the Criminal Law," and a portion of the Bill itself, which is, probably, the most important legal treatise ever published, for it gives a complete and classified analysis of the existing criminal law of this country.

The Bill itself is upwards of 200 folio pages, and, as it is in the House of Lords only, a copy of it cannot be procured except from a Peer, although it is a work which every Lawyer ought not merely to peruse, but to study.

As nearly as the calculation can be made, Parts II. and III. of the Appendix will complete the publication of this precious document, which will be followed by Mr. SERGEANT MANNING's learned report on the Law of Debtor and Creditor.

In reply to many inquiries as to the nature and intent of this Appendix, we beg to state, that its purpose is to supply to the Profession, at a very trifling cost, in a collected form and conveniently for binding with their volumes of the LAW TIMES, with copious Index for reference, legal documents whose length forbids their insertion in the body of the Journal, but which most of the members of the Profession would be likely to desire to possess either for reading or reference. We shall strictly adhere to the design of including in the Appendix only papers of permanent value and utility; so that, in fact, at one-twentieth of the cost of the same matter in the ordinary law-book form, they will procure a body of information, much of which they can obtain by no other means, and none but at tenfold the cost at which they will procure it here.

The part already published will convey the best notion of the kind of information that will be contained in the APPENDIX. It is not improbable that we may be induced to mingle with these public documents occasional treatises on branches of the law which do not justify a distinct volume devoted to them, but upon which every practitioner would find a learned essay extremely useful for reference, especially when it can be procured for the trifling cost of ninepence or a shilling. We have been offered a useful treatise on the Law of Mandamus, which, if the Profession approve, we may, perhaps, introduce in this manner. And so from time to time with other subjects.

As only a limited number of copies of this Appendix have been printed, readers who purpose to procure it should send their orders forthwith. The impression taken has been little more than one-third of that of the LAW TIMES, for the Publisher could form no estimate of the demand, and feared to risk too much.

THE REPORTS.

WE have received some complaints of slight inaccuracies in the Reports. In justice to the learned gentlemen to whom we are indebted for their notes, we must take this opportunity to observe, that the marvel is, how they contrive to be so accurate, not that they sometimes make mistakes.

Readers must bear in mind that the Reports of the LAW TIMES are peculiar; they profess to be nothing more than a Digest of Cases, and a sort of record of the business of the Court. It would be impossible to make them otherwise consistently with the design, which is simply to convey to the Profession such general information of the progress of decisions as may serve to inform them of the substance of judgments, until they can procure the full report through some of the publications which give it at length, and with the accuracy which can only be secured by inspection of the briefs and pleadings, and a reference to every case cited; and this necessarily involves delay.

The LAW TIMES Reports, on the contrary, aim primarily at speed of publication. To secure this, they must necessarily consist only of the reporters' notes, taken in the Court, amid its noise and hurry, the loud tones of counsel, and the low voices of the judges, names caught by the ear alone, and therefore very apt to be mis-spelled; and decisions delivered in the shape of a conversation, which makes it impossible always to ascertain precisely what it was. Thus, for instance, it not unfrequently happens that the judge merely says, Take a rule, and the reporter is left to guess whether it be a rule absolute or nisi, and so with a mass of other business. It is satisfactory to us to find that the errors of which complaint has reached us have been mainly of this kind. It is very rarely that the Reporter has erred in his facts or in the law. The main object of the Reports, so far as they interest the Profession generally, is, therefore, secured with singular accuracy. The mistakes that occur are such as interest only the party engaged in the cause; for it matters little to anybody beside, provided the law decided be correctly stated, whether the rule be absolute or nisi, or the verdict go for the plaintiff or the defendant.

We repeat, that it is a choice between the risk of occasional mistakes or delay; between invariable accuracy and speed. Both cannot, by any human skill, be secured. Reports must be notes of cases merely, like those of the LAW TIMES, or elaborate and revised Reports, whose appearance must be delayed for some months.

Some correspondents have strangely mistaken an announcement of last week, that BITTLESTON's and SYMONS's Magistrates' Cases would appear only in the Verulam Society Reports, which they have construed into a notice that no Magistrates' Cases will appear in the LAW TIMES for the future. We hope such a notion has not been generally received, for it is quite an error. We desire it to be understood that all the usual Reports of the LAW TIMES, Magistrates' Cases included, will be continued precisely as heretofore. No change whatever will be made in the Report department of this journal. Still the early note of every decision will be given here; and the Verulam Society Practical Reports will present to the Profession full and revised Reports of the most important and useful cases.

THE CRIMINAL LAW CONSOLIDATION BILL.

WE should be wanting in duty if we omitted to direct the special attention of the Profession to this valuable document, the produce of the united industry and ability of the Commission to whom was intrusted the task of inquiring into the Criminal Law. It is the first formal attempt at codification in this country, and as such it deserves to be received with a support and gratitude which will be confirmed by further acquaintance with its extraordinary merits.

Perhaps it should be explained that it is not, as many have supposed, a project for changing the law. It is merely an artistic collection, consolidation, and classification of the existing law. It alters nothing. It only defines distinctly that which was before doubtful, and puts into words that which previously existed in tradition under the title of the Common Law.

This Bill, therefore, has a twofold value. To the Profession it is of present practical utility as the most perfect treatise on the Criminal Law, the best methodized arrangement of its complicated provisions that ever has been published, and without which no lawyer's library can be complete, nor without acquaintance with which can any legal head be properly furnished. To the public it carries an early promise of the boon of an intelligible code by which individual conduct is to be regulated, and the urgent necessity for which is proved by the strange facts so eloquently stated by Lord Brougham, in the instructive speech with which he introduced it to the Legislature.

Very properly an interval is to be allowed for discussion and investigation before this great measure is made law, and advantage is to be taken of the opportunity to revise such parts of our criminal jurisprudence as reason and experience disapprove. Opinion, therefore, should be freely exercised and expressed upon it, and where can this be done more advantageously than in the columns of the LAW TIMES? To aid this object, the Bill itself, which can otherwise be procured with difficulty, is included in the APPENDIX, and we ask our readers to study it with the care it deserves, and make such comments upon it as their practical experience may suggest, provided only that they adopt that first virtue in all correspondence for the press—brevity.

We propose, in a series of articles, to survey its provisions, and use them to embody such remarks as the members of the Profession may forward.

The first subject claiming attention will be the objection raised by the Lord Chancellor and some others to that portion of the Bill which proposes to codify the Common Law; for all were unanimous in approving, nay, in admitting the absolute necessity of the design for codifying the Statute Law.

GRAND JURIES.

THE Grand Jury system is beginning to be understood, even by the non-professional public; to the Lawyer, its absurdity and inutility have long been apparent. Already we have recorded the protest by one Grand Jury against the needless cost and trouble to which they are put. Another has followed the example, and in emphatic language declared their opinion that the machinery is as worthless for any purpose of justice as it is vexatious to the public. The Times reports the following occurrence at the SURREY ADJOURNED SESSIONS, MAY 28.

(Before Mr. T. E. JOHNSON, and an exceedingly full Bench of Magistrates.)

On the Grand Jury coming into court this morning with the first of the bills, the foreman handed in the following important presentment relative to the constitution of Grand Juries:—

"We, whose names are here subscribed, being the Grand Jury of the county of Surrey, in session assembled, do present—that it is the opinion of the Grand Jury, in the present improved mode of administering the public justice of the country, that the institutions of Grand Juries, though at the time they were established they were of great value, is now not only unnecessary, but actually injurious to the public interests:—

"1. Because the careful investigation of the cases by the committing magistrates, aided by professional men who appear for the prosecution and in the defence of the accused, have fully sifted the case in its preliminary stages. By this the institution of Grand Juries is rendered unnecessary.

"2. The opportunity for tampering with witnesses, in order that the evidence given before the Grand Jury may induce them to ignore the bill, although the evidence given before the magistrates fully justified the committal of the prisoner.

"3. That the province of the Grand Jury is often abused by having bills preferred which relate to accusations that have never been previously investigated by magistrates, and which are often the result of a desire to extort money from the parties accused, or for the purpose of revenge.

"For these reasons the Grand Jury consider their functions are no longer beneficial, that they are often injurious, and might be well dispensed with."

The presentment was signed by the foreman and the whole of the Grand Jury.

The CHAIRMAN remarked, that the presentment was a very important public document, and he understood that a similar one had been made in another place. It was not, however, in the province of the magistrates to offer any opinion on the subject; but he trusted it would receive that proper attention which its importance demanded by the official authorities to whom it would be forwarded. The learned Chairman having thanked the Grand Jury for their valuable services, they were then discharged.

LOOK OUT!

WE hasten to give warning to the Profession of an insidious inroad upon the privileges they have paid for so dearly, contained in the Poor Law Amendment Bill now before Parliament.

A clause in this Bill empowers Clerks to Boards of Guardians, though not Attorneys, to practise as such in all matters relating to the administration of the Poor Law.

It is true that the present Poor Law Act empowers the officers of guardians to practise both at Petty and Quarter Sessions; but this provision is virtually repealed by the Attorneys and Solicitors Act. How it came to be inserted at all is a mystery, and affords another proof of the hitherto strange neglect of their interests by the Profession. Manifestly the proposition is an injustice, which they should strain every nerve to prevent, and representatives should be everywhere urged to oppose the obnoxious clause.

A correspondent suggests that, if it be not expunged, the Attorneys should demand, as a quid pro quo, a clause enacting that all workhouses should be open to decayed members of the Profession, without being required to prove their settlement, with extra rations, and an additional allowance of 1s. per week for pocket-money and luxuries. Seriously, it is a matter that should forthwith be looked to by all the Law Societies.

THE VERULAM SOCIETY.

The first number of the Practical Reports of the Verulam Society will be published on this day fortnight; the succeeding numbers as the supply of material permits. The number as yet subscribed for is far from sufficient to meet the cost; but rather than the Society should not have a fair trial, we have taken upon ourselves the risk.

Some correspondents have inquired what we mean by Practical Reports? Simply this: a collection of those cases only which are likely to be generally useful to the mass of the Profession in their practice. For instance, All Magistrates' Cases are required by nine-tenths of the Common-Law Bar, nineteen-twentieths of the Attorneys, and all the Magistracy: consequently, all the Magistrates' Cases in all the courts are included in the Verulam Practical Reports.

But there are multitudes of cases contained in the regular reports which are useful only to very few of the Profession—such as those involving the abstruser points of pleading; and law that turns up only once in a life. It is deemed to be a useless expense to the bulk of the Profession to pay at the rate of some threepence a page for a mass of such cases which they are never likely to want, because, even if they should occur, they would of course be referred to counsel, who can consult the libraries where the costly reports are stored, and therefore the Verulam Society purposes to give to the Profession those cases only which they are likely to require in ordinary practice, without putting them to the serious cost of purchasing the many they will never need. Such will be the Practice Cases in the Common Law Courts and the Real Property Cases in the Equity Courts. The latter are selected, because there is no Lawyer who ought not to be well versed in the current of decision upon that branch of law, which there are few Solicitors, especially in the country, who are not daily required to practise upon their own responsibility, and without the aid of counsel.

We trust that the meaning of Practical Reports is now sufficiently understood. It was the best beginning that could be made by the Society, because involving the least risk, and giving the greatest amount of useful matter. Besides, it has this advantage; that it will set in motion a machinery which will facilitate the adoption of that which is certainly the grand ultimate object of the Society, and which some complain is not done at once—a complete report of all the Courts. A little reflection will, we hope, satisfy the discontented, that the prudent course is to advance by steps, and try a risk of a few pounds, and a call upon the subscriber of some half a guinea for a year's Reports, before we hazard thousands, and are dependent upon a large demand for a work which at the cheapest must be costly.

It is with pleasure we are enabled to state that the positive announcement of a beginning has brought in many who had hitherto hesitated. During the past week many new members have been enrolled, and we are not without hope, that even the first publication will count sufficient supporters to insure the permanence of a scheme which we are confident needs only to be fairly established to receive the unanimous support of the Profession.

PRACTICAL NOTES ON STATUTES.

No. XII.

3 & 4 Vict. c. 24.

Costs.

Costs, as we have observed on several occasions, are creatures of the statute law; and the cases in which they are given or withholden entirely depend upon the construction of the various Acts passed from time to time for that purpose. No statute has been more beneficial to the community at large than the one which we have selected for the present article, which was passed to discourage frivolous actions, still more than the former statutes have done, and to simplify the application of the rule.

It repeals the 43 Eliz. so far as it relates to costs in actions of trespass, or trespass on the case, and the 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 9, so far as it relates to costs in personal actions, and enacts:—

"That if the plaintiff in any action of trespass or trespass on the case, brought, or to be brought, in any of her Majesty's courts at Westminster, or in the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, or in the Court of Common Pleas at Durham, shall recover, by the verdict of a jury, less damages than forty shillings, such plaintiff shall not be entitled to recover or obtain from the defendant, in respect of such verdict, any costs whatever, whether it shall be given upon any issue or issues tried, or judgment shall have passed by default, unless the judge or presiding officer before whom such verdict shall be obtained, shall immediately afterwards certify on the back of the record, or on the writ of trial, or writ of inquiry, that the action was really brought to try a right besides the mere right to recover damages for the trespass or grievance for which the action shall have been brought, or that the trespass or grievance in respect of which the action was brought was wilful and malicious."

Sec. 3 provides that the Act shall not extend to actions of trespass over any lands, &c. in respect of which any notice not to trespass thereon or therein shall have been previously served by or on behalf of the owner or occupier of the land trespassed over, upon, or left at the last reputed or known place of abode of the defendant, or defendants in the action.

What actions are within the statute.—The words used are most general, and include all actions of trespass, and trespass on the case, and therefore, notwithstanding the provisions of 5 & 6 Wm. 4. c. 83, giving the plaintiff in a second action against a defendant for infringement of a patent, treble costs, when the judge had duly certified; a certificate under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, was held necessary to enable the plaintiff to recover any costs when only nominal damages had been given in such second action. (Gillett v. Green, 9 D. P. C. 219; 7 M. & W. 347.) By parity of reasoning, a certificate would seem to be required in actions under those numerous Acts which give double and treble costs, but which are no longer recoverable under any public local and personal, or local and personal, or local or personal Acts. The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, s. 1, enacted, that in such cases only the usual costs between party and party should be recovered (see Cock v. Gent, 2 Law T. 152, 3 D. N. S. 413); and the second section also took away the right to double or treble costs under public Acts, in lieu of which, the parties entitled are to receive "such full and reasonable indemnity as to all costs, charges, and expenses incurred in and about any action, suit, or other legal proceeding, as shall be taxed by the proper officer in that behalf, subject to be reviewed in like manner, and by the same authority, as any other taxation of costs by such officer."

It is the duty of the judge to determine from the evidence or from the record (not merely from the issues tried, as was required by the statute of Charles), whether the plaintiff originally brought the action to try a right, or to vindicate himself from the vexation of a wilful and malicious injury; and in either of these cases to grant the certificate when less than forty shillings are recovered. (Marriott v. Stanley, 9 D. P. C. 59; 2 Sc. N. R. 60; 1 M. & G. 853; Shuttleworth v. Cocker, 9 D. P. C. 76; 2 Scott, N. R. 47.) For instance, an action brought merely because the defendant had walked across the plaintiff's field would probably be deemed frivolous, and would involve no question of right; but the defendant might have have done it plainly for the purpose of annoyance and vexation, and then the certificate should be granted. So also an action for libel may be certified to have been brought for a malicious grievance; but the malice required to justify such certificate must be something more than the malice implied in law from the mere publication of calumnious statements against the plaintiff; it should be a personal malice, a real design to injure the plaintiff. (Alderson, B. in Foster v. Pointer, 1 D. N. S. 28; 8 M. & W. 395.) The accuracy of this definition of malice was, however, questioned by the same Court, in the very recent case of Sherwin v. Swindalls (3 Law T. 106), although, as will be seen presently, the decision was on altogether a different point. In an action for nuisance by the defendant's machinery, the defendant pleaded not guilty, and the judge was held to have power to certify (Shuttleworth v. Cocker); so also in an action on the case by the proprietor of certain medicines against the defendant for selling medicines as and for, and falsely represented to be prepared by the plaintiff, for it was an action in which a question of right might arise. (Morison v. Salmon, 9 D. P. C. 387.) A certificate was held by Coleridge, J. to be unnecessary, where the action was brought within the 3rd section of the Act by proof of the service of a notice not to trespass prior to the Act complained of. (Bourne v. Alcock, 5 Jur. 660.)

The Act does not apply to the recovery of damages upon a writ of inquiry after judgment upon demurrer, but only to issues tried and judgment by default. (Taylor v. Rolf, 2 Law T. 323, 13 L. J. Q. B. 39.) If the defendant pays more than 40s. into court, which the plaintiff takes out, but on the issue of damages ultra less than 40s. are given, the plaintiff will not be entitled to costs. (See Taylor v. Rolf.) If there are both issues in fact and issues in law, the plaintiff's success on the latter only entitles him to the costs upon them, and not to the general costs of the cause or the issues in fact. (Brewer v. Dew, 3 Law T. 60.)

When the certificate should be given.—In the early cases upon this Act the judges leaned to a very narrow construction of the word "immediately." Parke, B. doubted whether the certificate could be granted after another cause had been called on (Gillett v. Green, 9 D. P. C. 220); and Tindal, C. J. said "He should pause very long before he said that it was not necessary to grant the certificate without delay (Shuttleworth v. Cocker, 9 D. P. C. 76); but it is now settled that the word "immediately" does not mean so soon as the verdict is given, but within a reasonable time under the circumstances." (Thompson v. Gibson, 9 D. P. C. 717; 8 M. & W. 283; Nelmes v. Hedges, 2 D. N. S. 350.) Under the 22 & 23 Car. 2 the judge might certify that an assault and battery was proved, or that the freehold or title came in question, within four days of the trial; but the word "immediately" does not occur in that statute, and it would not be advisable, therefore, to rely upon that case as authorizing four days' delay under the present statute. (Johnson v. Stanton, 2 B. & C. 621.)

It is, however, in time after the judge has adjourned to his lodgings at the conclusion of the trial, or after another cause has been called on, and the jury sworn. (See cases last cited, and Page v. Pearce, 9 D. P. C. 815.) These cases have been held to overrule the decision in Waggett v. Shaw (3 Campb. 316), and to establish that the certificate for costs of special jury, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 50, may be also given within a reasonable time. (Christie v. Richardson, 2 D. N. S. 503.) In this case no application for the certificate had been made at the trial; but on the taxation of costs a certificate of the judge was produced, and it was held sufficient, as the affidavits did not shew that the certificate was given after an unreasonable time had elapsed.

Certificate under 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 11.—The Court of Exchequer decided last Term that a certificate that a trespass was wilful and malicious may still be given under the 8 & 9 Wm. 3 (Sherwin v. Swindalls, 3 Law T. 106). There the judge had certified under the impression that the case did not fall within 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, as defined by Foster v. Pointer, and it was on that occasion that the Court expressed their doubts upon the accuracy of that definition. The decision is important, as, under 8 & 9 Wm. 3, the certificate may be granted out of court at any time between the verdict and final judgment. (Woolley v. Whitly, 2 B. & C. 580.) It, however, only relates to actions of trespass.

Reviewing certificate by Court.—The Court have no power of reviewing the decision of the judge to determine its propriety. It is left by the Act of Parliament to his unfettered discretion, and the Court cannot interfere if the case could fall within the scope and object of the Act. (Morison v. Salmon, 9 D. P. C. 387; Shuttleworth v. Cocker, 9 D. P. C. 76; Barker v. Hollier, 1 D. N. S. 32, 8 M. & W. 513.) The case of Pryme v. Brown (1 D. N. S. 680), when examined, is not a decision to the contrary. There a rule was granted to set aside the certificate of the under-sheriff, on the ground that the certificate had once been refused by him, and subsequently granted in consequence of the representations of the jury. The Court of Common Pleas discharged the rule, because there was some doubt upon the facts as alleged; so that, had the facts been clearly established, the certificate would have been set aside. But this was not interfering with the discretion of the judge—not inquiring into the propriety of a certificate upon a consideration of the record and evidence; on the contrary, it was interfering because the under-sheriff had not obeyed the Act, and had not exercised his discretion at all.

Amendment of certificate.—Any misprision or neglect of the associate or officer, or accidental error, by which the certificate does not fulfil the expressed intentions of the judge, may be subsequently amended. (Shuttleworth v. Cocker, 9 D. P. C. 76.) It was doubted whether a judge could revoke a certificate under 43 Eliz. c. 6 (Whalley v. Williamson, 5 B. N. C. 200), although it had been done by Patteson, J. in Anderson v. Sherwin (7 C. & P. 527); but we should say that, under the present Act, he could not do so. After having exercised his discretion, and given it, he would, as to this, be functus officio.

Arbitrator's power to grant certificate.—An arbitrator, invested by the parties with the same powers to certify as a judge, must give his opinion in the matter immediately (which would probably be construed in his case with somewhat more strictness than in the case of a judge); but it will be sufficient for him to insert the certificate in his award, and it need not be endorsed upon the back of the record (Spain v. Cadell, 9 D. P. C. 745, 8 M. & W. 129); and the Court is in like manner without power to control his discretion, and will not even give an intimation of their opinion. (Bury v. Dunn, 3 D. N. S. 141, 1 Law T. 337.)

We cannot omit to notice the strong illustration which this statute affords of the necessity of some plan being adopted by which the legal effect of a statute should be considered before it is passed. Although intended to punish parties who brought frivolous actions, this statute actually conferred a boon upon those who had previously brought them, but had been debarred from costs by the 22 & 23 Car. For that statute being repealed, judgment was then signed, and costs became due upon such judgment. The Court of Exchequer took time to consider the question, but before they gave their decision (probably purposely delayed) the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 28, was passed, to empower the Court to stay proceedings in such cases upon such terms as they should think fit. (See Roadnight v. Green, 1 D. N. S. 65, 910.)

THE CRITIC.

[New Publications will receive early and impartial criticism in this department of the LAW TIMES, if forwarded to the Office, 29, Essex-street, addressed to the Editor.]

New Books.

The Practice in the offices of the Masters on the Plea side of the superior Common Law Courts at Westminster, shewing the principles and rules observed by the Masters on the Taxation of Costs and other matters. By THOMAS DAX, Esq., one of the Masters of the Court of Exchequer. London, 1844. Owen Richards. pp. 392.

MR. DAX remarks in his preface to this singularly useful work, that, numerous as have been the books published on the subject of taxation of costs and precedents of bills, no treatise "has hitherto appeared describing, or in any way explaining, the principles on which the Masters proceed on the taxation of such bills, and many of the precedents of bills so published have been more or less inaccurate or insufficient, for want of such principles being known."

Every practitioner will at once recognize the truth of this observation, and will therefore give hearty welcome to a work which explains those principles with clearness and conciseness, and will thus enable the attorney to perform that most difficult of his tasks, the drawing of a satisfactory bill of costs for the purpose of taxation, without incurring the risk of over-charges or experiencing the loss arising from an omission to charge costs that would be allowed.

Such a publication would be of incalculable value to the members of the Profession, had it come from any respectable quarter; but issuing as does this volume from a gentleman whose official experience must have given him peculiar qualifications for the task and supplied a mass of information which could have been procured by no other person, it is obvious that a boon has been here offered to the Profession, for which their gratitude is due to Mr. DAX, and the importance of which in practice cannot be over estimated.

The treatise is divided into ten parts. The first relates to the appointment and duties of the Masters: the second treats of the principles and rules observed on the taxation of costs: the third of staying proceedings in actions and interlocutory matters: the fourth relates to miscellaneous matters and final judgment by default: the fifth to judgments on posteas: the sixth to evidence, and costs of and subsequent to trial: the seventh to the costs in actions for 20*l.* and under.

In making extracts from these topics, all so useful and so practical, we are perplexed by the very abundance of material. There is not one which might not be read with advantage, and we cannot too strongly recommend a careful perusal of every page of this volume by the practitioner, as well as by the student.

Perhaps the following will be as interesting as any thing we could select.

ATTENDANCE BY ATTORNEYS ON TRIALS OR REFERENCES.

"The allowance for the attendance of attorneys upon the trial of causes, or upon references, is peculiarly in the discretion of the Master.

"It is a matter for the discretion of the Master, with which the Court will not usually interfere, to allow for the expenses of the country attorney's attendance upon a reference in town, besides those of his town agent. And unless there be something manifestly wrong in the Master's decision, the Court has considered it a bad practice to interpose, regarding it as a matter peculiarly within his province to determine. (Archer v. Marsh, 7 Dowl. 541.)

"A country attorney, being a party to a suit, is not entitled to charge for attending the trial in London, though he act as his own attorney, unless it appear that it was necessary he should be there in person. An action was brought for a stationer's bill: the plaintiff lived in Middlesex: the defendant was an attorney at Stafford, and acted as his own attorney in the cause, although he, at the same time, employed an agent in London: when the cause was ripe for trial, he came to London with a witness, and obtained a verdict. On the taxation of costs, the Master only allocated to the defendant the common expenses of a witness, and of the travelling to London and back. The Court refused to interfere, on the ground that the attorney was a party to the suit, and unless it appeared that his attending the trial was necessary, which did not appear, it would be contrary to usage to allow the expenses of his attendance. (Leaver v. Whalley, 2 Dowl. 80.) The case here mentioned does not appear very clearly stated; but it is sufficient to shew that the expenses of a country attorney having an agent in London, coming to the metropolis to attend the trial of a cause will not be allowed, unless it clearly appears that his attendance is necessary, and that the trial cannot safely or properly be entrusted to the agent.

"Although an attorney attends a trial or inquiry in the character of a witness as well as attorney, he is not entitled to a greater allowance on taxation than when he attends only as attorney.

"In a case where, the attorney being a witness, the attorney's clerk conducted the cause, the Court sanctioned the allowance of both (Butler, Assignee, v. Hobson, 7 Dowl. 157); but in general it is unusual for the Master to make such allowance. And where a member of the same firm as the attorney who conducted the cause attended as a witness, the Court held that his expenses were properly allowed. (Butler v. Hobson, 5 Bing. N.C. 128.) But this must be limited to cases distinguished by special circumstances, as it is not the usual practice to allow these expenses.

"Where an attorney, being party to an action, obtains a judgment in his favour, he is, with the exception of the charges for taking instructions, entitled to the same costs as if he had conducted the action as attorney for some other person, and not merely to the costs which another person, suing or defending in person, would be entitled.(a)

"Where a country attorney, not being an attorney of the Court, is defendant in a cause, defended in the name of the London agent, who was an attorney of the Court, and the defendant attended the assizes in person, and the plaintiff was nonsuited, it was held that the defendant was entitled to his charge for attending the trial, drawing briefs, &c. all the business being considered to have been done in the name of the London agent.

"As to the costs of the trial, where a London agent has been employed to attend the trial of a cause, it is a matter in the discretion of the Master, with which, it is said, the Court will not interfere, to decide whether the costs of a journey to London, by this country attorney, shall or shall not be allowed.(b) The Master, however, will look at all the circumstances of the case before he allows the costs; and, at all events, he will require an affidavit, shewing the necessity of such an attendance, and a positive statement that the cause could not, under peculiar circumstances, be safely entrusted to the agent. In general, all necessary attendance by the attorney, whether as regards the different proceedings or the attending trials, will be allowed; but the attorney is always bound to shew that such are necessary, and if he does not, they will be disallowed.

"In attending a trial at the assizes, where the attorney resides at a distance, he is justified in being in attendance on the commission day, unless the cause be appointed specially to be tried on a particular day, or unless the cause be entered in a second list for a division of a county. Where a cause is in the list, there can be no certainty when it may be called on, as it may be tried at any time that the judge thinks proper, even though it be out of its turn.

"It is usual to allow for the attendance of a London attorney upon a trial of a cause at the assizes, in which he may be properly concerned, where the cause is difficult or complicated, or is of particular importance. But where it is manifestly unnecessary for him to be present, no allowance on his behalf will be made in costs."

The table contained in the next extract will be useful for reference.

"NOTICES.

"All necessary notices, or copies thereof, given during the progress of an action, such as notice of disputing bankruptcy, trading, &c. or to admit, &c. are, on taxation, allowed to the successful party, as costs in the cause. But notices given before the commencement of an action, except where the same are directed by some statute to be given, are not allowed.

"For the protection of public officers, and others acting under the supposed authority of Acts of Parliament, the legislature has, in some instances, positively required that notice shall be given preliminary to the action, to enable the party sued to make a tender of amends. Thus, for the protection of magistrates, and others who act in obedience to their warrants, it is enacted, by the 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, s. 1, 'that no writ shall be sued out against, nor any copy of any process at the suit of a subject shall be served upon, any justice of the peace for any thing by him done in the execution of his office, until notice in writing of such intended writ or process shall have been delivered to him, or left at the usual place of his abode, by the attorney or agent of the party who intends to sue, or cause the same to be sued out or served, at least one calendar month before the issuing out or serving the same, in which notice shall be clearly and expressly contained the cause of action which such party hath, or claimeth to have, against such justice of the peace, on the back of which notice shall be indorsed the name of such attorney or agent, with the place of his abode, who shall be entitled to the fee of 20s. for the preparing and serving such notice, and no more.' In such cases it will seen, as above, the costs of such notices are sometimes limited to 20s. or some other sum. Where the costs are thus limited, no more can be allowed on taxation of costs; but where the amount is not fixed, the Masters will allow the reasonable expenses of such notices, as also the costs of proving them at the trial, as in other cases.

Many of our readers will be benefited by the information contained in the section on

"DEMAND BEFORE ACTION.

"In some cases a demand is necessary, and sometimes expedient to be made, before the commencement of an action. Thus, the demand of a perusal and copy of a warrant is necessary (24 Geo. 2, c. 44, s. 6) when an action is intended to be brought against a constable, or other person acting in obedience to the warrant of a justice; and this has been extended to persons acting under the warrant of Commissioners of Bankruptcy. (6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 31.) In such cases the reasonable costs of making the demand are allowed. In the case of writing a letter requiring payment of a debt before the commencement of an action, a fee of 3s. 6d. is allowed, and may be claimed by the attorney, even in the event of the debt being paid before a writ is issued. (Morrison v. Summers, 1 Dowl. 325.) But no more than the costs of one letter is ever allowed. (Capel v. Staines, 5 Dowl. 770.)

"It is sometimes expedient to make a demand in writing, where an action is intended to be brought to recover the possession or value of property from a person who has in the first instance lawfully obtained the possession of the same, but who unlawfully converts or detains the property; but it is never allowed on taxation, as between party and party."

We conclude with a valuable collection of the rules relating to

"COUNSELS' FEES.

"From the great variety to be found in the numerous actions that are tried, as regard the causes of action, the number of witnesses to be examined, the length of briefs, and the difficulties to be dealt with, it is quite impossible to frame a scale of fees to counsel to suit all such cases as may arise.

"Upon taxation of costs upon the postea, the Master will allow to the successful party such fees to counsel as, under the circumstances, appear to him to be reasonable; and he will be guided in his allowance as to the number of counsel according to the number of witnesses to be examined, the necessary length of the briefs, and the importance of the case, as have been particularly mentioned upon the subject of Briefs.

"In considering what fees should be given, the attorney must use a fair discretion; and if there appears to the Master to be nothing unreasonable in the amount, he will allow the same.

"The Master is also at liberty to allow fees to counsel for drawing or settling the different proceedings in the cause, where the same are special or out of the usual form.

"As regards the drawing or settling a declaration, the Master is entirely guided by the form of it in allowing or disallowing payment to counsel. If it be in the common form, the fee to counsel is never allowed, whatever difficulties the case may present. The same rule applies to pleas and subsequent proceedings; if the pleadings are special, the fees to counsel are allowed.

"Where particulars of the plaintiff's demand, or notices or admissions, are in a special and difficult form, fees to counsel will be allowed on settling them.

"The Master is also at liberty to use his discretion in allowing a case for the opinion of counsel on the evidence; and also for a consultation of counsel on the delivery of the briefs. The latter allowance was until lately confined, as between party and party, to one consultation in the cause; but now, where the cause is made a remanet at the assizes, or the trial is delayed for a considerable period after the consultation, the Master may use his discretion in allowing a second consultation, which he will do if it appear to him, from the circumstances of the case, to be reasonable or necessary.

"But neither the opinion on evidence, nor expenses of consultation, can be allowed until the cause is at issue.

"The Master is also at liberty to allow a retainer fee to one counsel in the cause.

"No refresher fee to counsel is allowed unless the cause goes over to another Term; nor is any fee allowed on attendance to hear judgment after argument.

"The payment of fees to counsel must either be vouched by affidavit or by the production of briefs, with counsel's signature thereto.

"The charge for instructions and payment to counsel for attending upon a summons at chambers is never allowed unless notice of such attendance by counsel be given to the opposite party, nor unless the opposite party has himself given notice of such attendance; but where notice is given on one side, the opposite side is entitled to employ counsel; nor will any fee to counsel be allowed for attending upon a writ of inquiry unless notice of such attendance be given.

"Notice is also necessary to be given where it is intended counsel should attend before an arbitrator. Where a cause was referred, and the plaintiff attended before the arbitrator by counsel, without giving notice to the opposite party that he intended so to do, the Court ordered the cause to be referred back to the arbitrator, and disallowed the plaintiff the costs of the day. (Whatley v. Morland, 2 Dowl. 249.)

"The signature of counsel is not required to pleas, or pleadings which conclude to the country; but pleas which conclude with a verification, with some exceptions, do require the signature of counsel. The exceptions are plene administravit, the bankruptcy of the defendant, and in trespass, son assault demesne and liberum tenementum in the Queen's Bench, and comperuit ad diem, solvit ad diem, and nul tiel record, in all the courts (Bag. Prac. 121), a demurrer must be signed by counsel, but not the joinder in demurrer; an assignment of error must also be signed by counsel, but not the joinder.(c) A plea of the Statute of Limitations, although it need not conclude with a verification, must, nevertheless, be signed by counsel. Roberts v. Howard, 9 Mees. & W. 838.)

"Although the courts appear in general unwilling to interfere with the free exercise of the Master's discretion, as appears by their decisions in numerous cases before adverted to in this work, yet there have been occasions where they have thought proper to use their authority in altering the Master's decision. Thus, where the Master only allowed the defendant a fee for one counsel in a case at Nisi Prius, involving matters of much importance, and requiring much consideration, but at the trial the parties agreed upon the facts, subject to the opinion of the Court upon a point of law, the Court, considering the case as it stood before the compromise was entered into, held that the defendant ought to be allowed the fees for two counsel. (Grendall v. Godman, 5 Dowl. 378.)

"The allowance to be made to counsels' clerks was regulated by the judges, and is therefore limited to the amount settled by the directions to the taxing officers. (See Richards' Costs, p. 33.)"

A Manual of Medical Jurisprudence. By ALFRED S. TAYLOR, Lecturer on Medical Jurisprudence and Chemistry, in Guy's Hospital. London, 1844. Churchill, pp. 679.

MEDICAL Jurisprudence ought to be a prominent branch of the studies of every lawyer, and yet how few members of the Profession possess even the most elementary knowledge of it. At every assize, how many cases are there that turn entirely upon questions arising out of this science, and how rarely are they conducted by Counsel without a lamentable exhibition of ignorance which would have been damning to his fame if displayed upon almost any other subject. A man who would blush to make a false quantity is not ashamed to own that he is ignorant of the locality of a nerve or artery, and would be indignant indeed if it were questioned that he was educated! And in this he claims the sanction of custom! The fault lies at the very basis of our educational system, which places words before things, sets a higher value on art than upon nature, and prefers two defunct dialects to the living language of creation, as revealed in the realms of science.

And if the members of the Bar be so ill-acquainted with Medical Jurisprudence, which they are daily called upon to deal with, much more is it an unknown science to the Attorneys, who are not required so publicly to engage in it. Yet to them it is not useless. They should remember that theirs is the duty of preparing the instructions upon which Counsel is to conduct the case, and upon the completeness of their instructions success is mainly dependent. But how can they collect the necessary evidence if they do not understand the matters to which their investigations are to be directed? Then, again, how many occasions are continually arising in which the Attorney is required to perform the part of advocate, and to examine professional witnesses and others upon medical questions, as in the preliminary investigations before coroners, magistrates, &c. Earnestly would we advise those who have not yet entered upon this study to do so without delay. They will assuredly reap advantages from it for which they will hereafter thank their adviser.

But what books shall they read? We have inspected many, but we have seen none so calculated upon the whole to serve the purpose of a text-book as this manual of Mr. TAYLOR. There are more elaborate works, it may be, more technically learned works, upon this subject; but there is none better calculated to instruct the student than this; and precisely because it is not so elaborate, nor so technical as its predecessors. Mr. TAYLOR possesses the happy art of expressing himself on a scientific topic in intelligible language, and so putting his information that the reader can readily understand his meaning. His volume, moreover, has the great attraction of portability. Its size fits it to be a Circuit companion. By a small but readable type, and no waste of margin, his treatise is comprised in limits that bring it, both in cost and compass, within the purse and portmanteau of the practitioner. An outline of the contents will exhibit his plan, and a specimen will shew his manner.

He first treats of poisoning in all its various forms; then of wounds; then of infanticide; then successively of drowning, of hanging, of strangulation, of suffocation, of death by lightning, cold, and starvation; of rape, of pregnancy and delivery; of birth and inheritance, of legitimacy, and, finally, of insanity. An Appendix gives, first, the tests and apparatus required in the analysis of poisons; and, second, the Medical Witnesses Act in relation to coroners' inquests. A very copious index affords a ready reference to the huge mass of information gathered in the volume.

Amid so much that is interesting and so much that is useful, we are perplexed what to select which shall at once exhibit Mr. TAYLOR's style and be instructive to the reader; the latter being a primary object in all reviews of the LAW TIMES. Perhaps the topic of most general interest will be the answer to the question

WHAT IS A WOUND?

"When a person is the subject of a wound or external injury, from the effects of which he ultimately recovers, a medical witness is often rigorously examined—with respect to the precise nature of the injury, and how far it involved a risk of life. The answers to these questions may have an important influence on the defence of a prisoner, when the crime is charged under particular forms of indictment.

"WHAT IS A WOUND? It may, I think, be safely asserted, that we shall look in vain for any consistent definition of a wound, in works on medicine and surgery. A wound is, perhaps, most commonly defined to be, a 'recent solution of continuity in the soft parts, suddenly occasioned by external causes.' Yet those who adopt this view do not regard as wounds, ruptures of the liver or spleen, burns by heated bodies, or simple dislocations and fractures, although all of these injuries are comprehended in the literal signification of the above definition.

"The following definitions of a wound have been furnished to me by three eminent surgeons of this metropolis.

"'A solution of continuity from violence of any naturally continuous parts.'

"'An external breach of continuity directly occasioned by violence.'

"'An injury to an organic texture by mechanical or other violence.'

"Owing to the unsettled meaning of the word wound, it has happened lately, on more than one occasion, that medical witnesses have differed in their evidence, and some difficulty has arisen in the prosecution of criminal charges. It has been asserted, that in order to constitute a wound, the skin should always be broken or injured; and this, as we shall see presently, is the interpretation commonly put upon the term by our judges. But those who have adopted this view do not regard burns produced either by heated metals or corrosive liquids, as wounds, although there seems to be no good reason why; under the above definition, they should be excluded.

(d) For the fees to counsel on ordinary or common cases, see Richards' Costs, [illegible]

"Technical difficulties of this kind, which only lead to the embarrassment of witnesses and to the acquittal of prisoners, charged with serious offences, might be avoided if the medical witnesses of England were allowed to adopt the comprehensive definition sanctioned by the legal tribunals of certain states on the Continent, namely, that 'a wound includes every description of personal injury, arising from whatever cause, applied externally.' It may appear contrary to propriety to designate a contusion or fracture as a wound; but the common definitions will be found on examination to be equally inconsistent, and to be attended in legal medicine by evil results, inasmuch as they lead to acquittals, not upon the merits of the case, but upon the most trivial pretences. This could not happen if the above comprehensive signification were generally followed. It appears to me, that in a case of this kind, we should rather regard the wants of justice than the rules of surgery. If medico-legal cases fail from differences as to the meaning of scientific terms among surgical writers, it is time that some fixed rule should be adopted. While the science of surgery cannot possibly suffer by such an innovation, the administration of the law will be rendered much more efficient.

"It cannot be denied, however, that an alteration of this kind, in the use of medical terms, must, in order to be attended with any good effects, receive the support of our legal authorities. This, probably, would not be long withheld, if good reasons for the change were afforded by medical witnesses. The present rule appears to be that no injury constitutes a wound in law, unless the continuity of the skin be broken, so that in a case where blows were inflicted with a hammer or iron instrument sufficient to break the collar-bone, and violently bruise but not break the skin, it was held not to be a wounding within the statute. (Archbold.) A recent Act of Parliament (1 Vict. c. 85), has in some measure provided for the punishment of persons guilty of inflicting such severe injuries, but still it has left the legal signification of the word wound unsettled.

"From several recent cases, it appears that an abrasion of the cuticle is not to be understood as a breaking of the continuity of the skin, the cutis or true skin must participate in the injury; and probably the cellular membrane beneath. A case was tried at the Central Criminal Court in August 1838, on a charge of cutting and wounding the prosecutor. The prisoner struck the prosecutor a severe blow on the temple with a heavy stone bottle, which was thereby broken to pieces. The prosecutor fell senseless, and it was a long time before he recovered from the effects of the violence. The medical witnesses in this case underwent a rigorous cross-examination by the prisoner's counsel, respecting the meaning of the word 'wound.' They said that there had been a separation of the cuticle or outer skin of the temples, although there was no absolute wound in the usual acceptation of the word. They further deposed that the prosecutor had lost the sight of his left eye, and the hearing of his left ear; and he was for a considerable time in a state of great danger, from which he had scarcely recovered. The prisoner's counsel contended that the injuries were not such as to constitute cutting and wounding in law. The judge said, in order that a wound, in contemplation of law, should have been inflicted, it was necessary that the whole skin, and not the mere cuticle, should have been separated and divided; and as the evidence did not shew distinctly that there was such a wound, those counts of the indictment could not be sustained. The prisoner was found guilty of an assault. Had he used a penknife, although he might have inflicted a much less degree of bodily injury, this man might, according to the above doctrine, have been found guilty under the high penal statute of wounding. (See also the case of the Queen v. Mortlock.)

"It would likewise appear that the continuity of the skin must be broken at the time of the infliction of the violence, and as a direct effect of it. Thus, if from a severe contusion, sloughing should take place, this would not constitute a wound, notwithstanding the very extensive destruction of the skin and soft parts, as an indirect result of the violence. So, if a bone of the leg be broken by a blow, and the skin lacerated and a compound fracture produced by the assaulted party falling, it is doubtful whether this would be a wounding within the statute.

"Again, if an assault be committed with a heated solid, such as a red-hot poker; although the whole skin might here be destroyed, it is extremely doubtful, whether such an injury would constitute a wound in law. In short, this subject, whether we regard it in a medical or legal aspect, is in a most unsettled state, and a conviction for the offence of criminal wounding must depend in a great measure upon the care used in describing the injury in the indictment."

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Friday, May 24.

Re Baryatinski, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Interim committee of the person—Petition to confirm the commissioners' report, and counter-petition—Right of reply.

This was a petition in lunacy by Lord and Lady Sherborn, to confirm the commissioner's report, appointing them interim committees of the person of the Princess Elizabeth Baryatinski, who is a daughter of a late Russian nobleman by a late sister of Lord Sherborn. The princess's mother had died a few weeks after the birth of her child, who had been bred up and educated in this country, under the charge of the grandfather and grandmother of the late Lord and Lady Sherborn. Since their death, she had lived with her uncle, the present Lord Sherborn, and, about 1830, having shewn symptoms of insanity, she was placed under the charge of a lady who had been a governess in the family, in a house taken for the purpose in the environs of London. She has a considerable fortune. Her father having married again, and had several children, one of whom, Madame Davidoff, came to England several years ago, and thinking the treatment her half-sister received under Lord Sherborn's direction to be neither kind or judicious, she communicated the circumstances to her brother the Prince Barzatinski, who, as soon as he was able, came to England to interfere on her behalf. Then Lord Sherborn procured a commission of lunacy to be issued, and the princess was found a lunatic. That was not questioned; but the Russian relatives objected to Lord Sherborn being continued as committee, because his plan of treatment, and to which he stated his intention to adhere, was much calculated to increase the malady. The Russian relatives also presented a petition that another person, on whose judgment they could rely, might be joined with Lord Sherborn as committee of the person.

Sir C. Wetherell and Walpole appeared for Lord Sherborn, and, Erle, Stuart, and Walford, for the princess's family.

A question arose as to which side should begin, and thereby have the right to a reply.

Sir C. Wetherell contended that as his client's petition was to confirm the report, it was of course that he should open the case.

Stuart said the petition of his clients was in the nature of exceptions to the report, and the excepting party always began; but

The Lord Chancellor said the proceeding was, in substance, a rehearing of the case as it had come before the commissioner, and that therefore the party moving to confirm the report would begin.

The arguments and reading affiavits having occupied nearly three days, and a strong case of mismanagement having been shewn against Lord Sherborn, before Sir Charles Wetherell replied, it was agreed that the petitions should stand over, while the parties endeavoured whether some satisfactory arrangement for the future treatment of the patient could not be come to, without calling for his lordship's decision.

Re Bray, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Evidence—Production of deeds.

Prendergast supported a petition by the committee of the lunatic's estate, that the accountant-general might sell sufficient stock to pay 200*l*., a legacy bequeathed by the will of a testator, under which the lunatic held real and personal estate. The legacy had been left to a married woman for her life, and after her death to her children; and the whole interest in the legacy, by successive deaths and assignments, had now become vested in Mary Hanagan, one of the children. The last assignment was dated in 1822, and the deed was in court, but the affidavit in support of the petition neither verified the terms of the deed or its execution.

The Lord Chancellor.—The evidence is insufficient. An affidavit as to the terms of the deed, and the fact of its execution, must be produced.

Petition to stand over for the production of such affidavit.

Re Adew, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Repairs—Allowance to family.

A petition was presented, praying that the committee for the lunatic's estate might be authorized to apply 30*l*. to the maintenance of his wife, who, with her children, were in great distress. The lunatic's estate consisted of real property, which produced a little more than 80*l*. a year, and until October 1842, 80*l*. had been paid for his maintenance in the Gloucestershire asylum, when the charge had been reduced to 40*l*. a year. By such reduction, a sum of 122*l*. had been saved out of the income, but 130*l*. was required to be laid out in repairs of the estate, and it was now proposed that the sum of 30*l*. should be allowed to the wife, and the repairs completed out of the future savings.

Rogers, in support of the petition.

The Lord Chancellor.—Until the repairs have been completed, no other application of the income can be made. Order refused.

Re Wilkinson, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Orders of course—Appearance thereon.

Colville supported a petition for an order, which was one of course, and a copy of the petition had been served on the heir-at-law of next of kin of the lunatic, for whom Shadwell and Prendergast appeared, and consented.

The Lord Chancellor.—It was proper to serve the heir-at-law and next of kin with the petition, but there is no reason for their appearance to consent on an order of course.

Re Branks, Lunatics.

Practice in lunacy—Sale of estates to committee—Beneficial arrangements.

In this matter there are four lunatics, who are interested in the produce of estates ordered to be sold under a decree in a suit to which they were parties. A reserved bidding had been directed, and the estates had been bought in. The committee of the estate now offered to purchase the estate at a sum higher than had been offered by any other person, provided leave was given that the shares of two of the lunatics in the purchase money ought be secured by a mortgage on the whole property thus purchased. The property was worth 1,100*l*. beyond the mortgage-money, and the whole arrangement was a beneficial one for the family.

Bray, for the petition.

Ordered, and that the committee's costs should be paid.

Re Clarke, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Appointment of committee—Caveat—Costs.

Rasch supported a petition to confirm the report of the commissioner appointing the lunatic's brother as a new committee.

Phillips, for the lunatic's second brother, who had entered a caveat, asked leave to go before the commissioner, and state his objections to the appointment.

The Lord Chancellor.—Leave may be given to the party who has entered a caveat to the appointment of the new committee to endeavour to substantiate his objection, but it must be at the risk as to costs of the party interposing.

Re T[illegible], a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Sale of the fluctuating property of lunatic—Confirmation of a report in favour of a sale.

James Parker supported a petition to confirm a sale of stock in a bank at Liverpool, the property of the lunatic, which had been sold by the committee upon the commissioner's report in favour of a sale, but without obtaining the Lord Chancellor's confirmation of that report. Since the sale the stock had risen in [illegible]

The Lord Chancellor.—This matter must go back to the commissioner, to inquire whether the stock has been sold for a proper price. I should like to know to whom this stock has been sold; that it has not been sold to the committee of the estate. It was sold at an under-price, and an inquiry must be had whether the sale was made at the then market price.

Re ——, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Reference—Costs—Proceedings for [illegible] a lunatic not authorized by the Chancellor.

Kenyon Parker supported a petition, praying that the report of the commissioner appointing committees of the person, Pugh, the churchwarden of St. Mary, Newington, being associated with the next of kin, and approving of 600*l*. out of the accumulated rents, amounting to 800*l*., being paid to Clark, a solicitor, for costs incurred in prosecuting actions of ejectment, and other proceedings on behalf of the lunatic.

The lunatic's estate consisted of real property, producing 100*l*. a year, which had been recovered by the proceedings before mentioned. The lunatic had been for many years without allowance, and was an inmate of Kensington workhouse. The commission had issued in 1829, and one Brooks then appointed committee of the estate. In March 1835, Brooks had absconded, and since that time the rents had been received by Mr. Clark, the solicitor. An order of reference to approve of a new committee was made in May 1835, but was not proceeded with, the present petitioner, the lunatic's brother, having refused to make an affidavit. The actions of ejectment had been brought in the lunatic's name, without the sanction of the Chancellor.

Bacon, for the solicitor.

The Lord Chancellor.—The solicitor admits the receipt of a large sum of money; he must pay that into court, confirm so much of the report as relates to the appointment of a committee, and tax the costs of the petitioner and of the authorities of Kensington-parish. There must be an inquiry as to what has become of the rents.

Re G[illegible]rden, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Will of a lunatic, dated after the time he was found to be of unsound mind, admitted to probate without contest in the Ecclesiastical Court, a proper subject of inquiry.

Stinton, in support of a petition by the widow, as executrix of a lunatic, for the transfer of 6,850*l*. stock standing in the name of the Accountant-General. The will was dated a few weeks after the day from which the jury had found the deceased a lunatic, but probate of the will had been granted by the Ecclesiastical Court. There was, however, no contest in the Ecclesiastical Court, the same proctor having been employed for all parties, and the point was not brought under the notice of the Court. There had been a previous will in the same terms (giving the property to the wife for life, and afterwards to be divided amongst the children equally), but the executor named therein had declined to act, and, under the advice of Dr. Haggard, the second will had been proved.

The Lord Chancellor.—The probate is all that is necessary in ordinary circumstances; but the three children are infants, and it would not be safe at present to make an order. I must have all the facts brought before me by petition, and verified.

Re Lubenwood, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Reference.

An assignment of the lease of a house, for the accommodation of the lunatic had been taken to the committee of the person; that lease had expired, and a new lease had been arranged for, at the same rent, paying a premium and a certain sum for dilapidations, and the petition prayed a confirmation of that arrangement.

The Lord Chancellor.—There must be an inquiry as to the propriety of the arrangement.

Re Scott.

Petition in a cause by joint tenants, one being of unsound mind, but not found so by inquisition—Jurisdiction.

Two sisters were interested as joint tenants for life in the rents of certain lands, part of which had been taken by a railway company, under an Act of Parliament. One of them was of unsound mind, but not found lunatic by inquisition, but by the will under which they claimed the rents were directed to be paid to the other, as to one half, for the benefit of her sister. The price of the land had been paid into court by the railway company, and the petition by the two joint tenants now prayed that the dividends might be payed to them. The prayer followed precisely the words of the will under which they claimed. The Vice-Chancellor's officer refused to set down the petition, as it necessarily appeared upon the face of the petition that one of the petitioners was of unsound mind, it was therefore necessary to apply to the Chancellor.

Craig, for the petition.

Bacon, for the railway company, did not oppose the prayer.

The Lord Chancellor, though at first expressing some doubt whether he could grant the prayer of the petition, when it appeared that a person of unsound mind was a necessary party to the petition, ultimately made the order.

Re ——, a Lunatic.

Substituted service in lunacy.

On the application of Elmsley, substituted service of an order on the wife of a committee in debt to the estate, who had absconded, was directed.

ROLLS COURT.

Saturday, June 1.

Tilley v. Wolstenholme.

In a suit for the appointment of new trustees under a will containing no provision for that purpose, the question of trustee or no trustee may be more fitly determined at the hearing than on demurrer, which can at most, in such a case, only occasion the amendment of the bill.

The testator in this cause devised his real and personal estate to his wife, one of his sons, and one Richard Tebbut, their heirs, executors, &c. on trusts, for the benefit of his said wife and children. The will contained no clause for the appointment of new trustees. Tebbut, being the surviving trustee of the will, devised the said trust estate to the defendant Wolstenholme and two others, their heirs, executors, &c. on the same trusts. This it was alleged was what Tebbut had no power to do, and accordingly the bill was filed for the appointment of new trustees. This being demurred to for want of equity, the demurrer now came on to be argued.

Turner and Little, for the demurrer.

Kindersley, contrà.

The Master of the Rolls thought it was a curious subject of demurrer. The demurring parties allege they are seized, and the plaintiffs deny it. The question is simply, are they or not trustees? and it is one much fitter to be determined at the hearing. The legal estate is in the trustees; and the question is, are they entitled to hold it? A decision on the demurrer can do nothing but alter the form; it will only occasion an amendment. A short answer would be quite as easy and as brief. Let it stand over, and come on as a short cause.

Wednesday, June 4.

BRADSTOCK v. WATLEY.

Practice—An order to enter an appearance will not be granted, if there be considerable delay in making the application. In such a case, a fresh subpœna must be sued out, or notice of the motion served on the defendant, and subsequent application.

Bevir, in this cause, applied for an order to enter an appearance for the defendant, which was due so long ago as the 20th of April last.

The MASTER of the ROLLS thought the application should have been made much sooner, and that, as due diligence had not been used, he must refuse it. And,

Bevir having asked for an order nisi,

His Lordship refused this also, adding, he must either sue out a fresh subpœna, or serve the defendant with notice of the motion, and then make application.

Thursday, June 6.

KERBY v. BARTON.

A few days previously to a decree obtained in a creditor's suit instituted by one of the creditors of a testator against his executrix, &c. a sci. fa. was sued out, on which judgment was obtained against the executrix by default; she then got leave to set aside the judgment, on condition of pleading plene administravit in a new trial, and if unsuccessful, of allowing judgment nunc pro tunc: on the eve of the trial, after the lapse of a considerable time, she applies for an injunction, and is allowed to obtain it only to the extent of staying execution.

A judgment was obtained by Sir C. Price and Co. against Barton, the testator named in the cause, after whose death a creditor's suit was instituted by the plaintiff against the defendants, the executrix, and the eldest son of the testator, on the 24th July, 1843. An answer was put in in November following, and a decree was made on the 30th April, 1844. A scire facias was sued out on the judgment against the executrix, to which she did not appear, and judgment was allowed to go by default on the 27th of April last. Notice thereof was served on the 3rd of May, and notice also of the decree in the creditor's suit was served on Sir C. Price and Co. The executrix then applied to the Court of Exchequer to set aside the judgment, which they did on the terms of her consenting to plead plene administravit in a new trial, and of allowing judgment nunc pro tunc if unsuccessful. This day, just on the eve of trial, the executrix applies for an injunction to stay trial, and that Sir C. Price and Co. may come in and prove their debt in the creditor's suit.

Smythe, for the executrix.

Kindersley and J. Adams, contra.

The MASTER of the ROLLS would only consent to stay execution, because of the delay in coming for relief, till liberty should be given on a full consideration of the merits.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Wednesday, May 29.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF FARTHINGHOE.

The Court of Quarter Sessions had confirmed the order of removal, subject to the opinion of this Court (inter alia) as to whether a certificate of chargeability under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 57, s. 17, which was stated to have been signed by the presiding chairman of the Board of Guardians of the Banbury Union, was sufficient evidence of the paupers therein mentioned being chargeable to the removing parish, without averment or proof that it was also sealed with the seal of the said union.

Keating, in support of the order of sessions.

F. V. Lee and Pigott, contra.

The COURT held there must be some evidence that the seal is the proper seal of the poor law guardians, and that it does not prove itself.

Order quashed.

Friday, May 31.

HENDERSON v. HENDERSON.

Argued Nov. 10, 1843.

An action of debt is maintainable in this country upon a decree of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland; and nothing which would have been a defence to the judgment of that Court can be pleaded here.

Debt upon a decree of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland.

Plea—That the sum of money ordered to be paid by that decree, and now sought to be recovered in this action, was claimed by the plaintiff in the right of one John Henderson, deceased, the husband of the plaintiff, and in no other right; and that the said John Henderson was indebted to the defendant for money lent to the said John Henderson, which money the defendant was ready and willing to set off against the plaintiff's claim. There were also various pleas alleging that the proceedings in the Court of Newfoundland were defective and erroneous.

Demurrer.

The case was argued by Follett, S. G. for the plaintiff, and Barstow for the defendant (vide 2 Law T. 119), and the questions raised were,

Whether an action of debt could be brought upon a colonial decree in equity.

Whether the decree was conclusive or could be questioned in this action.

Whether the decree was defective in not shewing that the plaintiff sued as administratrix of her deceased husband; and whether the debt of the deceased husband could be set off in the present action.

The COURT held that an action of debt would lie upon the decree of a foreign court of competent jurisdiction, unless they could see in the clearest light that the foreign law, or some proceeding in the foreign court, was repugnant to justice; that whatever would have constituted a defence to the judgment of the foreign court, ought to have been pleaded there, and could not be taken advantage of in the present action; and that the plaintiff must be considered as suing in her own right on a decree recovered by her in her own right, and therefore the set off was not allowable. Judgment for the plaintiff.

HARRISON v. POTTS and OTHERS.

Where a party is taken in execution upon a judgment signed against him, in a case in which an attorney has entered an appearance for him without any authority, it seems that his only remedy is by action against the attorney: at any rate, if the latter is able to pay the costs of an action.

H. Hill shewed cause against a rule obtained on behalf of the defendant, Robert Baxter, calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why all proceedings in this action subsequent to the writ, so far as they relate to the said Robert Baxter, or such of them as the Court should think fit, should not be set aside, and the said Robert Baxter be allowed to come in and defend. The rule was obtained on an affidavit of Baxter's, which stated that he was then in execution in this suit; that previous to the warrant being served, he had no knowledge of the action; that he had not been served with any of the proceedings; that, only just before he was taken in execution, he heard from Mr. Pemberton, the attorney who appeared for the defendants in the action, that he had been instructed by Brown to do so; that the partnership between himself, Potts, and Brown had been dissolved before the issuing of the said execution; that the cause of action did not relate to any partnership transaction; and that he was advised he had a good defence to the action. It was submitted, that if any party was liable to Baxter, it was Mr. Pemberton, the attorney, who had assumed to appear in his name, and not the plaintiff; citing Anon. case (1 Salk. 86); Stanhope v. Firmen (3 N. C. 301); Doe v. Eaton (3 B. & Ad. 785); Williams v. Smith and Another (1 Dowl. 632); Mudrie v. Newman (1 C. M. & R. 402).

Willes, in support of the rule, contended that Baxter could not be bound by an admission by another person, nor by a judgment against him on which he had had no opportunity of being heard; citing Robson v. Eaton (1 T. R. 62); Callop v. Brandling (1 Kib. 272, pl. 58); Chivers, Sheriff of Wilts, v. Fenn and Others (2 Shower, 166); Anon. case (12 Mod. 519); Gibson v. Bishop of Bath (Barnes, 239); Lessee of Earl of Limerick v. Odell (1 Jones, Irish Ex. Rep. 80).

The COURT held that, as it was not professed that the attorney was not able to pay the costs of any action brought against him, the plaintiff's remedy was by an action against him, and not by the present proceeding. Rule discharged, without costs.

MERCER v. BARTLETT.

Bill of exchange—Indorsement—Consideration.

Bovill moved for a rule to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff and for a new trial.

This was an action upon a bill of exchange by indorsee against the drawer for 300*l*. The declaration stated that the bill was drawn by defendant on one Cox in favour of Cass, and indorsed by Cass to Anderson, and by Anderson to the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded, inter alia, pleas denying the indorsements and the consideration. The plaintiff obtained a verdict for 50*l*. The evidence was, that Cox, Cass, and Anderson were members of a certain company, and that the bill in question was drawn, accepted, and indorsed by these parties without consideration, for the purpose of raising money for the company. The bill was then given by Bartlett to a person of the name of Goldney, for the express purpose of getting it discounted. The company at this time were indebted to Goldney in the sum of 50*l*. and he was told by Bartlett that if he could get the bill discounted, he might retain the sum of 50*l*. due to him. Goldney was unable to obtain credit on the bill, but instead of returning it to the company, as it was submitted he was bound to do, having received it from them for the specific purpose of getting it discounted, he handed it over to the plaintiff, who brought this action upon it, and recovered a verdict of 50*l*. the learned judge who tried the cause being of opinion, that the facts proved an indorsement to the plaintiff, and a consideration for the bill to the amount of that sum.

It was now submitted: 1st, that there was no indorsement in law, as an indorsement means not merely the writing of the name on the bill, but also a lawful delivery of the bill; and, 2ndly, that there was no consideration for the bill, since Goldney had failed to get the bill discounted, and therefore had no right to appropriate it in discharge of the debt due to him: citing Adams v. Jones (4 P. & D. 174); Marston v. Allen (8 M. & W. 494). Rule nisi.

Monday, June 3.

JONES v. KEARNEY.

Guarantee—Statute of Frauds—Consideration—Evidence.

Assumpsit.—The first count of the declaration stated that before the time of making the promise thereinafter mentioned, the plaintiff was about to discount, for one E. Rorke, a bill of exchange, bearing date the 18th of July, 1837, drawn by the said E. Rorke upon, and accepted by, the said G. W. M'Cloin, for payment to the order of the said E. Rorke of the sum of 30*l*. at three months after the date thereof; and thereupon, theretofore, to wit, on the 18th day of July, 1837, in consideration that the plaintiff, in the event of his discounting the said bill of exchange and the same being returned dishonoured, would send the same to the defendant, he, the defendant, promised the plaintiff to pay and discharge the said bill of exchange. It then averred that the plaintiff discounted the said bill; the non-payment thereof by the said G. W. M'Cloin; breach in the non-payment by the defendant on the said bill being sent to him. Second count upon an account stated.

Pleas.—1st. Non-assumpsit. 2nd. That the plaintiff did not discount the bill for Rorke. 3rd. That the plaintiff did not send the bill to the defendant on its being returned to him.

At the trial, the defendant obtained the verdict on the first count on the guarantee, and the plaintiff on the second count on the account stated. Cross-rules had been obtained—the first by the defendant to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff on the second count, and to enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial; the second by the plaintiff, to enter the verdict for the plaintiff on the first count, on the ground that the guarantee was good. It appeared from the evidence, that the defendant, upon being applied to, to guarantee the payment of the bill in question, wrote the following letter:—"I can have no hesitation to guarantee the payment of the draft of Mr. C. Rorke, for 30*l*. at three months, on Mr. G. W. M'Cloin, of Liverpool, payable at Sir Chas. Price and Co.'s. Should it be returned to you dishonoured, you can send it to me, and I will discharge it." It further appeared that, upon the defendant being applied to for payment, he replied, "When I can see my way clear, I may send you a cheque."

Kelly and Humfrey, for the plaintiff, shewed cause against the defendant's rule, and submitted that the defendant having said "he would pay it when he could see his way clear," was such an acknowledgment by him that a sum was due as would create an implied promise which would support the count upon the account stated, and was at any rate a question for the jury.

Platt and Lush, for the defendant, contended that this was a promise to pay the debt of a third person within the Statute of Frauds; that it was bad as a guarantee, for want of consideration; and was insufficient to support the count upon an account stated, for want of evidence of an antecedent debt; citing Wain v. Walters (5 East; S. C. 2 Smith, L. C.); Saunders v. Wakefield (4 B. & A. 595); Curtis v. Rickards (1 Scott, N. R. 125); Birkmyr v. Darnell (1 Salk. 27; S. C. 1 Smith's L. C. 135); Cole v. Dyer (1 C. & J. 461); Jones v. Williams (5 B. & A. 1000); Hawes v. Armstrong (1 N. C. 761); Emmott v. Kearns (5 N. C. 559); Mitchinson v. Hewson (7 T. R. 348); Haigh v. Brooks (10 A. & E. 309).

By the COURT.—The plaintiff's rule must be discharged, and the defendant's rule made absolute. The promise in the first count of the declaration is treated as a promise made by discounting the bill; but the statement in the letter is quite foreign to that, and contains no admission at all that any debt is actually due; it is in reality a mere invention of the pleader's, and the count cannot be supported. With respect to the promise relied upon as supporting the account stated, that must be taken to have been made with reference to the subject-matter of the consideration; and allowing a mere promise of this kind to be brought in aid of a promise which is bad under the Statute of Frauds for want of considera- tion, would be a virtual repeal of the statute.

Plaintiff's rule discharged; defendant's rule absolute.

REG. v. LORD HASTINGS and OTHERS.

Bastardy order—Costs—Hearing and determination.

Erle shewed cause against a rule calling on the defendants to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding them to make an order directing the guardians of the poor of the parish of Aylsham to pay to Mr. John Shepherd the full costs incurred by him in resisting an order made upon him under the bastardy clauses of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76. By the 73rd section of that statute it is provided that if, upon the hearing of such application, the Court shall not think fit to make any order thereon, it shall order and direct that the full costs and charges incurred by the person so intended to be charged in resisting such applica- tion shall be paid by such overseers or guardians. It was submitted in the present case that the "appli- cation had not been heard," within the meaning of the Act, inasmuch as by a preliminary objection taken by Mr. Shepherd, the signatures to the notices could not be proved, and the magistrates, therefore, re- fused to make the order, and dismissed the appli- cation; citing 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, ss. 72, 73; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85; Reg. v. Recorder of Exeter (3 G. & D. 167; S. C. 12 L. J. Q. B. 7).

Gunning, contrà, in support of rule, citing Rex v. Cottingham (4 Nev. & M. 215); Reg. v. Stamper (1 Q. B. 119; S. C. 4 P. & D. 539).

By the COURT.—This party cannot come here to ask us to compel the sessions to give him costs in consequence of his case not having been heard, when he himself has prevented the hearing on an objection that there has been no notice as required by the statute, and now, merely because he wants his costs, endeavours to say there has been a hearing and a notice.

Rule discharged.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF LEEDS.

In an appeal against an order for the removal of L. M., the wife of J. M., and their four children, two within the age of nurture and two above, Held, that an order of removal made upon an examination taken concerning the father's settlement only was good, notwithstanding the order of removal did not include him, but only related to the wife and children.

This was an appeal against an order of removal of Lydia, the wife of John Morgan, and their four chil- dren, two of whom were within the age of nurture, and two above that age, from Leeds to Washton, the place of her maiden settlement. The Recorder quashed the order on the following grounds of appeal:—4th, "that although the said examinations shew that the said L. M. and her children were living with her said husband in the said township of Leeds, at the time when the said examination was taken, yet it does not appear on the said examinations that the said pauper L. M. consented to be removed to the said township of Washton, or consented to be removed at all with- out her husband, the said J. M.: 5th, that the said examinations were informal, insufficient, and bad, in respect of other matters, besides those to which the preceding grounds of appeal relate; and that the said examinations do not shew a good and sufficient cause for the removal of the said paupers from the said township of Leeds to the said township of Washton: 6th, that the examinations whereon the said order of removal was made were not duly taken." On the 5th and 6th grounds of appeal the appellants con- tended that the order ought to be quashed, inasmuch as it appeared, on looking at the examinations, in- cluding the headings, that they related to the settle- ment of John Morgan only, concerning which there was not any dispute, and that they were, therefore, not taken in the matter to which the order related.

On the 10th of May the Court confirmed the order of sessions (3 Law T. 125).

On the 22nd of May, Hall again mentioned the case, and pointed out a distinction between the case of the children who were above the age of nurture and those under it, and that, although it might be bad with respect to the latter, as regards the former it was good.

By the COURT.—The order of sessions was con- firmed, on the single ground that the wife had not consented to be removed without her husband; at that time we did not recollect the difference in the ages of the children. The question arises on the ex- aminations of the father and mother, which are only made touching the lawful settlement of the father, whereas the order of removal is of the wife and child- ren. We think this point is untenable, as an inquiry into the father's settlement was necessary in this case, and that the examination is sufficiently taken. It is also said that the examinations are bad, for not nega- tiving that the father was born in Ireland or Scot- land; the answer to the objection is, that they shew he did not know where he was born. We are there- fore of opinion, that the order of removal is good, and ought to have been confirmed so far as regards the two children above the age of nurture.

Order partly confirmed.

MORRIS v. COWELL.

Demurrer—Insanity—Fraud.

Declaration upon a bill of exchange drawn by Thomas Corder on the defendant, payable to the plaintiff, and accepted by the defendant.

Plea—That before and at the time of accepting the said bill of exchange the defendant was of unsound mind, and incapable of managing her own affairs, and that Corder, well knowing the premises, and intending to take advantage of the defendant, fraudulently ob- tained the said bill of exchange, and that there never was any consideration or value whatever for the said acceptance of the said bill.

Replication—De injuriâ.

Demurrer, assigning for cause that the plea is not a plea of excuse, but in bar, and therefore the repli- cation is bad.

Montague Smith, in support of the demurrer; citing Fitz. Nat. Brev. 202, 466, title Writ dum fuit non compos mentis, 2 Blk. Com. 291; 1 Fonblanq. on Equity, 46; Yates v. Bowe (2 Stra. 1104; 4 Co. R. 123); Baxter v. Earl of Portsmouth (7 D. & R. 614); Fisher v. Wood (1 N. C. 54); Whittaker v. Mason (2 N. C. 369); Marston v. Allen (8 M. & W. 494); Parker v. Ryley (3 M. & W. 237).

Lorill, contrà, submitted that the plea was in sub- stance a plea of fraud, and the plaintiff's title was not therefore impeached by the plea, which did not impute to him any knowledge of the fraud; citing Humfries v. O'Connell (7 M. & W. 370); Isaac v. Farrer (1 M. & W. 65); Brown v. Joddrell (1 Mo. & Mal. 105); Cooper v. Gorbett (Ex. T. T. 1844); Whitehead v. Walker (9 M. & W. 506); Scott v. Chappelow (4 M. & G. 336).

By the COURT.—This is, in fact, a plea of fraud, and, if so, it is bad, as the plaintiff is not charged with having had notice of it. We are asked to strike out that part of the plea which avers fraud; but if a party pleading a plea will state on the face of it a number of circumstances from which a different state of facts arises to what he intended, he is hardly at li- berty to say, Strike out all averments so as to make it a totally different plea. Judgment for the plaintiff.

REG. v. MACCLESFIELD.

In this case the Court of Quarter Sessions had quashed the order of removal, on the ground of the insufficiency of the examination, and refused to allow the respondents to go into evidence in support of their case. They granted a case for the opinion of this Court, and left the question in the following form: "If the Court should be of opinion that the examina- tion is insufficient, then the order of sessions to be confirmed: if this Court should be of opinion that the examination is sufficient, then the sessions are to be directed to enter continuances, and hear the appeal. Upon the case being called on,

DENMAN, C.J. said.—We cannot hear this case discussed, as we have already laid down the rule on the subject, and where case states that in a certain event the sessions are to enter continuances and hear the appeal, they have no power to do so without our permission.

Townsend, in support of the order.

Davidson, contrà. Struck out.

REG. v. ROSE, Esq.

Highway Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50—Construction of the 27th section.

Non-rateability of timber woods not usually rated.

This was an appeal against an order of justices of the county of Oxford, confirming an appeal of Mr. Powys against a rate to which he had been assessed under the highway-rate, in respect of certain timber- woods at Whitchurch, in the said county. It was found as a fact that these woods had not been rated at the time of the passing of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, and the sessions being of opinion that they could not be considered to "have been usually rated" within the meaning of the 27th section of that Act, quashed the rate.

Walesby, in support of the order of sessions.

Keating and Lucas, contrà, submitted that although these woods might not be rateable to the relief of the poor, under the 43 Eliz.; it had never been disputed in other parishes that they were rateable to the high- way-rate, and that the proviso, that the rate should be confined to such property as had been usually rated to the highways, meant not simply such property as had been usually rated to the highways within the particular parish, but such as was usually rateable by law to the highways, and had been generally rated, in point of fact, throughout the kingdom.

By the COURT.—"Heretofore usually rated" must mean actually rated in that particular parish, and the sessions have found that these woods were not rated in the parish in question; and, therefore, we think they are not liable to this rate. We cannot arrive at any conclusion with satisfaction to ourselves, but this is a meaning fairly applicable to the words of the Act, and we think it better to adhere to them; for at any rate, in point of convenience, it is much more easy to ascertain the usage of a particular parish than of the country at large. Order confirmed.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF STOKE-BLISS.

Where appellants have delivered notice and grounds of appeal, and subsequently deliver notice of counter- mand, but after the time appointed for so doing ac- cording to the practice of the sessions, the respond- ents have a right to go to the next sessions for the costs occasioned by the countermand, but not for the general costs.

Whitmore and Allen shewed cause against a rule to quash a return to a writ of certiorari, by which the justices of the county of Stafford had confirmed an order of removal from the township of King's Swin- ford to the township of Stoke-Bliss. It appeared that notice and grounds of appeal had been served in due time after service of the order; but on Tuesday, the 2nd of Jan. being the first day of the sessions, owing to the absence of a material witness, notice of counter- mand was served upon the parish officers of King's Swinford. The day for hearing appeals at Stafford was the Thursday, but by the rule of sessions the notice of countermand ought to have been served on the Monday, and was therefore admitted to be too late; but upon serving the notice of countermand, the appellants informed the respondents that they in- tended to prosecute their appeal, and had good evi- dence to support the settlement set up in one of the grounds of appeal. The pauper was not at that time removed, nor was he until after the order of sessions was made. Upon the Thursday, on the appeal being called on, the respondents applied for the costs, and the sessions thereupon made an order, "that the order made by the said justices be confirmed, and that the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Stoke-Bliss pay to the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of King's Swinford the sum of 15*l*. 10s. for the costs and charges they have incurred and been put to in attending the court this day in support of such order."

It was submitted that the sessions had jurisdiction to make the order for the costs, as there was no- tice of appeal and countermand; and although it was admitted to be bad as to the confirmation, it was severable, and consequently the former part might be rejected as surplusage, and the order confirmed as to the costs.

W. H. Cooke, contrà, contended that costs are merely ancillary to the judgment (Reg. v. Justices of West Riding of Yorkshire (3 G. & D. 170); that since the New Poor Law Act (4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76), there are two periods for appealing; the first upon the receiving notice of the order, the second upon receipt of the pauper. (Reg. v. Middlesex, 9 Dowl. 163.) In the present case, there was no removal, and when that is made, if the sessions decide in favour of the appellants, they will be entitled to costs, and ought to recover back these very costs which they are now ordered to pay; and therefore no motion for costs ought to be made until the pauper is actually removed. More- over, that they could not do so under the 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 30, s. 3, as that statute was intended only for those cases in which the appellants abandon their appeal.

By the COURT.—It is contended, that although the order may be bad so far as the confirmation of the order of removal is concerned, it is nevertheless good so far as relates to the costs. The former is clearly matter over which the sessions had no jurisdiction, and the order is bad in that respect. With regard to the latter part of the order, we are far from say- ing that the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76 has done away with the 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 30, and if the order had been simply for the costs of the day, it would pro- bably have been correct. This was in fact the proper time to apply for costs then incurred, without refer- ence to what would come of the settlement, but they have made the order for the costs expressly to depend on the order of confirmation; that part is therefore inseparable and cannot be supported.

Order quashed.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Fearn v. Filica.

Bill of exchange—Want of title—Fraudulent indorsement.

Byles, Serjt. (G. Atkinson, in support) shewed cause against a rule obtained by Wilde, Serjt.

The declaration stated that a bill, dated the 9th of December, 1843, for 300*l*. bearing several indorsements, had been indorsed by Poly and Co. to a firm in England using the style and firm of Howard, Grand, and Co. and that one Lonergan, by procuration, indorsed the bill to one Daniels, who indorsed it to the plaintiff. The only issue taken on the record was, that the said firm of Howard, Grand, and Co. did not indorse the said bill to Lonergan, in manner and form, &c. The action was indorsee against acceptor, and the indorsements were all admitted, except the intervening indorsement by procuration of Lonergan, for Howard, Grand, and Co. The learned judge left it to the jury at the trial to say whether they believed the plaintiff to be a bonâ fide holder, and the jury rightly found he was. This was Grand's bill indorsed to them by parties having a good title. The bill was taken to Daniels, who gave up nine warrants for it, and from him it passed to the plaintiff, who discounted it at 7 per cent. He is therefore the indorsee for value. Bingham v. Stanley (2 M. B. 107) contains the last decision on the subject in the Court of Queen's Bench; Edwards v. Groves (2 Q. & W. 642) is no longer an authority. The bill was sent to Grand and Co. and called a remittance, with power to indorse. The plaintiff does not represent any party who had any notice at all. He is a bonâ fide holder for value. There is an indorsement, in fact, admitted on the record. (Martin v. Allen, 8 M. & W. 494.) In this case, Grand had left an authority to Lonergan to indorse all bills which might be remitted to Mr. Lopez, for any liability he might be under for the firm. The delivery of the bill to Lopez was within the authority. It was contended that the authority was revoked by the act of bankruptcy, but the jury found there was no act of bankruptcy committed. The act relied upon was Grand absenting himself from his place of business; but it was shewn that a reward of 50*l*. was offered for his apprehension, and it must be inferred it was a criminal charge. The plaintiff is a bonâ fide holder, and there is no ground for sending this case to a new trial.

Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. contrà.—It was shewn at the time that, before the receipt of the bill, Grand had absconded, taking all his books with him. In this case the letter left by Grand was an authority to apply the bills of Howard, Grand, and Co. which they had a lawful right to dispose of, and they were to be disposed of to satisfy the claims of Lopez's transactions with the firm. In this case they were applied to the transactions of Lonergan. The letter left by Grand gave no authority to indorse this bill, and the holder is subject to all the consequences of want of title.

Tindal, C. J. delivering judgment.—There could be no doubt, whatever, that if Grand had indorsed this bill of exchange with his own hand, no party who afterwards took it for a bonâ fide consideration would be discharged from the legal consequences of such indorsement. [The learned judge here went through the facts of the case.] It seems to me that Lonergan put the name of Howard, Grand, and Co. to the back of the bill of exchange, when he had no authority to indorse it under the letter; and that being the case, not having any authority, the consequence is, the present holder must look for his remedy against the indorser. He cannot maintain the present action.

Rule absolute.

Edgell v. Curling.

Lackington and Others v. Elliot.

Where the landlord distrains upon the goods of a bankrupt for more than a year's rent, and before a sale takes place, trustees under a deed of assignment of the bankrupt's effects pay the landlord the amount of his distress in order to effect a sale by auction themselves,—Held, the surplus over the amount of a year's rent is not recoverable against the landlord by the assignees of the bankrupt as money had and received, there being no sale by the landlord.

Assumpsit against the defendant for money had and received by the plaintiffs as assignees of a bankrupt.

Plea—Non-assumpsit.

Byles, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule, calling upon the plaintiffs to shew cause why the verdict in this cause should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered. The defendant, who was the landlord of the bankrupt, had since died, and the action was brought really against his executors. The rent had been suffered to run into arrear a great many years, the rent of the house being 35*l*. per annum, and 125*l*. being due at the time of an act of bankruptcy committed, an assignment of all the bankrupt's property having been made for the benefit of his creditors. After the making of this assignment, the defendant made out a warrant of distress. On the day, and before the distress took place, the defendant, through his agent, had notice of an act of bankruptcy having been committed. The goods were valued, an inventory signed, and the goods condemned at the sum of 120*l*. and 16*l*. charges. The agent of the trustees who were in possession under the deed of assignment agreed to give the price at which the goods were valued, together with the expenses. The defendant, by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, could only distrain for a year's rent in arrear due at the time of the bankruptcy. Now the party who employs a broker is responsible for his acts, and notice to him is notice to his employer. (Rothwell v. Timbrell, 1 Dowl. N. S. 778; Ramsey v. Eaton, 10 M. & W. 22.) Money had and received is the proper form of action in this case; the surplus remaining in the hands of the landlord, after satisfying his claim for a year's rent, being the property of the assignees. Both sides treated the transaction as a sale under the distress.

Sir T. Wilde, contrà.—When the landlord entered, the auctioneer, who was the agent of the trustees under the deed of assignment, paid him a sum of money to relieve the goods, and then proceeded to sell under the deed. The landlord's claim was in the nature of a lien, and the agents of the trustees paid it off with a view to make the sale more productive for the insolvent estate. No one ever thought of acquiring title under the landlord. In this case there is no bill of sale or document purporting to transfer the goods; there was nothing more than a receipt for the money paid. (Lee v. Lopes, 15 East, 231.) The goods are relinquished, the landlord's hands are withdrawn; they are unchanged in property, and the assignees' remedy is left as entire as before the distress took place. The money was not paid as by purchasers, but paid by persons having an interest to prevent a sale. (Longridge v. Dorville, 5 B. & Ald. 117; Pott v. Turner, 6 Bing. 707.) Supposing it to be a sale, it would be a "transaction" within the meaning and protection of the Act.

Tindal, C. J. delivering judgment.—It appears to me not to be a sale. The landlord, when he put in the distress on the 29th of December, acquired no property in the goods, he had nothing but a pledge, given by the 2 Wm. & M. c. 5. Being in that situation, and waiting until five days had expired, he came to an arrangement with the trustees, the landlord withdrew, and left the goods in the possession of the trustees. There was nothing in the nature of the transaction like a sale at all. This was not the ordinary case of a landlord selling goods for rent due; in this case it was no more than a purchasing out of the landlord, who was in possession. Besides, the landlord, when he entered on the 29th of December, might have distrained for another quarter's rent due at Michaelmas, and it was part of the contract entered into, that he should forego the right of distress for that quarter's rent. Looking at it in every point of view, it appears to me not a sale, and the money put into the pocket of the landlord was money not produced by a sale of the property of the assignees. It was a voluntary payment by the agent of the trustees, in order to have the sale of the property. Such a sale would not make the money had and received to the use of the assignees.

Coltman, J. and Cresswell, J. delivered judgments to the same effect. Rule absolute.

Change of venue—Material evidence.

Shee, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why a nonsuit in this cause should not be entered, pursuant to leave at the trial. The venue in the cause had been changed, and the only question was, whether material evidence had been given in the county in which the action was tried. The only evidence offered was a letter, directed to the defendant by an agent of the plaintiff, and posted in the county in which the venue was laid.

SMART v. NOKES.

Unstamped bill of exchange—Account stated—Evidence.

Debt. Pleas—Never indebted, and payment.

Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause in this case after the settlement of accounts between the plaintiff and defendant, and a balance ascertained. A bill of exchange had been given for the balance, which turned out to be on an improper stamp. An action had been brought, and on the bill being tendered in evidence, it was rejected. A paper, some part in the handwriting of the defendant, shewing the state of the account between the parties, was put in on the account stated, and the bill of exchange was also offered to shew that no bill of exchange had been given. Cresswell, J. at the trial, refused to receive the bill. The jury found there was a debt due, but said it was paid by a bill. On moving the Court, a second trial was had, and the bill was received in evidence, for the limited purpose of shewing that no bill had been given. The jury divided the matter, and found for one half the sum claimed. It was hoped the Court would not think it necessary to send the case down again.

Byles, Serjt. contrà.—The only distinct evidence offered on the count for money lent, was that of a loan for 420*l.*; it was quite clear that sum had been paid with legal interest. On the account stated you cannot pray in aid of a written document an unstamped bill of exchange. Without the bill, the document itself would prove nothing at all.

An action had been brought against the defendant, and one Trimbey and the defendant's son became bail above. It became necessary to send a commission out to Canada to examine witnesses, and the sum of 100*l.* was required to be paid into court, which was done by Trimbey. The defendant died in distressed circumstances, and as the action had abated, it was sought to have the money taken out of court by the party paying it in. Rule nisi.

PETERS v. CARSON.

Under 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, the proper tribunal for the ascertainment and settlement of damages done by surveyors of highways in opening drains, or for the other purposes of the statute, are justices at petty sessions, and an action at Nisi Prius will be wrongly brought.

[illegible], Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by [illegible]. The declaration was in trespass, and the question turned upon the construction of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, s. 67. The surveyors of a district had opened a drain, and the question was, whether they had the right to do so or not; the statute in the 54th section directing that the damages resulting from such an act by the surveyors should be settled and ascertained by justices at petty sessions. Bayfield v. Porter (13 East, 200) decides that that is the only mode in which the damages can be ascertained. The proper time to settle the damages was after the act done, and not before. Looking at the dates in this case, it appeared a petty sessions could not be held. With respect to tender of amends, they can only be of importance when a jury is required to judge of their sufficiency.

Manning, Serjt. contrà.

TINDAL, C.J.—It appeared that the construction of the General Highway Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, did not make the ascertainment of the damages, or the payment, acts which constituted a condition precedent; but they were, on the contrary, conditions subsequent. A jury could not try the question at all; the question was left by the legislature to the determination of the magistrates in petty sessions, and that seemed an answer to the objection.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Rule discharged.

SURPLICE v. FARNSWORTH.

Use and occupation will lie for the rent of premises by a tenant from year to year, but who left on account of the landlord not repairing the premises, although from the want of such repairs the premises are unfit for the purposes for which they were taken, and although the tenant has done all in his power to give up possession to the landlord. A contract by the landlord, that he shall repair the premises, such repairing, when required, is not a condition precedent to the existence of the tenancy, the proper remedy is by contract and not by throwing up the premises.

Use and occupation.

Plea—Non-assumpsit.

Clarke, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Byles. There was nothing in the present case to bring it within the cases cited on moving the rule. There was no question made as to the contract. The premises were let to the defendant from year to year without any stipulation that the landlord should be bound to repair. The only evidence offered of the landlord repairing was, that the tenant himself repaired and paid it out of his rent. [CRESSWELL, J. When the question was left to the jury, they found the premises were not fit for malting.] It was proved that the landlord's repairs had been done by the tenant and deducted from the rent. It was not a contract on the part of the landlord to do whatever repairs were required. There was no notice given to the landlord to do these repairs. Collins v. Barrow (1 M. & Rob. 112); Salisbury v. Marshall (4 C. & P. 65); Smith v. Marrable (11 M. & W. 5) are all cases where the contracts were made for the occupation of premises which when entered upon were not fit for occupation. Here there has been a beneficial occupation for a year, the premises have subsequently got out of repair, and then the tenant makes it a case for quitting. Where tenants have left in consequence of taking down a partition-wall, that in fact amounted to an eviction; Sutton v. Temple (13 L. J. N. S.) is an authority against the cases cited. Where by an agreement the premises were to be in a good state of repair before the tenant entered, that was in fact a condition precedent, and was a different case from where the tenant is already in possession, and the repairs are necessary to be done afterwards. All the cases are fully reviewed in Hart v. Windsor (13 L. J. N.S. Exc. 129). If this can be done in a tenancy from year to year, why not also in a lease, and that as in this case without calling upon the landlord to do the repairs required. There was not the slightest evidence of notice of want of repairs.

Byles, Serjt. contrà.—The present question affects the terms of by far the greater number of parol demises from year to year, and if decided adverse to the defendant, lessees will be encumbered with obligations much greater than hitherto. The present action was not debt on a demise, but for use and occupation. The premises were given up on the 24th March, the day before the rent became due. The keys were thrown in at the door of the landlord. All that the tenant could do to throw up the premises had been done. The repairs had hitherto been done at the expense of the landlord, and there was no suggestion at the time that it was the tenant's duty to repair and be paid by the landlord afterwards. The repairs appear to have been done at the landlord's expense. [CRESSWELL, J.—That does not appear in the evidence. I find 1*l.* 5*s.* was said to be mentioned in the receipt given by the landlord; but whether that was allowed I do not know.] The rule was asked in the alternative on that ground. If the contract exists upon a demise from year to year, and the premises are actually given up, is that condition to repair not implied in a parol demise? There are several cases which decide it is a condition, and no case can be found which decides it is not. In Salisbury v. Marshall there was an undertaking between the parties that the premises should be put into proper repair. The tenant was not bound to go in until repairs finished, and if he did go in, need not stay unless the repairs were done. This case is supported by several subsequent cases. [illegible] (7 D. & R. 117) was decided on the ground of [illegible]. In that case the landlord was under no [illegible] repair, and it supposes an implied condition [illegible] grafted on the case. The same [illegible] and Cowie v. Goodwin (9 C. & P. 378). [TINDAL, C. J.—That was a case of furnished apartments, where the party had nothing to do with the lower part of the premises.] Then in the case of Smith v. Marrable, the cases cited on the opposite side shew no such contract as exists in this case, and I assume that where there is an express contract, there is an implied condition. [CRESSWELL, J.—I do not think Smith v. Marrables goes to shew what would be the state of things if the bugs had come in afterwards.] Your lordships are called upon to decide the abstract question. Hart v. Windsor only goes to shew that no such contract shall be implied as that the landlord shall keep the premises in repair, or shall keep them in habitable condition. That decision does not apply where, as in this case, there is a contract expressed, and all that this case decides is that the law will not imply the contract, and as it will not imply the contract, it will not imply the condition. But it does not decide that where the contract is express, the condition shall not be implied.

TINDAL, C. J. delivering judgment.—It was admitted in this case that the rule cannot be sustained unless the grounds could be shewn upon which the tenant held possession, and that the landlord was bound by a condition to make the necessary repairs during the existence of the tenancy. We have not been shewn any authority which necessarily formed a condition on his part. If this condition had been under seal, there is no doubt a mere covenant on the part of the landlord would not have amounted to a condition, so that a breach would authorize the tenant to throw up the lease. Allow, for the purposes of argument, it is proved that the landlord had agreed in this particular case for the performance of repairs during the term, there is no principle in law why it should be different from the case of a covenant under seal. The case of Salisbury v. Marshall, upon which it is principally contended, the contract amounted to a condition. When looked at, there was something to be done by the landlord before the tenant entered, which formed a condition precedent on the part of the landlord to put the premises into repair before the tenant entered. When the tenant found the repairs not completed he was entitled to throw up the premises, they being in a state quite unfit for habitation. That might be defended on the ground of the non-performance of a condition precedent. In the present case, after the decision in Izon v. Gorton, it is impossible to hold that the defendant did not continue in the premises, and that the rent was not payable from him to the landlord; the rule ought, therefore, to be discharged.

COLTMAN, J.—The cases of Smith v. Marrable and Salisbury v. Marshall may be distinguished. Though a landlord is bound by his contract to repair the premises, yet it does not constitute a condition so as to enable the tenant to quit the premises by virtue of a failure in the performance of the contract; his proper remedy is by action on the contract, and not by throwing up the premises. It was tried to distinguish the action of debt and this action for use and occupation, but I do not think there is any thing in the distinction. It is sufficient if there is an action in point of law.

CRESSWELL, J.—It seems to me, also, that the rule must be discharged. The action for use and occupation is brought on an agreement. It is contended that the agreement is put an end to by failure of the landlord to do that which was an implied condition in the contract. No such condition can be imported where there is a written contract or lease under seal. It is admitted, where the landlord covenanted to repair, the tenant could not leave on account of the landlord not performing the covenant. The cases cited are clear authorities that use and occupation will lie although not an actual occupation.

Rule discharged.

POTT v. BEVAN.

Interest for advances made before the bankruptcy of a bank is chargeable after the bankruptcy, and is recoverable against the debtor by the assignees, although the debtor has had no notice of such a claim for four years.

Talfourd, Serjt. (Tomlinson with him), shewed cause against a rule obtained by Murphy to reduce the damages by the amount of 41*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* being interest on advances made by a bank to the defendant. There is a contract to pay in all the ordinary cases of accounts with banks. (Moore v. Voughton 1 Stark, 487; Higgins v. Sargent, 2 B. & C. 349; Bruce v. Hunter, 3 Camp. 467.) An agent who has advanced money for his principal in effecting an insurance and other mercantile business, is entitled to charge interest, and at the end of every year to make a rest, and add the interest then due to the principal.

Murphy, Serjt. contrà.—No demand had been made [illegible]

TINDAL, C. J.—There is no question in this case, if the bank had not stopped, the interest of this debt would have gone on, and I cannot see upon what principle the interest is not to continue in favour of the assignees, against the defendant after the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, has vested in the assignees all the rights of the bankrupt, in such full and distinct terms as are contained in the 69th section. Rule discharged.

LANGFORD v. WOODS.

Not guilty by statute—Special pleas.

Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule, why so much of an order of Coltman, J. made on the 14th of May, which directed that the first and fourth pleas should be rescinded. The defendant had pleaded—1st, Not guilty by statute to the first count; 2nd, The chimney of the plaintiff was a public nuisance; 3rd, The chimney a private nuisance: to the second and third counts, Not guilty; in the second count, a right of support; and, lastly, to the whole declaration, Leave and license. The objection is, to have the plea of not guilty to those counts to which the special pleas relate. The matter to be considered is, whether the defendant is entitled to have the plea of not guilty by statute, and to have another special plea raising another plea on the record. Ross v. Clifton (11 A. & E. 631) is a decision against the claim.

Byles, contrà.—All that is asked is, that when the case comes on to be heard, the matter contained in the special pleas may be given in evidence under the plea of not guilty.

By the COURT.—The first plea must be limited to that effect, the defendant to take short notice of trial. Rule absolute.

BROWN v. COPLEY.

The sheriff is not liable for the acts of his bailiffs after a supersedeas issued out of the county court.

Trover—Plea, not guilty.

Talfourd, Serjt. (Pashley with him) shewed cause against a rule obtained by Byles, why the verdict in this cause should not be set aside, and instead thereof a verdict entered for the defendant, or for a new trial. The rule was granted on two grounds:—1st, that the sheriff as a judicial officer was not liable in trespass for the acts of his bailiffs; and, 2nd, that the indemnity taken by the sheriff from the bailiffs would not deprive him of his judicial character; and, independently of that, the indemnity was not receivable in evidence for want of a stamp. The wrongful act complained of was the detaining the goods after a writ of supersedeas had issued. The sheriff is responsible, and is bound to prevent the wrongful acts of his servants. (Saunderson v. Baker, 3 Wilson, 309; 2 Rolles' Ab. pl. 9, 552; 2 Sir W. Black. 834; Parrott v Mumford, 2 Esp. 585; Price v. Peek, 1 Bing. N.C. 380.) The bailiffs having got possession by means of the sheriff, in the case of improper conduct of the officer, he is liable. If the suitors of the county court are the judges, the supersedeas would be a ministerial act. The bailiffs in this case were not the ordinary bailiffs of the court, but specially appointed by the sheriff in taking an indemnity. (Smart v. Hutton, reported in a note in Raphael v. Goodman, 8 A. & E. 568.) The writ first delivered to the bailiffs was for a totally different purpose. Woodgate v. Knatchbull (2 T. R. 148), Holroyd v. Breare (2 B. & Ald. 473), Bradley v. Carr (3 M. & G. 221), point to the distinction between what are ministerial and what are judicial acts. In Com. Dig. tit. County—"Who shall be judge there?" it is said, "The county court is a court baron, and not a court of record, in which the suitors are judges, and not the sheriffs." (Tunno v. Morris, (2 C. M. & R. 298.) With respect to the want of a stamp upon the indemnity, the goods taken under the attachment were of the value of 8*l.*; besides, the subject-matter of the contract was uncertain, and thus document might be read in evidence.

Byles, contrà, citing, 2 Rolles' Ab. 17; Cooke v. Palmer (6 B & C. 639); Crowder v. Long (8 B. & C. 598), stopped by the Court.

TINDAL, C. J.—It appears to me the rule must be made absolute. The question is, whether the sheriff was shewn, upon the evidence given in this case, to have been guilty of a conversion in trover, or whether the refusal to deliver the goods which had been seized under the writ of attachment was a conjoint act of the bailiff and the sheriff, or the bailiff alone. It appears to me that it was done by the bailiff alone, and that at the time when the conversion took place he was not the servant of the sheriff. The ground upon which the sheriff is generally liable for a mistake or excess in the execution of process is, that he performs a duty by the hands of others when the law requires him to perform it himself. Now, here, the writ of attachment issued, and after that came the writ of supersedeas, the effect of which was to make that writ inoperative, and not only made the writ inoperative, but the warrant founded upon it. The consequence was, that though the sheriff would be liable for the original taking of the goods, and for keeping them if any thing wrong had been done, that what was done was done by the bailiffs by their own authority, and, indeed, against the positive orders of the sheriff. The writ of supersedeas was a direct command to give up the goods. If, therefore, we were to hold that the sheriff was liable, under such circumstances, it would be making a person liable as a wrong doer for the act of his servant after he had determined his authority. Now we have the authority for that the case in Rolles' Ab. That case has not been overruled, and I see no reason why it should be, and, therefore, not alone upon principle but upon authority, I think the verdict ought to be entered for him.

COLTMAN, J. and CRESSWELL, J. delivered judgment to the same effect. Rule absolute.

CAMPBELL v. POWNALL.

A partnership is not constituted by an agreement among several persons to share each other's losses in trade.

Watson, Q. C. and Crompton showed cause against a rule obtained by Murphy, Serjt. for a new trial.

The case was tried at the last assizes at Liverpool, before Coltman, J. The plaintiff and defendant were both members of an association of carters at Liverpool, of which the defendant was also one of the officers. The society were in the habit of collecting the earnings of all the members, each of whom afterwards received the whole of his own earnings, subject only to a rateable share of the expenses and of the loss occasioned by the bad debts of the whole body. At the trial it was contended that this kind of mutual assurance against losses constituted a partnership between the members, and that, as the present action was to recover money had and received by the defendant in the above manner, the plaintiff was precluded by the partnership from recovering at law.

After the case was over, the jury asked the opinion of the judge as to the partnership, and he having said that he thought it proved, the jury found for the defendant.

For the defendant it was now contended that the ruling of the learned judge was right.

Murphy, Serjt. and Cowling, contrà, were stopped by the Court.

By the COURT.—We cannot find in this case any intention of dividing the profits, and we do not think that a mere mutual indemnity against loss will constitute a partnership. An arrangement between two tradesmen to bear bad debts mutually, there being no mutual interest in their stock or in their profits, is not a partnership. There are many descriptions of loss which may be more conveniently borne by a society than by individuals. A number of farmers, for instance, who should agree to bear together all losses which they might sustain by fire, would not be partners. We cannot agree with the learned judge's answer to the question of the jury, and it is clear, from their putting that question, that they had some doubts as to other points in the case. We are, therefore, bound to grant a new trial, though we cannot help saying that the plaintiff is not unlikely to fail on other grounds. Rule absolute.

DOE dem. ADAMS v. RANDERSON.

Practice.—The Court will stay proceedings in an action of ejectment until a prior action of trespass brought by the same plaintiff has been decided, where the question of title to the same premises is raised in both actions.

Knowles, Q.C. moved for a rule to stay proceeding in this action until an action of trespass, brought by Adams, the present lessor of the plaintiff, in the Queen's Bench, against four persons for ejecting him, under the orders of the present defendants, from the premises now in question, should be disposed of. The pleadings in the action of trespass put the title in issue. The plaintiff obtanied a verdict at the last assizes at York, and the defendants have obtained a rule, pursuant to leave, to enter a verdict for them. The defendants are willing to let this action abide the result of the other, and to undertake to give up possession, and pay mesne profits, if the Queen's Bench shall decide against them. It is very hard that the defendants should be oppressed with two actions, especially as the plaintiff is suing in both in formâ pauperis.

Aspinall shewed cause in the first instance. The subject-matter of the two actions is different, and the parties are different. There is no case in which, under such circumstances, the Court has interfered. There are other points reserved in the action of trespass besides the question of title, which may never arise at all.

By the COURT.—If a plaintiff chooses to try his title first by an action of trespass, he ought not to harass the opposite party with a second action until that is settled. The defendants here are willing to allow the present action, the possession of the premises, and the mesne profits abide the event of the action of trespass. Upon those terms, we think they are entitled to their rule; the costs of this application to be costs in the cause.

PERRIN v. SAME.

A letter from a plaintiff's attorney to an under-sheriff, inclosing writs of ca. sa. and requesting him to employ a particular officer who has received instructions for the execution, is not an appointment of a special bailiff, and does not release the sheriff from responsibility for neglect of the officer.

Evans, Q. C. and Welsby shewed cause against a rule obtained by Jervis, Q. C. to set aside the verdict for the plaintiffs, and for a new trial. The action was against the sheriff, and the question at the trial was whether the letters written by the plaintiff's attorney amounted to an appointment of a special bailiff, and were, therefore, a release of the sheriff from responsibility. The following were the letters:—

"Warrington, June 20, 1842.

"Alderson and Another v. Rigby.

"Perrin v. Same.

"Dear Sir,—Enclosed you will receive a ca. sa. in each of the above actions, and will thank you to procure and forward warrants in each to Mr. M., T., sheriff's officer, at Northwich, whom I have instructed as to the execution thereof. Your charges I shall be glad to pay as you may direct.

"Yours truly,

"J. B."

"Alderson and Another v. Rigby.

"Perrin v. Same.

"Sir,—Enclosed I send you ca. sa.'s against the above defendant, to levy in the former action 12*l.* 15s. 1d. and in the latter, 11*l.* 14s. 6d. You will have to execute them in the course of the week, or the defendant will be gone. He lives with his father, Mr. J. Rigby, at a farm-house which you will see on the canal-bridge, &c. He was lately in business as a druggist there. You must use some caution in taking him, and I have no doubt his mother will pay the debt and costs in each, as she has done so before.

"Yours, &c.

"J. B.

"To Mr. T. sheriff's officer, Northwich."

For the plaintiff it was contended that these letters amounted to nothing more than a suggestion to the sheriff as to which of his officers was best acquainted with the facts, and could most conveniently execute the writ. If this is an appointment of a special bailiff, it will be dangerous for an attorney to interfere at all or give the officer any information to facilitate the execution of process. Nothing is more common than for attorneys to send process at once to some particular officer. The sheriff, by appointing sworn bailiffs, holds them out to the world as the persons whom he intrusts with the execution of his duties, and for whose acts and omissions he is responsible.

Egerton, contrà.—Your lordships need not be reminded of a numerous class of cases in which any interference by the attorney has been held to release the sheriff. Myranda v. ——— (4 T. R. 419) is directly in point.

POLLOCK, C. B.—In that case the attorney's clerk was appointed.

ALDERSON, B.—That was a sort of very special bailiff.

Egerton.—Where the attorney himself gives instructions to the officer, the sheriff ought not to be liable. Supposing the attorney to direct the commission of an illegal act, surely the sheriff would not be answerable for that. The cases are very strong in favour of the proposition that a plaintiff cannot manage an execution himself and then make the sheriff responsible for what may have been his own act.

By the COURT.—Perhaps in this case, if the instructions to the officer had not been produced, the jury might have been asked, "How can the sheriff be guilty of negligence when the officer may have been acting on the instructions given him by the attorney?" But here the letter containing the instructions is produced, and the jury find that the officer was guilty of negligence. The letter to the under-sheriff simply amounts to saying, "It would be convenient to employ Mr. T. because I have instructed him how to execute the writ." But the sheriff was not bound to appoint Mr. T. and he might, if he chose, have employed another officer. We think there is nothing here to exonerate the sheriff.

NICHOLAS v. MORGAN.

An agreement that a plaintiff should accept as payment of a debt an authority to pay himself out of certain moneys of defendant to be received by plaintiff, may be proved under a plea of payment.

Cowling shewed cause against a rule obtained by V. Williams to set aside verdict for defendant and enter a verdict for plaintiff, on the third issue.

The case was tried before Maule, J. at the last assizes at Haverfordwest. The plaintiff was an auctioneer, and in the course of his business had to receive a sum of money, the proceeds of some goods sold for one of the defendants. It had been agreed between the parties, that as soon as he had received these moneys he should pay himself out of them the debt which was the subject of the present action, and that his authority to do so should be considered payment. The third plea was payment, and the simple question was, whether, under that plea, the agreement could be given in evidence.

By the COURT.—Whatever parties standing in the relation of debtor and creditor agree shall be treated as payment, may be admitted under the plea of payment. Rule discharged.

CLARKE, P. O. v. COLE.

A partner in two firms cannot transfer an account of one of them to the other without the consent of his partners.

Crowder, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule to enter a verdict for defendant upon the third issue.

Kinglake, contrà.

The case was tried before Cresswell, J. on the Western Circuit, at the last assizes. The action was brought by the plaintiff as registered officer of a bank, to recover the balance of a customer's account. The question was, whether an arrangement made by one Latchford, who was a partner and director in the bank, and also a director of another bank, to transfer an account of the defendant from one of the banks to the other without the consent of his partners, so as to produce a balance against the bank of the plaintiff, was binding upon the plaintiff.

By the COURT.—The rule must be discharged. One member of a partnership cannot deal with the partnership property for any purpose except those of the partnership, without their consent. The person who deals with him in such a transaction does so at the risk of its turning out that he had no such authority. It is not necessary for us to look at the merits of this case. The jury have found that "Latchford, who was the responsible agent of both firms, entered into the agreement without the knowledge of his partners." The question is, whether they were bound by that agreement. We cannot construe the words "responsible agent" to mean that he had authority to do the act in question, and if he had not, it is clear that he could not bind his partners in a transaction beyond the scope of the partnership. Even if their money had actually been paid in such a transaction, it might be recovered.

GURNEY v. WALKER.

If the plaintiff gives notice of trial for 11 A. M. when the Court regularly sits at 10, and the cause is called on at half-past 10 and struck out, he must pay costs of the day.

Wordsworth shewed cause against a rule obtained by Thomas calling upon the plaintiff to pay the defendant the costs of the day. Plaintiff had given notice of trial before the sheriff of Middlesex, to whom the case was sent by writ of trial. Notice of trial was given for 11 A. M. The Court sat in the usual way at 10, and the cause called on in its turn by the under-sheriff before 11. As no one on the part of the defendant was present, and the plaintiff would not proceed in their absence, the under-sheriff ordered the cause to be struck out. The next case occupied the time until 1 o'clock, when an application was made by both parties, stating the mistake, to have the cause restored. This was refused by the sheriff.

It was contended in shewing cause that the sheriff was wrong in striking out the cause, and also in refusing to restore it, and that the defendant ought to have applied to set aside the notice of trial if it was irregular.

By the COURT.—This rule ought to be made absolute. We find that the Court never interferes to set aside a notice of trial under such circumstances, but if the case is not tried in pursuance of it, the practice is then to inquire by whose fault that happened. The defendant had therefore no means of making such an application. He went prepared to try, and he did quite right, for in all probability, if the case had been tried at 12, and he had been absent, the Court would not have interfered to set that trial aside. The whole point turns upon whether the under-sheriff decided rightly or wrongly. If the sheriff decided rightly, then the defendant is entitled to costs, but if he were mistaken, then he is not so entitled. We think the sheriff was right, and the expenses have been incurred by a mistake of the plaintiff. Even if we thought the sheriff had not exercised his right of striking out with discretion, we could not refuse these costs on that ground. It would be a very bad precedent, and would lead to our being continually asked to review the decision of judges of Nisi Prius, upon matters which they have much better means of deciding upon than we have. Rule absolute.

WELDON v. EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY COMPANY and ANOTHER.

An affidavit of merits by one defendant will support an application to set aside a verdict against two. Semble, that the affidavit of the attorney's clerk is not sufficient without shewing him to be managing clerk.

Lush shewed cause against a rule obtained by Edwin James, to set aside an interlocutory judgment signed by the plaintiff. There was an affidavit of merits. Lush contended that the affidavit on the part of the company was insufficient. The party making it was described as clerk to the plaintiff's attorney, without saying that he was managing clerk, or that he had the management of this cause, or shewing that he knew any thing about the cause.

ROLFE, B.—Does the affidavit shew facts which would constitute a defence? because if he swears to them he must be acquainted with the merits.

Lush.—It does not; and there is no case which has gone so far as to admit the sufficiency of a person who may be a mere writing-clerk in the office, and know nothing about the case. It was an innovation when the attorney was admitted to make it instead of the defendant himself; and in one case alone the clerk of the attorney, who swore that he had the management of the cause, was admitted.

The COURT called upon

James, contrà, who stated that there was also an affidavit by the other defendant himself, which did shew facts constituting a defence for both. The Court held this sufficient.

Judgment as in case of a nonsuit—Practice.

Horn shewed cause against a rule for judgment, as in case of a nonsuit. Action by one brother against another. The reason for not trying was that the plaintiff's attorney was informed by a mutual friend that there were prospects of a settlement, and also that the father, who was the next friend of the infant plaintiff, was absent.

ALDERSON, B.—Almost any thing will do, and I think this is "almost any thing."

CARTER v. JAMES.

A plea in estoppel to an action of covenant on a mortgage-deed, shewing that the plaintiff has brought a former action on a bond given as collateral security, in which the defendant had judgment, but where the issues were not necessarily the same as those to arise in the present action, is no answer.

Demurrer to plea.

The action was covenant on a mortgage-deed.

Plea, in estoppel, that an action had been brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, upon a bond which had been given as collateral security for the same money as the mortgage, and that the issues in that action had been found against him.

To this plea the plaintiff demurred, and the question was, whether the plaintiff was estopped from bringing a fresh action upon a collateral security, in which he might raise a different issue.

Crompton, in support of the demurrer.

Willes, contrà.

By the COURT.—We do not think the plaintiff is concluded by the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, although we think that judgment was right under the circumstances of that action. It may be, and in this case it is probably the fact, that the plaintiff wishes to put in issue some matter which in the former action he was obliged, by the rules of pleading, to admit, and which was admitted for the purposes of that action only. The plea to the former action states, that there was a corrupt and usurious contract in respect of 124*l.* and that there was an agreement to give a bond for that and other debts, and the plea then averred that the bond then declared upon was given in pursuance of that agreement. Issue was taken upon the averment that the bond was given in pursuance of the agreement, and that was found for the defendant. No issue was taken upon the usurious nature of the contract. The plaintiff is at liberty to raise that issue now, and ought to have the opportunity of doing so.

GRIFFITHS v. OWEN.

It is no answer to an action for not delivering goods that the defendant gave the plaintiff an order for them upon a third party, who failed to deliver it, and that in consequence they were stolen.

Demurrer to plea.

Declaration stated that plaintiff had given to defendant certain notes, &c. for a certain purpose, which, having been accomplished, they were to be returned to defendant; and breach, that though the purpose was accomplished they were not returned.

Plea—That defendant had given the plaintiff an order for the notes upon one Brown, who had the custody of them, and that plaintiff had neglected to present it, and that afterwards they were stolen from Brown.

Demurrer.

V. Williams, in support of demurrer.

Whitehurst, contrà.

By the COURT.—This is a bad plea. In an action for money, where you may plead payment, it is quite right that you should also be allowed to plead any thing in the nature of payment which has been accepted at the time. If, by the laches of the plaintiff, it has failed to become a perfect payment, that may therefore be pleaded. But the rule is quite different in an action for not delivering goods, for though they were afterwards delivered, the action would still remain for not delivering them at the proper time. It would not have been an answer to the action even if the goods had been delivered by Brown in pursuance of the order, unless they had been accepted in accord and satisfaction, and it is not even averred here that the order was so accepted. In the case of a money-order, we know what is a reasonable time for presentment, but how should we ascertain it in a case of this sort?

When a Court of Equity directs an action, the costs are in the discretion of the Court of Law.

This is an action directed by the Master of the Rolls, and he has reserved to himself the question of costs.

The owner of the herbage may maintain trespass quare clausum fregit.

Barstow shewed cause against a rule obtained by Crowder, Q. C. to enter verdict for plaintiff, action of trespass, quare clausum fregit.

The plaintiff was only the owner of the herbage of the locus in quo. The question was, whether he was entitled to maintain the action. The Court held that he was. Rule absolute.

Doe v. Filliter.

In an action of trespass for mesne profits, a plaintiff cannot recover, as costs incurred in a previous ejectment, more than the taxed costs between party and party.

Cockburn, Q.C. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Crowder, Q.C., to enter a nonsuit.

The action was trespass for mesne profits. An action of ejectment had previously been brought, in which the plaintiff had succeeded, and this action was then brought to recover the costs of the ejectment. Before pleading in this action, the defendant had obtained an order to tax the costs of the ejectment. The order was made without prejudice to any rights that he might have to recover, in this action, more than the taxed costs. The costs were taxed between party and party, and were paid into court by defendant. At the trial of this cause, the plaintiff claimed to recover his costs as between attorney and client, or at least such parts of them as had been properly incurred.

The plaintiff had a verdict, subject to leave to move to enter a nonsuit, and this rule was afterwards obtained.

For the defendant it was now contended that the only costs which the Court would recognize as being properly incurred, were those allowed by its own officer; and that there was no distinction between the costs which a plaintiff might have judgment for in the ejectment, and those which he might recover as damages in the action for mesne profits. A jury is not the proper tribunal to decide upon the amount, and the only cases where it has been so decided have been cases of judgment against the casual ejector, where there could be no taxation.

Cockburn, contrà, contended that all expenses to which the plaintiff had actually been put by being turned out of possession ought to be given by the jury in this action. The order to tax was made without prejudice to our right to recover further costs.

Rolfe, B.—You were not to be bound in any way by having consented to that taxation. You were to be in the same situation as any one who gets an order to tax adversely made against him.

By the Court.—The Court can make no distinction between ejectment and any other action; nor between the costs recoverable in the ejectment itself and those to be given as damages in a subsequent action of mesne profits. In all cases the proper criterion is the Master's allocatur.

Morrish v. Murray.

It is no answer to an action of trespass for entering a house, that the defendant entered by virtue of a ca. sa. against a third party, who he had good reason for believing was there, unless he was there in fact. If a plaintiff does not object at the trial to the jury assessing contingent damages for him, in case the Court shall think fit to enter a verdict for him, he cannot afterwards object to the smallness of the damages, or ask for a new trial.

Cockburn and Kinglake shewed cause against a rule obtained by Crowder, to set aside the verdict, and for a new trial.

The action was for breaking and entering plaintiff's house.

Plea—That one Webb had obtained judgment and issued a testatum ca. sa. against C. F.; that a warrant thereupon had been delivered to defendant; that C. F. was living for a long space of time, to wit, six months next preceding the trespass, in the house of the plaintiff; and that the defendant had good grounds for believing, to wit, by information from Webb's attorney, that she was in the house at the time, and that he did actually believe that she was in the house.

Cresswell, J., who tried the cause, thought the plea proved by evidence of the writ and warrant, and that she had been living in the house up to within two hours of the trespass. Defendants did not give any proof whatever that they had been informed, by Webb, that she was there at the time of committing the trespass. The judge thought the plea substantially proved, notwithstanding this omission, and so directed the jury; but he said he would take their opinion as to the amount of damages. The plaintiff's counsel made no objection, and the jury accordingly assessed the damages at one farthing. Leave was then reserved to the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict for him for a farthing.

The plaintiff subsequently obtained this rule for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, or to enter a verdict.

For the defendant it was contended, that the matter proved supported as much of the plea as amounted to a good defence; but that, at all events, the plaintiff was not at liberty to move for a new trial after the reservation of the learned judge; but, as he did not object to the assessment of damages before it was made, must be taken to be bound by it.

For the plaintiff it was argued that, although if a part of a plea by itself formed a defence to the action, and that part was substantially proved, the verdict must be for so much for the defendant; yet, in this case, not only the part proved was no defence, but the whole plea was not, taken together, an answer; and on the other point, that as the plaintiff had given no consent to the arrangement, he was not bound by it.

By the Court.—It appears that the learned judge directed the jury to find for defendant upon the second issue; but at the same time he told them to assess contingent damages in the event of his turning out to be wrong.

They did assess the damages at one farthing.

We should not have been dissatisfied if the damages had been much higher; but we must take the arrangement made by the learned judge to have been made by both sides, and with their consent. With respect to entering the verdict, we think it ought to be for the plaintiff. Where the house of the party himself against whom the execution is, is entered, then the officer is justified by reasonable grounds of belief, that the party or his goods are there; but if he enters the house of a third party in the like pursuit, he does so at his peril, and nothing will justify him but success. Then the question arises whether there is to be a new trial for misdirection.

There is no doubt that the learned judge had no right to assess the damages contingently without the consent of both parties; but here it must be taken to have been done by such consent. If the jury, instead of finding one farthing damages, had found 500*l.*, the defendant would have had just the same right to complain as the plaintiff now had. At the time the learned judge took the course he did, it was quite uncertain which party would ultimately profit by it, but it was quite clear that the saving expense would be an advantage to both.

Quære, whether it is necessary, in order to get a writ of execution from a superior court on a judgment in an inferior one, that the record itself, or a transcript of it, should be returned to the certiorari.

Humfrey moved for a rule nisi to set aside the writ of fi. fa. herein, on the ground that it has improperly issued, a transcript only of the record having been removed into this court from the Sheriff's Court (to obtain execution) instead of the original record. Rule nisi.

Doe dem. Finch and Others v. Robertson.

Rule to compel the real landlord (though not a party to the record) to pay the costs of an ejectment.

Lush moved for a rule calling upon a Mr. William Challis to shew cause why he should not pay the taxed costs of the lessor of the plaintiff.

This was ejectment, brought to recover some cottages in Gibraltar-row, Southwark, and the defendant Robertson had entered into the landlord's rule. A verdict was subsequently obtained for the plaintiff, and it was then found that Robertson was only the tenant of Challis, and had, in fact, been put forward by the latter to defend the action. Rule nisi.

Cole v. Lavenne.

Although it is necessary that a testatum fi. fa. should be founded on an original fi. fa. the latter may be issued at any time, and the Court will not inquire into the time when; and where, on a motion to set aside a testatum fi. fa. on the ground of there being no fi. fa. returned to support it, a fi. fa. with the sheriff's return is produced in court, though in the hands of counsel, it will be sufficient.

Ball shewed cause against a rule obtained by Humfrey, to set aside a writ of testatum fi. fa. no original fi. fa. having been returned.

Ball now produced the original fi. fa. with a return of nulla bona indorsed by the sheriff thereon, and contended that his having the return now in court was a sufficient compliance with the practice, for that although it is never usual, in fact, to get the fi. fa. returned before the issuing of the testatum, yet, if it be produced regularly returned in court at the time when it is required in order to support the testatum, the Court will not inquire into the time when it was sued out or returned.

Humfrey, contrà, argued that, although the practice was as stated, still there was in this case no return in fact, for that the production in court of the writ, as at present, was no compliance with its exigencies, which are that it shall be returned into court, not merely indorsed by the sheriff.

WIGHTMAN, J.—As this is a merely formal objection, I think that the production of the writ now in court is sufficient, as it may be at once filed. The practice is certainly very loose upon the point. The best way will be to discharge the rule without costs.

Rule discharged without costs.

Habeas corpus to discharge a party out of custody for defects in a conviction under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34 (the Master and Servants Act).

Whitehurst moved for a habeas corpus to bring up the applicant, in order to his being discharged. He had been committed under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, s. 3 (the Master and Servants Act), and it was now contended the warrant of commitment and conviction, which were one document, were bad:

1st Because it did not appear on the face of the conviction that the justices making it had authority, it not appearing where the contract was made, or where the applicant was found or employed. (Johnson v. Reed, 6 M. & W. 194.)

2nd. Because it did not shew that the master was examined on oath in the presence of the applicant.

3rd. Because it stated that the offence of the servant was that of taking his master's corn and giving it to his master's horses, which, if any misconduct at all, was a felony, and not the subject of a summary conviction.

4th. Because it stated that the servant had committed divers misdemeanors, not specifying them;

And for other objections. Rule granted.

Motion, calling upon the attorney of a prosecutor to pay the defendant's costs of the day, pursuant to an arrangement.

Horn moved for a rule calling upon a Mr. John Hayward, an attorney, to shew cause why he should not pay a sum of 86*l.* 9s. 6d. under the following circumstances. At the last Maidstone assizes an indictment was preferred against the applicant, at the instance of the lord of the manor of Dartford (of whom Mr. Hayward was the attorney), for a nuisance, in having erected a stall in the market of Dartford (the market being the property of the lord of the manor). On this indictment being called on, it was suggested to Mr. Baron Alderson that the simple question was one of right, which was admitted to be so by the prosecution; and on the case of Rex v. Smith (4 Esp.) being cited, his lordship said that, in leaving the case to the jury, he should tell them that the only question for their consideration would be the bona fides of the defendant; for that if he erected the stall in the bonâ fide assertion of a right, he would be entitled to their verdict, since this was not the proper proceeding in which to dispute the right itself. Upon hearing this opinion of his lordship, the prosecutor's attorney, Mr. Hayward (the prosecutor not being present) agreed to the postponement of the trial, at the same time undertaking to remove the indictment by certiorari, or otherwise to deal with it, and to pay the defendant the costs of the day, to be taxed by Mr. Straight, the clerk of arraigns. A minute to that effect was entered in the book of the clerk of the arraigns, and was signed by the judge, the prosecutor's attorney having consented to it. Several appointments were afterwards made for taxation, but not attended by Mr. Hayward; whereupon the costs were ultimately taxed ex parte, at 86*l.* 9s. 6d. These costs not having been paid, it was sought to make Mr. Hayward personally responsible for them; he having a remedy over against his own client. (Iveson v. Conington, 1 B. & C. 160.)

Ex parte THE SKINNERS' COMPANY.

Mandamus to compel the payment of an annual sum awarded for land taken to by a public body.

Henderson moved for a mandamus to be directed to the directors of the poor of St. Pancras, commanding them to pay over a sum of money, being the annual compensation of 5*l.* 15s. due to the Skinners' Company, in lieu of lands belonging to them, and taken to, in the forming of the New Road. The facts of this case were similar to those detailed in the case of Reg. v. The Directors of the Poor of the Parish of St. Pancras, ex parte Lord Somers (1 Law T. 313). A similar application on behalf of the Skinners' Company had been made some terms since, which ultimately failed in consequence of the mandamus having been directed to the wrong parties. (See 1 Law T. 151.) Under all the circumstances, it was suggested that the rule should be absolute in the first instance, as the objection to the payment could well be made on the return. Rule absolute.

DOE dem. STRATFORD v. SHAIL.

A writ of restitution may issue to restore possession of land, although the title shall not have been determined.

J. C. Symons, shewed cause why a writ of restitution should not issue to restore possession of four cottages at Weston, Berks, to the defendant, of which the lessor of the plaintiff, who was a poor man, became possessed in the following manner:—Early in December last he brought ejectment as devisee in fee under the will of one John Ayers: he subsequently signed judgment for want of a plea, and took out the usual writ of possession. On the 12th of February this judgment was set aside on affidavit shewing that no notice of the declaration had been given by his tenants to the defendant, and the rule ordered that possession should be restored if the defendant succeeded in the action, or if the lessor of the plaintiff failed to go to trial at the next Abingdon assizes. He did not appear at the trial, and was nonsuited. He stated in his affidavit that he was alone prevented from doing so by the misconduct of his attorney, who purposely misled him as to the day of trial, being in collusion with the defendant. Under these circumstances, Symons argued that the Court had no power to award a writ of restitution at all; that this writ issued alone upon a judgment reversed on error, or upon some state of facts which had clearly determined that the title was in the party in whose favour restitution was sought. That was not so in this case; and justice would be done by discharging this rule, when after the next assizes, if the lessor of the plaintiff failed to establish his title, it would be time enough to take out a writ of possession. The lessor of the plaintiff was not in disobedience to the order of the Court already made, for it was directed to no one party, and the spirit and intent of it was, that possession should be restored only upon the decision of the merits of the action.

Cases cited: 2 Lilley's Pract. Reg. 273; Doe dem. Ingram v. Roe (11 Price, 507); 2 Salkeld, 588; Doe dem. Williams v. Williams (2 Ad. & Ell. 381); Doe dem. Lord v. Stevens (2 Nev. & Per. 604, per Coleridge, J.); Doe dem. Pitcher v. Rae (9 Dowl. 971); Barnes' Notes, 178.

Selfe, contrà, argued that the parties were bound to obey the rule, whereby the judgment obtained had been set aside; and that there could be no reason why a writ of restitution should not issue in such a case. None of the cases cited shewed that this writ was inapplicable, and neither an attachment nor an order to give possession would suffice against a poor man. [He was stopped by the Court.]

COLERIDGE, J.—The rule must be made absolute. The plaintiff has failed to conform to the terms of the rule upon which he had conditional possession. I think that at the time the judgment, which had been signed against him, and which was an irregular judgment, was set aside, a writ of restitution might have been then issued. It was not, but the plaintiff was allowed to remain in possession on certain terms, which he has not fulfilled.

Rule absolute without costs.

FERGUSON v. CLAYWORTH and WIFE.

Application, in an action against husband and wife, to discharge the latter out of custody, on the ground of her having no separate means whereby to satisfy the judgment.

Watson, Q.C. moved for a rule, calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the female defendant in this case should not be discharged out of custody. The action had been brought against husband and wife for defamatory words spoken by the latter, when a verdict was given for the plaintiff, with 40s. damages. The costs had been taxed at 62*l.* 10s. for which amount, together with the damages, she had been taken in execution.

This application was made on the affidavit of the wife, who swore that she depended solely for support on her son; that she was not possessed, nor had any expectation of any property (except her wearing apparel), whereby to satisfy the execution, and that she believed she was arrested by the collusion of her husband and the plaintiff. Rule nisi.

TAYLOR v. POWELL.

Motion to enter a suggestion on the roll, under Court of Requests Act, to deprive plaintiff of costs.—What is not a sufficient occupation or using of a lodging to satisfy the requisites of an Act of Parliament, which points out certain parties who may keep or use any lodging as within its operation.

Mellor shewed cause against a rule obtained by Whitehurst, calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why a suggestion should not be entered on the issue-roll to deprive him of costs, as the defendant was liable to be summoned before the Commissioners of the Birmingham Court of Requests. The Act of Parliament constituting the Court of Requests is the 47 Geo. 3, c. 14 (local), the 12th section of which pointed out the parties liable to be sued; namely, "any person or persons whomsoever inhabiting, residing, or being within the said town or parish of Birmingham and hamlet of Deritend, or keeping or using any house, counting-house, wharf, quay, lodging, shop, shed, stall or stand, or using or frequenting the markets there, or working or seeking a livelihood, or in any way trading or dealing with the same." The Act extended to 5*l.* The action was brought in this court and was tried before the undersheriff of Warwickshire, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff, with 3*l.* 14s. damages. It was now contended on the part of the plaintiff, that the facts as disclosed by the affidavits on both sides did not bring the defendant within the provisions of the Act. It appeared that the defendant, prior to September last, had been a bailiff in the Hundred Court of Birmingham, but at that time sold his office and went with his family and resided at Dudley, ten miles from Birmingham, and out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Requests, where he was employed as the clerk to an attorney. According to his own affidavit, he had a room in Livery-street, Birmingham, for which he paid 8s. a month, and had slept there once or twice a week for the last six months. These statements were corroborated by other deponents, one of whom, Bunn by name, swore to his having taken the lodging of him, and others also deposed to their having seen him there and his having frequented the Birmingham markets. In answer to these, affidavits were sworn by old inhabitants of Livery-street, who stated that although they had made inquiries they could not find any such persons as Bunn or Powell in that street (the number of the house was not given in the defendant's affidavit). Other deponents swore that the defendant was a clerk to an attorney at Dudley; that they had frequently corresponded with him, and had always addressed their letters to him there, and had always received them from there; that he is assessed to the rates at Dudley, where his wife and family reside. The action was commenced in this year.

Mellor, for the plaintiff, contended upon this that the defendant could not be said to be inhabiting or residing within Birmingham, or using any lodging, or frequenting the markets, or seeking his livelihood in the terms of the Act. (Stevens v. ——, 16 East, 147; Jenks v. Taylor, 1 M. & W. 579; Double v. Gibbs, 1 Dowl.)

Whitehurst, contrà, submitted that the defendant's occupying a lodging in the way stated in this affidavit was sufficient to bring him within the Act.

WIGHTMAN, J.—It is not because a man may have an obscure lodging for some particular purpose unconnected with business that he is to be considered as residing in a lodging; he may live in London and yet rent a room at Birmingham at 1s. a week. The Act must have a reasonable construction, and, taking all the circumstances into consideration, I think the defendant has not brought himself within the meaning of the Act. Rule discharged.

Ex parte WILLIAM SHELDON.

Habeas corpus to discharge party out of custody for defects in the warrant of commitment.

Clarkson moved for a habeas corpus to bring up the applicant now in custody in the house of correction for the west riding of Yorkshire, with the view of his being discharged. The applicant had been committed under the 6 Geo. 3, c. 25, s. 24 (the old Master and Servants Act), for absenting himself from his service, he being a collier. It was objected that the warrant of commitment was bad, because—

1st, It did not shew that the applicant contracted with the complainant, but merely that he contracted to work for him.

2nd, It did not state who was the complainant's co-partner.

3rd, It does not appear from what time the imprisonment is to commence. Rule granted.

REG. v. THE CAPITAL BURGESSES OF THE BOROUGH OF TREGONY.

Mandamus to the capital burgesses of Tregony to elect a mayor.

Smirke moved for a mandamus to the capital burgesses of Tregony, in Cornwall, commanding them to proceed to the election of a mayor.

This borough is not within the provisions of the Municipal Corporation Act, and it appeared that the corporation, which was constituted by a charter of the 19th James 1st, consists of a mayor and eight capital burgesses, which latter elect the former by a majority of votes. On the 21st of April last the mayor died, whereupon the senior capital burgess, according to established custom, issued his summons to the other capital burgesses to attend and elect a new mayor. On the day appointed only one capital burgess besides himself attended, whereby no election was had, and no new mayor has hitherto been elected. The mayor is, ex-officio, a justice of the peace, and the borough has corporate property, of which he is the guardian wherefore it becomes highly necessary that this officer should be elected.

Ex parte LEWIS.

Where an attorney to whom an articled clerk has been assigned dies intestate and there is no administrator, the Court will grant a rule, with the view of enabling the clerk to assign himself to another attorney for the remainder of his term.

Merewether applied to the Court on behalf of this gentleman under the following circumstances. On the 23rd May, 1839, the applicant was articled to Mr. Chilton to serve him as clerk for five years: he continued with this gentleman until the 18th February, 1843, when he was assigned to Mr. Jones of Carmarthen, who had a partner of the name of Morris. Early in May last (and before the five years had expired) Mr. Jones died intestate, leaving a widow, who has not administered, nor does she or any one else intend to administer. Since Mr. Jones's death the applicant has remained with Mr. Morris. It was under these circumstances suggested, that as there is no one who can assign the applicant, that he should either be at once admitted, or be at liberty (being of age) to assign himself.

Williams, J.—It is impossible to admit him at present, as his service has been incomplete. Will Mr. Morris take him?

Merewether.—That does not appear; he has remained with him since the death of Mr. Jones.

Williams, J.—You may have a rule calling upon the widow to shew cause why he should assign himself to Mr. Morris or any other attorney for the residue of his term. Rule nisi.

Anderson v. Harrison.

Motion to set aside judgment on a warrant of attorney on the ground of its having been entered up in vacation and not in Term.

Where a defect in proceedings exists and is known to a party, and he takes a step which enables him to take advantage of this defect, but he omits to do so, he will not afterwards be permitted to avail himself of it.

James shewed cause against a rule obtained by Lush to set aside the judgment and execution on the warrant of attorney herein, and to discharge the defendant out of custody, on the ground that the judgment had been signed in vacation when the warrant of attorney only authorized its being done in Term. It appeared that the warrant of attorney was given to secure the annual payments of an annuity, and it empowered the attorneys to whom it was directed to enter an appearance, receive a declaration, and confess judgment "as of this present Easter Term, next Trinity Term, or any other subsequent Term." Judgment was entered up on the 7th December 1841 (Michaelmas vacation), but execution did not issue for any arrears until May last. In Hilary Term 1842, a rule nisi was obtained calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the annuity should not be set aside, and why the warrant of attorney given to secure the same, and the judgment entered thereon, and all subsequent proceedings, should not also be set aside, and the annuity-deed be delivered up to be cancelled, on the ground that the memorial did not correctly and sufficiently describe the consideration for the said annuity, &c. This rule was discharged with costs.

In opposition to this motion it was now contended, on the authority of Bate v. Lawrence (3 Law T. 103), that the objection amounted only to an irregularity, which was waived by the defendant in not taking advantage of it earlier; independently of which, he could have relied upon this objection when the case was before the Court by the rule in Hilary Term, 1842, and that, not having done so, he could not now raise it.

Lush, contrà, endeavoured to distinguish this case from Bate v. Lawrence, and argued that this judgment was a nullity, and not an irregularity; and that in the case of a prisoner no time would run against him (Cobbold v. Chilver, 4 Scott, N.R. 678: Raymont v. Smith, 3 Dowl. N.S. 166): that the former rule was founded upon different grounds from the present, and was obtained for a different purpose.

Williams, J. said, that although he agreed that in general, time would not bar a prisoner from taking an objection, yet he thought that this case stood upon peculiar grounds; and that it was a well-established rule, that if a party comes to the Court to seek for relief, he must bring before it all the facts of the case which were within his knowledge at the time: and although the former rule was obtained with the view of getting rid of the annuity, still the defendant raised the question as to the warrant of attorney, and at that time the imperfection now relied upon existed in fact, and therefore it either was or was not brought before the Court; if not, the defendant did not avail himself of all the materials as he ought to have done; when, therefore, he saw that the judgment was in effect affirmed at that time, he must consider that the Court had complete knowledge, and did validate the proceedings. Therefore, as he found the judgment had been before the Court, and had been sustained by them, he ought not to set aside the proceedings. Rule discharged with costs.

Reg. v. Crouch.

Indictment for murder.

Where a plea of insanity is set up, the prisoner's counsel has no right in his address to the jury to quote the opinions of medical men as given in their works.

The prisoner was indicted for the wilful murder of his wife, and the defence set up was that of insanity.

Clarkson, for the prisoner, in his address to the jury, attempted to quote from a work entitled "Cooper's Surgery," the author's opinions on the subject.

Alderson, B. thought that he was not justified in doing so.

Clarkson.—I quote it, my lord, as embodying the sentiments of one who has studied the subject, and submit that it is admissible in the same way as opinions of scientific men on matters appertaining to foreign law may be given in evidence.

ALDERSON, B.—I should not allow you to read a work on foreign law. Any person who was properly conversant with it might be examined, but then he adds his own personal knowledge and experience to the information which he may have derived from books. We must have the evidence of individuals, not their written opinions. We should be inundated with books if we were to hold otherwise.

Clarkson.—I shall prove the book to be one of high authority.

ALDERSON, B.—But can that mend the matter? You surely cannot contend that you may give the books in evidence, and if not, what right have you to quote from it in your address, and do that indirectly which you would not be permitted to do in the ordinary course?

Clarkson.—It was certainly done, my lord, in M'Naghten's case.

ALDERSON, B.—And that shews still more strongly the necessity for a stringent adherence to the rules laid down for our observance. But for the non-interposition of the judge in that case, you would not probably have thought it necessary to make this struggle now.

MUNSTER CIRCUIT.
CORK COUNTY ASSISES.

Wednesday, March 27.

(Before Lord Chief Baron BRADY.)

REG. v. MICHAEL GARVEY.

An indictment for perjury, charged that one M. G. came before the justices, &c. on the 11th March, 1844, in the 7th year of our Lady Queen Victoria, and falsely &c. upon his oath did say that, at or about 10 or 11 o'clock on the morning of Thursday last, meaning the 7th day of March, in the year 1804, he, meaning himself, the said M. G. met the said G. C. &c. &c. "Whereas in truth and fact the said M. G. did not at &c. on the morning of Thursday, the 7th day of March, 1844, meet the said G. C.: Held, that the prisoner could not be convicted, and that neither could the date in the innuendo be altered upon the record to 1844, in conformity with the prisoner's information under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 15, nor could the passage in which it occurred be struck out as surplusage.

In this case the prisoner was given in charge upon an indictment for perjury committed in an information upon oath, which he had made before two magistrates, charging a Mr. George Crofts with having committed an assault upon him. The indictment was in the following terms:—

"The jurors, &c. say, that Michael Garvey wickedly and maliciously contriving and intending to aggrieve one George Crofts, the younger, and him, the said George Crofts, to subject to the pains and penalties by the laws of this realm provided for persons guilty of assaults and trespasses, on the 11th day of March, in the 7th year of our Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria, at Doneraile, in the county of Cork, aforesaid, came before George W. B. Creagh and G. Nagle, esqrs. then and yet being two justices of our said Lady the Queen," &c. After setting out the administration of the oath, the indictment then proceeded to charge, "that the said Michael Garvey, being so sworn upon a certain information or examination in writing, intituled, 'County of Cork; the examination of Michael Garvey, of Two-pot House, parish of Cahirduggan, barony of Fermoy, in said county, blacksmith, taken in petty sessions in Doneraile, on Monday, the 11th of March, 1844,' falsely &c. upon his oath aforesaid, did say, depose, and swear, and give information, amongst other things, in substance and to the effect following, that is to say, that at about ten or eleven o'clock on the morning of Thursday last, the 7th day of March, he meaning the 7th day of March, in the year 1804, he, meaning himself, the said Michael Garvey, met the said George Crofts the younger; the indictment then set out the information made by the prisoner, stating that [illegible] by George Crofts the younger, and Christopher Crofts, and that they were both inside a ditch, when, to the best of his belief, Christopher Crofts stooped for a stone, which he flung at him, and with which he was struck on the left shoulder, and that George Crofts used abusive language to him, the said Michael, and proceeded as follows:—'Whereas, in truth and fact, the said Michael Garvey, at the time he, the said M. G. took his said oath and made the examination as aforesaid, did not about ten or eleven o'clock on the morning of Thursday, the 7th day of March, 1844, meet the said George Crofts the younger,' &c. &c.; 'and whereas, in truth and fact, the said George Crofts was not then or at all on said day inside a ditch,' &c.; 'and whereas, &c. he, the said G. C. did not on that day or any other day, use abusive language to the said M. G.;' and so the jurors, &c. do say and present that the said M. G. on the 11th day of March last, &c. did commit wilful and corrupt perjury, &c."

Coppinger, for the prisoner, contended that this indictment could not be sustained, for it did not negative the truth of the allegation upon which perjury had been assigned, but merely stated that the prisoner deposed "that on or about ten or eleven o'clock on the morning of Thursday last, the 7th day of March, meaning the 7th day of March, 1804, he met the said George Crofts, the younger," &c.; "whereas in truth and fact, the said Michael Garvey, &c. did not about ten or eleven o'clock on the morning of Thursday, the 7th day of March, 1844, meet the said George Crofts the younger," &c.

Scannell, for the prosecution, proposed, under the statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 15, to amend the record by the original information, and also contended that the allegation that the information was sworn in the seventh year of the Queen, would be sufficient if the word 1804 were altogether omitted.

BRADY, C.B.—Perhaps it would.

Coppinger.—Even so the indictment is bad, for it does not appear that the perjury was committed in a matter material; it does not appear from the indictment that there was any cause depending.

Scannell.—Such an allegation is not necessary, for there was no cause depending until the information which is the subject of the perjury was made; this indictment is similar to the form given in Archbold's Criminal Law. The mistake is a mere clerical error.

BRADY, C.B.—The question is, cannot the words be rejected as surplusage?

Coppinger.—Would this be perjury if the prisoner met the parties on the 7th day of March, 1804 or 5, or any other day? The pleading must be construed most strongly against the pleader. He says, "meaning the 7th day of March, 1804." Now if this were an indictment for murder, and the blows were said to be given in 1802, with an averment that the death did not take place till 1844, the man really dying in two years after the injury, could it be contended that the indictment would be good?

BRADY, C.B.—If I could consider the 11th day of March an immaterial date, the indictment might be sustained; but the averment is, that on the 11th day of March the prisoner came before the justices, and that is quite material; I could have rejected the word 1804 as surplusage, if you had not assigned the particular day on which the perjury was committed.

His Lordship then directed an acquittal.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

SINCE last we wrote, though before our last publication, Parliament has been giving its attention to the subject of Appeal in Criminal cases, which was introduced by Mr. KELLY, in a speech of great ability. His Bill was permitted to be read a first time, but Sir JAMES GRAHAM, on behalf of the Government, not only gave no promise of support, but indicated an inclination to oppose it. The general opinion of the House, however, appeared to be decidedly in its favour, and we trust that such will be found to be the opinion of the country. The Ecclesiastical Courts Bill just got into committee, but it proceeded no further than the first clause. A host of amendments were moved, and the House treated the measure with the contempt it deserves, receiving every speech with shouts of laughter; thus exhibiting the consciousness felt by honourable members of the absurdity and folly of the entire scheme. The discussion is adjourned sine die; and as there are a multitude of clauses yet to be considered, and very few nights to do it in, there is really some hope of the country being spared the infliction of this contemptible effort of legislation—this change without reform. Of the County Courts Bill nothing is heard—that, we presume, is to be permitted again to perish in its very inception; and we hope the reprieve will be well employed by the Profession to procure the substitution of a better measure in the reconstruction of the Quarter Sessions Courts.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY BILL.

TUESDAY, June 4.—Lord CAMPBELL said, as their lordships did not seem to be much overburdened with business [a laugh], he would take the opportunity of putting a question to his noble and learned friend on the woolsack, with reference to the Bill for the transfer of freehold property. The noble and learned lord introduced a Bill on the subject in the early part of the session, which was certainly a step in the right direction, but for which he (Lord Campbell) would have introduced his Bill on the subject again; but as no further progress had been made with it, he should like to know what the noble and learned lord's intentions on the subject were. It was a subject of considerable importance; for one of the great defects of our law was the expense of the conveyance of freehold property. So enormous was that expense, that the cost of the conveyance of a small freehold was greater than the price of the fee simple. To remedy this evil, it was important that some measure should be adopted without delay; he should therefore be glad to know if the noble and learned lord meant to resuscitate his Bill or not.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said that he was very glad he had given his noble and learned friend an opportunity of amusing their lordships [a laugh]. The measure which he had alluded to was certainly one of great importance, but it was of a very complicated nature, and he (the Lord Chancellor) felt it to be his duty, after having laid the Bill on their lordships' table, to circulate copies of it amongst some of the most eminent conveyancers in the metropolis, many of whom had returned answers, but there were still six or seven of them who had not done so. If his noble and learned friend had condescended to have given him notice of his motion, he would have communicated with those gentlemen who had not yet returned their answers. It was certainly his intention, when he had obtained the opinions of these gentlemen, to proceed with the Bill. It was suggested to him by a noble friend near him, that the delay in obtaining the answers of the gentlemen to whom he had alluded might be occasioned by no fee having been put on the bills sent to them [laughter]. He was obliged to admit that no fee was marked upon them [continued laughter].—Lord CAMPBELL said that the opinion of a lawyer without a fee was not good for anything [renewed laughter].

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS BILL.

FRIDAY, MAY 31.—Mr. T. S. DUNCOMBE, in a speech in which he kept the House in intermitting fits of laughter, by the telling manner in which he adduced and recited his instances of the anomalous, vexatious, expensive, and absurd nature of the jurisdiction exercised by the ecclesiastical courts—in illustration of which he referred to the Bishop of Exeter's Promotion of Continence Bill now before the House of Lords, as evidence that these courts were utterly incompetent—moved, "That it be an instruction to the committee to abolish all ecclesiastical courts, and to transfer the jurisdiction of those courts to civil tribunals."—Mr. HUME seconded the motion, expressing his regret that the recommendations of the ecclesiastical commission had not been carried into effect at the time they were made, now thirteen years ago.—Dr. NICHOLL rose to defend the retention of the ecclesiastical courts in the modified form proposed by the Bill before the House; but honourable members, whose thirst for piquancy kept them on the stretch while Mr. T. S. Duncombe was speaking, relapsed into a humming, buzzing state of private conversation, which rendered the learned doctor difficult to follow. He defended the Bill on the grounds so frequently urged, and with which the public are, or at least ought to be, very familiar, from their frequent recapitulation; and contradicted a current rumour that he had any personal interest in the passing of the Bill.—Sir GEORGE GREY, looking to the different recommendations both of the ecclesiastical commission, and the real property commission, proposing the abolition of the criminal jurisdiction and the church-rate jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Court, and throwing them open to the general legal profession, and seeing that, by the present Bill, these courts were not to be reformed, but reconstructed and perpetuated, would vote for the amendment.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL pleaded on behalf of the testamentary and other jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, and thought that Sir George Grey, instead of voting for the abolition of these courts, should endeavour to amend the Bill in committee.

On a division, there appeared—

For the amendment 70
Against it.......................... 115
Majority ....——45

Mr. BORTHWICK, who had a notice of an amendment that the House go into committee on the Bill that day six months (his object being, not to abolish the ecclesiastical courts, but to defeat the Bill), complained, that the previous discussion had, as if it had been concerted between the Government and the Opposition, put him in the awkward position of being unable, according to the rules of the House, to take its "sense" on his proposition. The ecclesiastical courts required reform; but the Bill did not effect the reform they required. These institutions were founded in other and better days, for purposes not so congenial or so urgent in these more modern and more revolutionary times. The Bill brought in by Government last year was defeated by "the sons of Zeruiah," allegorically signifying the country proctors; and the present Bill was brought in without lawful authority, not having been sanctioned by the clergy in Convocation assembled, the final court of appeal in such a case as this, and which was not non-existent, but only in abeyance. The strong Conservative Government, with its giant strength, was afraid to act on principle, which would lead them either to renovate or to destroy altogether, being afraid to meet the "sons of Zeruiah" on the hustings. Clergymen were not permitted to sit in the House, because they were supposed to sit in Convocation; and as the constitution of England was ecclesiastico-politico, they ought to act on principle, and get the sanction of the Church, in due form, not to a piece-meal, expedient measure, but to a well-digested reform of the ecclesiastical courts.—Another division took place, on the question that the SPEAKER leave the chair, when Mr. BORTHWICK was defeated by 62 to 25. The House then went into committee on the Bill; and on the first clause, Sir GEORGE GREY moved an amendment, to effect the object of which he had given notice, that of abolishing the criminal jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts.—Dr. NICHOLL was willing to abolish the whole vexatious jurisdiction of the courts, inflicting civil disabilities, and so forth, but he thought that, for the sake of decorum during divine service, and of church discipline, it was desirable to retain so much of it as would restrain brawling in churches, and maintain the power of ecclesiastical admonition.—Mr. JERVIS remarked, that disturbance of public worship was an offence punishable by the common law, without the vexation and expense of a citation before the ecclesiastical courts; and there was no similar example, in any other communion of Christians, of the judicial power in church discipline which the Bill still preserved.—Sir JAMES GRAHAM replied that the Established Church of Scotland had a very stringent power of church discipline in cases of breaches of morality.—After some conversation, Dr. NICHOLL wished to reserve the matter, in order to ascertain how far the abrogation of jurisdiction in church discipline would affect the interests of the church.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL expressed his surprise at this, seeing that a report lay on the table of the House, made as far back as 1832, and signed by the ecclesiastical commissioners, recommending the very abolition in question.—Mr. GLADSTONE said they only knew the present opinion of the heads of the Church, by their sanction given to the present measure in the House of Lords. The question was a difficult one. No Christian communion could exist as such without the power of repelling unworthy members from participating in sacred rites, and the power which the Bill proposed to leave with the Church seemed to him a reasonable one.—On a division, the amendment proposed by Sir GEORGE GREY was rejectedby 62 to 44.—Sir GEORGE GREY renewed his effort to get rid of the criminal jurisdiction, by proposing an amendment abolishing the power to take ecclesiastical cognizance of "brawling in churches," handing over the offence to the exclusive cognizance of the common law. This was urged and resisted by similar arguments as before—Mr. WATSON ridiculing the idea of carrying an offender out of the ordinary jurisdiction of the law into the cobwebs and absurdities of Doctors' Commons; and Mr. ROEBUCK repudiating any interference with the "care of his soul's health," which he could take care of for himself, and affirming that excommunication meant costs, and costs signified money.—Mr. ESCOTT also asked why, if there were a remedy for offences in consecrated ground by the common law, there should be any cumulative jurisdiction?—The SOLICITOR GENERAL adduced the case of an individual scandalising a congregation, by sitting in church with his hat on, as an instance which an indictment could not reach, but could be brought under the cognizance of the Ecclesiastical Court.—Dr. BOWRING asked if the bill were intended for the punishment of people who might keep on their hats in churches?—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL did not think the question deserved an answer; a man who would keep his hat on in church should not go there.—Colonel SIBTHORP would turn him out; but Dr. BOWRING adduced the case of a quaker, as an individual who might consider himself conscientiously warranted in keeping on his hat in church.—The amendment was rejected by 109 to 61.—Sir GEORGE GREY next proposed that the jurisdiction as to church-rates should be abolished altogether.—Dr. NICHOLL could not accede to this amendment. There was no other tribunal except the Ecclesiastical Court to decide on the vadidity of a church-rate, and other questions relating to it, and he could not consent to a change until a better tribunal was provided.—On this there was another division, when this amendment was rejected by 107 to 66.—Mr. CHARLES BULLER next addressed the committee, pointing out the inconveniences arising from the testamentary jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, which he proposed, by an amendment, should be entirely transferred to the courts of common law and equity, as recommended by the real property commissioners. Dr. NICHOLL replied, urging the satisfaction given to suitors by a jurisdiction, with a bar, devoted to testamentary subjects, and that no advantage would be derived to counterbalance the inconvenience of interfering with the interests which would suffer by the change.—After a debate, the amendment was carried to a division, when it was rejected by 121 to 58.—The first clause of the Bill not having been got entirely through, it was moved that the Chairman should report progress; but Sir ROBERT PEEL entreated that they might be allowed to conclude the night with the carrying of one clause. This, however, was not responded to, and a division took place, when the adjournment was opposed by 88 to 45. The result of the delay was, however, that the Chairman did report progress, and the House disposed of its other business.

FEES TO CLERKS OF THE PEACE, &c.

TUESDAY, June 4.—Mr. SCOTT gave notice that he should, on this day week, bring forward a motion on the subject of the fees demanded and taken by the clerks of the peace, and clerks of assize, on the acquittal of prisoners.

FEES TO MAGISTRATES' CLERKS.

WEDNESDAY, June 5.—Lord WORSLEY wished to know from the right honourable baronet when the Bill would be introduced by the Government for regulating the fees to magistrates' clerks.—Sir J. GRAHAM replied that the measure was in course of preparation, but it was now, he feared, too late to introduce it, with any hope of its passing into a law during the present session.

COUNTY CORONERS BILL.

The House then went into a committee on this Bill. The various clauses were agreed to. To be reported on Wednesday next.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE BILL.

Mr. ELPHINSTONE said, that it was not his intention to proceed with this Bill during the present session, and proposed that the order of the day with regard to it be discharged.

DISSENTERS' CHAPELS BILL.

THURSDAY, June 6.—The second reading of this bill was moved by the ATTORNEY-GENERAL, who began by observing, that great numbers of the petitions presented against the bill were founded upon misapprehension. There was nothing in it to affect injuriously the property of the Wesleyan Methodists, and the church had no interest at all in the subject-matter. The necessity of the bill was shewn by the state of the Hewley charity cause. The House of Lords had decided that neither the Unitarians nor the church had any claim to any part of Lady Hewley's endowment; but they had not decided who had such claim; and now the Presbyterians and Independents were consuming the funds in a litigation between themselves. The spirit of the Legislature had tended, in late years, to as complete a toleration of the Unitarians as of any other Dissenters; and the present bill, conceived in the same temper, came now to the House of Commons with the general consent of all the legal authorities in the House of Lords. Before the Toleration Act, any gift of foundation, for whatever class of Dissenters, would have been illegal. The Toleration Act itself excluded from its benefits the Roman Catholics and Protestants who were not Trinitarian. To relieve these two classes of Dissenters enactments were from time to time introduced into the Legislature. The proposition against which the present Bill directed itself was, that where no particular sect was designated by the founder, the founder should be deemed to have intended the charity for the sect he himself belonged to. But this Bill, while it combated that proposition, would not interfere with any case where the foundation-deed designated any particular sect. It was a mistake, therefore, to treat this as a Bill enabling trustees to violate their trusts. The trustees of a foundation chapel had generally no power over the doctrine to be taught there; that was regulated by the congregation, who appointed, who paid, and who could remove the minister. In the cases now in question, the congregations, for the last fifty years, had been chiefly Unitarian; these Unitarians had borne all the expenses; had built, rebuilt, repaired: and was it reasonable that all the existing edifices should be taken away from those who had thus, from generation to generation, maintained them, and regarded them as their own, and that strangers should be placed in possession? Lord Chief Justice Tindal had laid it down that the language of the founder was not to be construed by evidence given aliunde of the founder's religious or political opinions. It was not fitting that the highest questions of divinity should be discussed in court, and referred to the Master's office. This Bill gave weight to usage, and, as usage was allowed to have weight in all matters of private right, it was no unfit guide for interpreting the muniments of a religious foundation. But, wherever a trust for a particular faith appeared on the face of the deeds, there the usage would have no place, and the present Bill no application.—Sir R. INGLIS denied that the Church of England was unconcerned in this question: that church, he must contend, had a strong interest in the principles which the Bill contravened. He concluded by moving that the Bill should be read a second time on that day six months.—Mr. PLUMPTRE seconded this amendment.—Mr. MACAULAY declared his approval of the Bill, and gave full credit to the Ministers for the purity of their motives in supporting it. The petitioners against it had proved their misunderstanding of it by treating what was really a question of property as if it were a question of divinity. The main principle of this Bill was that which its second clause set forth—that prescription was to be proof of title. He maintained the validity of that principle, and appealed to its prevalence in all ages and in all countries.—Mr. M. MILNES felt himself compelled, notwithstanding the adverse impressions of his own constituents, to support the present Bill. When the Dissenters in general should understand that they were as much interested in it as the Unitarians themselves, and that the question involved the great principles of civil liberty, he trusted that their opposition, or at least the tone of it, would be mitigated.—Mr. F. MAULE opposed the measure, as a tampering with law which might form a dangerous precedent.—Mr. GLADSTONE treated this as a great question of justice; and declared that, in his opinion, it was a duty incumbent upon the House to pass this Bill, which he believed was opposed, not so much from theological animosity as from misapprehension. So far from thinking the Christian feelings of the people insulted by the Bill, he conceived that Christian feeling required this act of justice.—Mr. SHEIL declared that the Roman Catholic body, to a man, were favourable to this Bill. The object of it was to establish toleration—to quiet possession; it was a spiritual act of settlement, much needed in Ireland. If this Bill did not pass, hundreds of clergymen and their families would be reduced to misery. There was now a cry against Unitarians, as formerly against Papists, and therefore this Bill was unpopular; but it was a mistake to suppose that this Bill was made for them alone; it was applicable to a 25 years' possession of whatever sect. He was surprised that the Presbyterians, who asked so much liberty for themselves, should extend so little toleration to others.—Sir R. PEEL said, that notwithstanding a preponderance of argument on one side unexampled in his Parliamentary experience, he was desirous to state the grounds upon which he and his colleagues had determined to give their most persevering support to this Bill. Its prospects were now much brighter than when that support had first been resolved on by them. When the foundation-deeds were express, this Bill did not propose to disturb the intention of the founder, but when the words were merely "for Protestant Dissenters of the Protestant denomination," it was too much to say that a specific trust existed. The precise object was probably omitted by the Unitarian founders on purpose; because until very modern times their faith was not recognized by law. In the town he himself represented there was a bequest of a Unitarian's daughter to a Unitarian chapel, not legal, because given before the Act of 1813. There was now religious harmony in that town; but how if a speculative attorney were let in upon this little endowment. The decision in Lady Hewley's case had brought litigation upon places always peaceable before; and not even for the purpose of benefiting the Church of England. The Unitarians of Ireland had been willing that the case of the English Unitarians should be taken before their own—content that their own should wait; but the Government thought this unjust, and resolved to include both cases in one Bill; and this Bill they had not adopted until every attempt at private and voluntary arrangement had failed.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL thought it unnecessary to add to the argument, which was already of an overwhelming weight; but he could not refrain from giving his testimony to the merits of the Bill and to the motives of the Government.—Lord SANDON said a few words amid a general cry for the division, which took place as follows:—

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

PAUPER LUNATICS.—Mr. Henry M. Sutton, the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, has just laid upon the table of the House of Commons a return of the number of pauper lunatics and idiots chargeable to each of the unions in England and Wales, in the month of August 1842 and 1843, respectively, with their ages, average cost of maintenance, and the population of the unions in the year 1841. From an abstract of these returns, which is prefixed to the mass of statistics therein developed, we find that in the month of August, 1842, the total number of pauper lunatics maintained in England alone amounted to 6,451, of whom 2,826 were males, and 3,625 were females; that the total number of idiots amounted to 6,261, of whom 2,977 were males, and 3,284 were females, making a grand total number of both lunatics and paupers amounting in all to 12,712. The total population of England having amounted, according to the census of 1841, to 12,978,377 souls, it follows that the proportion of lunatics, &c. to the population was on an average one-tenth per cent. Of the above mentioned unfortunate persons, 3,233 were maintained in county lunatic asylums, 2,132 in licensed houses, 3,735 in union workhouses, and 3,611 with their friends, or elsewhere. 6 were under 5 years of age, 45 between 5 and 10 years of age, 791 between 10 and 20, 2,396 between 20 and 30, 2,738 between 30 and 40, 2,830 between 40 and 50, 2,032 between 50 and 60, 1,338 between 60 and 70, and 536 about 70 years of age or upwards. 3,259 were dangerous to themselves or others, and 2,371 of dirty habits. The average weekly cost per head for their maintenance and clothing amounted, in county lunatic asylums, to 7s. 11d.; in licensed houses, to 8s. 10$\frac{3}{4}$d.; elsewhere, to 2s. 10d.; making a general average of 5s. 1$\frac{3}{4}$d. a week. In Wales the grand total number of paupers and lunatics amounted to 1,158, being also a proportion of 1-10th per cent. to the population, which amounted, by the late census, to 884,173 souls. The general average cost of their maintenance amounted to 3s. 1$\frac{1}{4}$d. per week only. The gross total number of pauper lunatics and idiots chargeable to parishes in England and Wales in 1842 (including places not estimated in unions), amounted to 15,914, the proportion to the number of paupers relieved (1,429,356) being 1 1-10th per cent. The abstract for August, 1843, shews that the grand total number of lunatics and idiots amounted in England and Wales to about 14,792 (exclusive of places not in unions), of which 7,299 were lunatics, and 7,493 were idiot; that of these 3,525 were maintained in county asylums, 2,298 in licensed houses, 4,063 in union workhouses, and 4,906 with their friends or elsewhere; that 5 were under 5 years of years of age, 52 from 5 to 10, 901 from 10 to 20, 2,879 from 20 to 30, 3,197 from 30 to 40, 3,188 from 40 to 50, 2,368 from 50 to 60, 1,566 from 60 to 70, and 636 above 70; that 3,466 were dangerous to themselves or others, and 2,642 of nasty or dirty habits. The average cost of their maintenance in both countries was, in county lunatic asylums 7s. 7d. a week; in licensed houses 8s. 11$\frac{1}{2}$d.; elsewhere 2s. 7d. making a general average amounting to 4s. 9d. per head per week.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

IT will be seen that the promised Bill for regulating the fees of Magistrates Clerks is not to be passed this session. It is not even yet prepared, and consequently ample opportunity will be afforded for its thorough investigation.

The Profession will be pleased to hear that the Chancery Compensation job is not to be permitted to pass into oblivion. Mr. WATSON will again bring it under discussion, and again ask the opinion of the House upon its merits, now they are somewhat better understood. It was asserted in the former debate that the compensations were sanctioned by Lord COTTENHAM, and such an authority silenced many. The assertion produced a prompt denial, but too late to influence the decision. The Morning Chronicle hereupon remarks:

"But how really stands the case with Lord Cottenham? The late Lord Chancellor, of course, wished to abolish so great a nuisance; he was waited upon, we believe, by a Mr. Wainwright, but from Lord John Russell's account of the transaction, had nothing on earth to do, gave no opinion—nay declined to give any opinion, on the amount of compensation. But the amount is every thing. The abolished officers were, of course, to have considerations. The question was—How much? With this Lord Cottenham had no more to do than even the late Lord Eldon. The clauses for compensation in this Bill gave this power to the Lord Chancellor. They were suddenly and at the last moment introduced; but they were introduced on the responsibility of the Government, and ought either to have remained a dead letter, or to have been prudently put into effect; but they did not remain a dead letter, and have not been prudently put into effect. On the contrary, the charge is that they have been most carelessly, wantonly, lazily, and improvidently administered. The Government does not negative this by any facts. The Home Secretary scarcely denied the unsatisfactory character of the transaction; but we are refused inquiry."

The solicitors whose fees have been curtailed to pay these monster compensations, and who are the real sufferers by the job, are deeply indebted to Mr. WATSON for the zeal and perseverance with which he has come forward in their defence.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE most prominent legal event of the past week is the postponement of the Circuits, to permit the Judges to attend the hearing of the Writ of Error, before the House of Lords, in O'Connell's case. Conflicting opinions are entertained here of the result. Some eminent lawyers are of opinion that the judgment cannot be supported; but others think differently. On the question raised before the Irish Court of Queen's Bench, as to the admission of parts of the evidence, there is less diversity in Westminster Hall, for there are few who do not consider that the Court was wrong in the admission of that evidence, and that in England a new trial would have been granted without hesitation; indeed, Blake's case appears to have settled the question. We shall procure an early report of the important points to be mooted in the Lords.

BYRON'S STATUE.

Intended action of Thorwaldsen's Executor v. The London Custom-house Authorities.

A case of an extraordinary nature, and in which the names of two of the greatest characters of the age will figure, is about to be brought before the London tribunals. Thorwaldsen, as it is well known, had executed a colossal statue of Lord Byron, which he considered as one of his best works, and presented it to the chapter of Westminster, on condition of its being placed in this cathedral, beside the monuments of other poets. The chapter, at first, accepted the offer; but, it is equally well known, that some scruples were raised afterwards against placing the author of Don Juan in this national mausoleum; and the case containing the precious marble was never claimed by the chapter. The [illegible] of Thorwaldsen being informed of this state of things, made some inquiries, and the master-piece of Thorwaldsen was found lying on the floor of a cellar in a state of extreme deterioration, amongst the fragments of the case, which the humidity of the place had reduced to a state of perfect rottenness. Consequently, a person duly authorized by the executor, addressed a formal reclamation to the authorities, but when the Custom-house officers went with him to the cellar, it was found that the statue had disappeared, and nothing but fragments of the case remained behind. The executors then addressed to the Custom-house a demand for indemnity. This, however, was refused, under the plea that it cannot be answerable for goods refused by the parties to whom they are addressed, and that such goods remain in their stores solely at the expense and risk of those to whom they belong. At this stage, in fine, the executors have resolved on bringing an action for damages against the Custom-house of London. The sum claimed is 30,000*l.* (750,000*f.*) at which the statue was valued by the artists of Rome on its being shipped to London.

PRISONERS' ATTORNEYS.

REGULATIONS AT NEWGATE GAOL.

In order to prevent frauds upon prisoners confined in her Majesty's gaol of Newgate, by unqualified persons acting as their legal advisers,

It is ordered—That no person shall hereafter be permitted to see any prisoner confined in the gaol of Newgate, as the legal adviser of such prisoner, except such person shall be a certificated attorney or solicitor, or his authorized clerk; and every person claiming admission as such attorney or solicitor, or authorized clerk, shall, for the verification thereof, before his admission to see any prisoner, sign his name, address, and the name of the prisoner by whom such attorney or solicitor is retained or employed, in a book to be kept for that purpose.

A Strange Marriage.—A singular suit was tried a few days ago before the Civil Tribunal of Pontarlier, in the Doubs, founded on the following circumstances:—A young man in 1813, fearing the conscription, could find no better means of escaping from it than by getting a wife. Time pressed, and seeing a young woman engaged in threshing corn in a barn, whom he had never seen before, he at once proposed marriage to her. "As soon with you as with any one else," was the reply. The young man got the banns published, and prepared every preliminary. All being ready, he went to his intended, and conducted her to the Mayory. On the question being put by the Mayor to her, whether she would take the man for her husband, she repeated, "As soon as anybody else." This was considered a sufficient consent, and the knot was tied. On leaving the Mayory, the husband went to carouse with his friends, and the wife returned to her barn, and resumed her threshing. From that time they have never met, nor hardly seen each other. At the end of 31 years the woman became unable to work, and in want of support. She conceived that she had claims upon him, as she would have had upon any one else, and applied to him for assistance. He refused, and she, in her turn, brought him before the magistrates, and at last before the Tribunal, which ordered him to pay her 700f. for her immediate wants, and an annuity of 150f.

The Irish State Trials.—The Standard states that Sir Thomas Wilde, Mr. Fitzroy Kelly, Q.C. and Mr. Austen, Q.C. have been retained by Mr. O'Connell, and the other traversers, to conduct their case on the writ of error in the House of Lords.

Mr. O'Connell's Appeal to the House of Lords.—It has been stated that, in consequence of a communication which has been made by the Lord Chancellor to Sir James Graham, as Secretary of State for the Home Department, the commencement of the Summer Circuits has been postponed for a week, as the attendance of the judges will be required in the House of Lords during the argument which will arise upon the appeal of Mr. O'Connell to their lordships on a writ of error against the judgment of the Court of Ireland. Late on Saturday afternoon a rumour was spread that the writ had been received, and that an early day would be appointed for the hearing. On inquiry, we find that the report was incorrect, and that the writ had not arrived. After its arrival at the Parliament office, there will then be eight days allowed for the assignment of errors. This having been done, fourteen days are given to lodge the case, in accordance with the standing orders of the House, which standing orders, however, may, at the pleasure of the House, be suspended on petition, and then the Crown has a certain time permitted to put in its rejoinder. After these various forms have been observed, then the case, pleadings, together with all the evidence taken upon trial, and the judgment of the Court below, must be printed and delivered to the Peers, so that it is calculated at least three weeks will probably elapse ere the matter will come on for hearing.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In perusing the pages of your valuable publication, I, with others, have been very much gratified at the open yet merited censures with which you have from time to time visited those disreputable practitioners whom you designate "Advertising Attorneys." For this I am sure you have the thanks and good wishes of every honest practitioner. The justice of your strictures is founded upon this principle, viz. that although a thing may not be dishonest in itself, yet when a large body of professional men are united as a distinct class, and who all tacitly consent, upon entering into that profession, to observe the regulations and rules which may be framed to keep up its respectability, and in so doing are obliged to give up part of their private interest for the sake of the general weal of that community, any deviation by one or another member from those general rules, for the sake of private gain, is dishonest. The delinquent member knows that the rest of the body refrain from so doing, for their own individual advantage as well for the advantage of the whole, and of which he equally partakes with them. Yet with the full knowledge of this, he steps aside to obtain by unfair means a double benefit. As a member of the Profession, he gains all the respectability which belongs to it, and yet endeavours to smuggle an advantage, as if he had no part or lot in the matter. So much for Attorneys. Now, Sir, for ADVERTISING BARRISTERS, or, rather, AN Advertising Barrister (for I believe there is only one who is guilty of such unprofessional conduct), and as that branch of the Profession is more hedged up by professional rules of etiquette than any other, the breach of an important regulation renders him a marked man. The case to which I allude is the following. You are aware that for several years the judges have required an examination previous to an articled clerk's admission to practise as an attorney, and their names are printed and hung up in one or two public places, a term or two beforehand. Would you believe it—no sooner do these papers appear, than away goes the barrister to whom I allude, takes down the names forthwith, issues to almost every candidate lithographic circulars, a copy of which was sent to me previous to my own examination, as well as to others whom I know, and which I inclose. At first, I, of course, suspected him to be an impostor; but, for the sake of ascertaining whether it were so or not, I called, as directed, and received of Messrs. Saunders and Benning the identical card which I also send you. Sir, why does not the name of this person appear in the circular, as it ought to do in justice to the rest of the Profession? Why does Mr. INGS conceal his name? Is it fair that the censure of such a practice should be visited upon other Barristers, who are perfectly innocent? Does not the concealment of the name shew a consciousness of the character of the act?

There can be no objection to Mr. INGS obtaining as many pupils as he is able, provided he does not step out of the usual course to procure them.

Malpractices of this kind, and the no less discreditable one of answering egal questions in a newspaper, as exposed by your correspondent a few weeks ago, ought to be put a stop to, and I know no means so effectual as publishing it to the whole body of the Profession. I am, Sir, Yours,

A YOUNG ATTORNEY.

The following is a copy of the circular. The card gives the name of one

"MR. INGS,

"London, 1st Nov. 1843.

"For address, apply personally or by Letter (prepaid) to Messrs. Saunders and Benning, Law Booksellers, 43, Fleet-street."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

7, Golden-square, June 1, 1844.

SIR,—You are under a mistake in your report as to the case of Peach v. Hutchings. Mr. Justice Coleridge made the rule absolute for taxation, on the ground that the bill of costs had not been delivered twelve months before the time of making the application, but expressly stated that he would give no opinion as to whether the bills of exchange were to be taken as a payment of their amount on the day when given. This case was one in which an attorney had stated there was a sum due, for which he induced the clients to give bills, without delivering any bill of costs whatever. When one was at last obtained, an application was made to tax, which was opposed, on the ground that the bill of costs had been paid for upwards of twelve months by the bills of exchange; but, as the result proved, the opposition was unsuccessful, the Court considering the time ran from the delivery of the bill of costs.

We are, Sir,

SATURDAY, JUNE 8, 1844.

CODIFICATION OF THE CRIMINAL LAW.

THE first point to which we wish to direct the thoughts of our readers, in relation to this grand measure, is the disputed one, whether the Common Law as well as the Statute Law should be included in its provisions.

For our part, we have no hesitation in holding the affirmative, and for these reasons.

What is the Common Law? Is it, as it has been called, an unwritten law? Certainly not. It exists in reported decisions, not in the breasts of the judges. It is scattered over some twenty thousand pages of reports. But if it be written at all, what objection can there be to its conversion into the more accessible shape of Statute Law?

Is not all law merely a rule of conduct, a direction to its subjects what they shall do or refrain from doing? Surely it is a palpable absurdity to say that a rule shall not be written, defined, readily found, easily applicable. But how can this be, if it exist nowhere but in a wilderness of reports, or in the brain of a judge?

But especially grievous is the absurdity of an unwritten law in criminal procedure. Civil Law merely compels men to do justice to one another. But the province of Criminal Law is punishment. If no great mischief result from leaving the former, in some instances, to the discretion of judges, this cannot be pleaded for the latter. It is the foremost principle of justice that if you subject a man to punishment for disobedience, you should precisely inform him what he is to obey. In either view, therefore, the argument against an unwritten criminal law is overwhelming. If it be urged that the Common Law is already defined, there can be no objection to gathering up these definitions into an intelligible code. If, on the other hand, it be contended that it is not defined, but depends upon the memories or reason of judges, the duty of distinctly defining crime and punishment stares us in the face, and codification is demanded upon that principle.

It is said, however, by some, and, among the rest, it was hesitatingly asserted by Lord CAMPBELL, that an advantage arises from the unwritten and undefined character of the Common Law in this, that it enables the judges to adapt it to changing circumstances. Whatever weight this argument may have in its application to the Civil Law, it is entirely inapplicable to Criminal Law; for that which is not criminal by the ancient Common Law, cannot now be made criminal but by statute; and though the changing circumstances of society continually create new crimes, the Common Law provides no remedy for them. The assertion upon which this argument is based is not true; there is no such moulding to the times, as assumed, nor is it right that there should be: to permit it, would be to make legislators of judges, and to place the liberties of the country at the mercy of lawyers.

But we are almost ashamed to dwell upon this objection to the codification of the Common Law, nor should we have troubled our readers upon the topic, but for the opposition offered to it by some of the Law Lords. The masterly speech of Lord BROUGHAM exhausts the argument, and to that we must refer the reader who still feels a doubt as to the propriety of doing the work thoroughly while it is in hand, and making a clear sweep of the accumulated mountain of decision from which the law is now to be eviscerated. Then, lightened of the load, but enriched by all that it has of value, we should start afresh from the code, as the basis upon which decision and statute will thenceforth operate to explain and amend, until another accumulation shall, in the course of years, require another clearing and another consolidation.

But let us embrace as it deserves the blessing thus placed within our grasp, help it forward by a cordial and active support, and give our gratitude to those by whose genius and industry so magnificent a work has been accomplished.

Having thus touched upon the single preliminary objection, we shall ask our readers to enter with us upon a review of the provisions of the Bill, for the purpose of suggesting amendments in the law, which it is framed to consolidate, not to change.

CRIME.

THE First Part of the APPENDIX contains two curious and elaborate documents, whose length precluded their appearance in our weekly columns, without the omission of a large portion of their usual information: these are, "The Tables of Crime in England and Wales for the year 1843," and the Criminal Returns of the Metropolis for the same period. Their results deserve attention.

The first is satisfactory. There has been a decrease in crime of more than five per cent. although there had been a steady increase for the preceding seven years. This proves the fact, so often asserted but so little taken into account, that poverty and crime go hand in hand, and that the latter is a pretty accurate index to the former.

But the decrease has been unequally distributed. In the manufacturing districts it was 7 per cent.; in the agricultural counties 3 per cent. (We omit fractions.) This confirms the above statement. Prices and crime have risen and fallen together during the last seven years.

Still more remarkably is this shewn by the class of crimes in which the decrease has occurred. Offences against property have decreased 7 per cent.; while offences against the person have increased. In all branches of the former class of crime there has been a diminution, but it is chiefly remarkable in the minor offences of petty theft, the crime to which poverty most tempts.

There has been a considerable increase of most of the atrocious crimes against the person: the cause of which is the winter circuits bringing them into the account of the last year.

The malicious offences against property have increased no less than 27 per cent. But this was mainly owing to the disturbances in Wales and the incendiary fires. A very large allowance must be made for the addition of the winter circuit, which added to the criminal account of the last year a large proportion of the serious crimes that regularly would have come into the account of the present year.

There has been an increase in the crime of forgery, and of offences against the Game Laws.

The proportion of acquittals to convictions was 28 per cent. This affords another proof of the utter worthlessness of the grand jury system, and it shews, too, that magistrates are more ready to commit than they ought to be. We should like to know in what proportion the acquitted were defended by Counsel.

Fifty-seven capital sentences were passed, but only thirteen were executed, all for murder, and, strangely enough, the greater portion for the murder of relations. They were, three wives for murdering their husbands; two husbands for murdering their wives; one father for murdering his child; one child for murder of his father; one for murder of a gamekeeper, and five for murders connected with burglary and robbery.

We reserve for another article the very important results of these tables as they relate to the abolition of capital punishment.

CRIMINAL APPEALS.

THANKS to Mr. KELLY for his brave endeavour to procure for life and liberty the privilege, that is enjoyed by property, of an appeal from the judgment of a fallible tribunal.

Now that attention is directed to the subject, people are amazed that such a defect could have existed so long; but it is another proof how habit and tradition will reconcile men to the most palpable wrongs—especially if those wrongs do not affect the class by whom the laws are made.

It is difficult to believe that, in a civilized country, a man might be sentenced wrongfully to death, or to the loss of liberty for life, and that there exists no legal remedy, which he can claim as of right: that he is dependent upon the favour of a Secretary of State for redress, and if that Official chance to be too idle or too obtuse to investigate his case, the life or the liberty will be forfeited.

But the defect becomes the more glaring when it is remembered that an appeal is given from a wrongful decision in all cases affecting property, even of trifling amount; proving that, hitherto, property had been more cared for by our law and our legislature than life or liberty.

It is to be hoped that this stain upon our jurisprudence will, through the generous interference of Mr. KELLY, speedily be blotted out. His Bill was introduced with a speech of masterly ability, in which all the objections were anticipated. Sir James Graham hesitated and doubted, but offered no opposition. The old formulæ of "works well," "rash changes," "requires deliberation," &c. &c. were repeated, but Mr. Kelly's argument had already carried conviction to the minds of his audience in the House.

Out of doors we have heard some objections, which it may be as well to answer. It is said that, practically, an appeal is not required, for substantial justice is done, and that, if not, there is a virtual appeal to the Secretary of State. The reply to this is simply a reference to the number of new trials in civil cases, and, with lawyers, to their own recollections of wrongful convictions, at the Assizes sometimes, at Quarter Sessions often. If juries and judges so frequently err in civil cases, surely they must occasionally err in criminal ones.

Then, it is said that the privilege will be abused. This objection rests on the assumption, that the power of appeal is to be absolute. But Mr. KELLY's Bill merely provides that, as in civil cases, a new trial shall be granted only by leave of the Court above, upon good cause shewn.

The further check has been suggested to us, of a provision that notice of appeal should be given by Counsel, stating the grounds of it, when he moves in arrest of judgment, and that no fee shall be given to Counsel for moving in arrest or for the new trial.

When this relic of ancient barbarism shall be swept away, we shall look back with astonishment upon that, as we now do upon the old prohibition of defence by Counsel, and wonder how such a manifest injustice could ever have been endured by a people calling themselves free, or permitted by a law boasting itself the perfection of reason!

A NEW CLUB.

THE Manchester Law Society may, perhaps, deem the following printed circular, which has been sent us for publication, worth their notice:—

Bolton, Dec. 184 .

Sir,—The Committee of the Court of Request Club, of which Mr. C. Little is a member, hereby inform you, that if your debt of 3*l*. 9*s*. 3*d*. which you owe him, be not immediately paid, a warrant from the Court will be issued against your body and goods, without further notice.

By order of the Committee,

N.B. The debt must be paid to him at Prescot when he calls.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

WE direct the attention of the reader to the prospectus and List of Members of the Society already enrolled, which appears among the advertisements.

It will be seen to be a highly influential assemblage, comprising many of the most respected and respectable members of the Profession, and of the largest firms in the country. The number now exceeds 450, and every day brings accessions.

The first publication appears next Saturday. It will be the first part of the PRACTICAL REPORTS, and will contain BITTLESTON's and SYMONS's Reports of Magistrates' Cases in Easter Term.

At the request of many of the members, the second part will contain COX and ATKINSON's Reports of Registration Appeal Cases in the Common Pleas.

Each of these reports will cost the members only thirteen pence. The price of each in the other reports is five shillings. This will shew the utility of the society.

And, as the cost of printing does not increase in proportion to numbers, even the above trifling price will be greatly reduced whenever the society has members sufficient to insure a sale of 1,000 copies. At the present price, a sale of 750 will be required to meet the bare expenses of printing, publishing, and reporting.

As the preliminary outlay has been considerable, we shall be obliged by payment of the entrance-fee by those members who have not yet transmitted it.

The members enrolled henceforward will be weekly announced in the LAW TIMES.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

WE have now before us, as amended in Committee, Lord COTTENHAM's Bill, which does for the law of debtor and creditor that which Lord BROUGHAM's Bill does for the criminal law, and something more, for the former amends as well as codifies, the latter aims at codification only.

This great and important measure extends to seventy-eight sections, and occupies thirty-nine folio pages. It is, therefore, impossible to reprint it among our Bills in Progress. But as it will not a little interest our readers, and copies of it are extremely difficult to be procured, perhaps they will not be displeased if we give in this prominent place a sort of analysis or abstract of its provisions.

It is modestly entitled "An Act for the better Advancement of Justice in certain Matters relating to Creditors and Debtors."

But in truth it is much more than it purports to be. It is nothing less than a consolidation and reconstruction of the entire law of debtor and creditor, making vast alterations, all of which appear to us to be vast improvements.

It opens with a recital of the appointment of the commission of inquiry into the laws relating to insolvency and bankruptcy, and then proceeds to enact that the new law shall take effect from the 1st of November next.

The second section is the constructive one usually placed at the end of statutes, but here more wisely preceding that which it is intended to explain; and the third section repeals all laws at variance with the Act.

The first object to which legislation is here directed is more efficient remedies to judgment creditors. To this end, any Court of Bankruptcy is empowered to summon any judgment debtor, and examine him for the discovery of his property, so as to enable the judgment creditor to avail himself of his execution, and the needful powers for this purpose are given to the Court. If it shall be found that he is possessed of any property which cannot be taken in execution or charged, the judgment creditor is empowered to apply to the Court in which judgment is entered up, to compel such debtor to assign sufficient to satisfy the judgment, or to discover other sufficient property available in execution or chargeable.

Provisions are then introduced for the protection of creditors against fraud. These are sufficiently stringent, and will be hailed by all the honest portion of the community as a great improvement in our law.

The principle upon which these provisions are based is, that to contract a debt knowing that you have not the means of paying it, or to abstract from your creditors any portion of your property on any pretence, is a fraud, and punishable criminally.

The seventh section, therefore, enacts, "that if any person shall, under the false colour and pretence of carrying on business and dealing in the ordinary course of trade, obtain on credit from any other person any goods, &c. with intent to defraud the owner thereof, or, &c. with such intent remove, conceal, or dispose of any goods, &c. so obtained," he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punishable with imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

So by section eight, if any person against whom any judgment shall have been entered up by any creditor, shall abscond or conceal himself, with intent, &c. he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punishable with twelve months' imprisonment, with or without hard labour.

And, by section nine, if any debtor, after an action commenced against him by any creditor, shall make any fraudulent grant or conveyance of any of his property, with intent, &c. he shall be guilty as above, and imprisoned for not more than two years.

Then follows a provision for the prevention of the flight of debtors from the country, giving to the commissioner of any bankruptcy court power on affidavit of debt of 20*l.* to issue a warrant for the arrest of a debtor contemplating flight, and to detain him for a limited time, or till an order be obtained to hold him to bail.

The 11th section authorizes courts of bankruptcy to act in the execution of the Act in matters relating to cessio bonorum within their jurisdiction, and the Lord Chancellor is empowered to permit the courts to sit for despatch of business in any other places than their usual ones.

The next series of provisions relate to the very important subject of and great facilities are given to honest debtors for thus relieving themselves from their difficulties.

An insolvent debtor, with concurrence of one or more creditors, may petition to be dealt with under the provisions of the Act, attaching to his petition a schedule of his debts and property; but the concurring creditors must be one of 50*l.*; two amounting to 70*l.*; or three, to 100*l.* The Court is then to appoint two sittings, and give notice thereof in the London Gazette: the last sitting not to be less than 30, nor more than 60, days from the date of the petition: the debtor to file a balance-sheet.

The official assignees are to act with the assignees to be chosen by the creditors; but the former are, by sec. 17, expressly prohibited from interfering with the latter in the appointment or removal of a solicitor or attorney, or in directing the time and manner of any sale of the debtor's property.

Upon adjudication, all powers and rights which the debtor had in any of his property are to be transferred to the Court, and most extensive and stringent provision is made for thus securing to the creditors every species of property possessed by the debtor. But it is to be expressly enacted, that in adjudicating, the Court is to take into consideration the past conduct of the debtor "in his pecuniary engagements and dealings," and his behaviour at the investigation of his affairs, and large powers of inquiry and of punishment are given to the Court.

The next subject to which the Bill is directed is that of COMPULSORY CESSION.

It is provided by sec. 20, that on a creditor making affidavit of his debt and of his having delivered an account in writing, with notice requiring immediate payment, the Court may summon the debtor, and on his appearance require of him to state whether he admits the demand, and if he do so, or any part thereof, to require him to sign such admission, which is to be filed; or if he do not admit it, to require him to make a deposition on oath, that he verily believes he has a good defence to it. If he do not appear, or refuse to admit, or make such oath of defence, or pay, or give security for the debt to the satisfaction of the Court, or give security to pay such sum as may be recovered if he defends, he is to be liable to be dealt with under the provisions of the Act.

And so, if he admit the debt, and do not pay or secure payment of it. Or if he admit part and dispute part, the like provisions as above as to each part. Omission to appear, or refusal to sign, to be deemed a refusal to admit.

By sec. 26, an admission signed out of court, if duly attested by the attorney of the debtor, to be filed, and to have the same effect as an admission in court. The Court may give costs to a debtor so summoned, and if the creditor shall not recover the sum sworn to, if his affidavit be without probable cause, the defendant debtor is to be entitled to costs under a rule of court.

To bring a debtor under the provisions of the Act, it is provided, that any one creditor (or partners) for 50*l.* two for 70*l.* or three for 100*l.* may petition the Court, setting forth all necessary particulars; then the Court is to cause notice of it to be served on the debtor, and appoint a time and place for hearing the petition, to be stated in the notice; and on the said day shall hear both creditor and debtor, in person, or by counsel or attorney, and evidence, and thereupon adjudicate.

Upon adjudication, the property of the debtor to be vested in the Court, and the proceedings to be the same as above provided in the case of voluntary cession.

After adjudication, no fiat is to issue against the debtor for any debt due before. If it be not disputed within twenty-one days after advertisement of it in the Gazette, such advertisement is to be conclusive evidence as against the debtor, and all persons whom he might sue, of his liability to be dealt with under the Act, and of the adjudication.

Subsequent sections give power to the Court to issue search-warrants, provide for cases of partnerships, vest in the Court discretion to deal with annuities and uncertain interests, reversionary or contingent interests of debtors, as they shall deem best for the benefit of creditors, with authority to mortgage, if necessary. But the assignees' power is not to extend to the parson of a benefice or curacy, though they may obtain sequestration of profit of a benefice; nor to the pay or pension of naval, military, or civil officers, but they may obtain a portion of the pay on application. Goods in the possession of an adjudicated debtor, whereof he was reputed owner, are to be deemed his property; a distress is not to be available against the assignees for more than one year's rent. Any voluntary preference is, by sec. 41, rendered fraudulent and void. The provisions of 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, are extended to assignees. A warrant of attorney, or cognovit, is not to be operative against the goods of an insolvent after the filing of the petition; and the proceedings are not to be liable to stamp duties, nor the sales to auction duty.

Where a person has been before bankrupt, though he have not paid 15*s.* in the pound, adjudication under this Act is to protect him.

A like appeal is given from the judgment of the Court to the Court of Review, and then to the Lord Chancellor, as in bankruptcy. If the adjudication be reversed, the acts theretofore done under this Act are to be valid.

If an adjudicated debtor wilfully omit any thing in his schedule, it is to be a misdemeanour, punishable with not more than three years' imprisonment, with or without hard labour, and the like if he fraudulently remove property, or make false accounts or statements (two years), or falsify or mutilate his books. And the Court is empowered to direct a prosecution for any offence under the Act, and order payment of prosecutors' expenses to be made as in felony.

Then comes the famous clause 54, which provides for the total abolition of imprisonment for debt, except in certain cases. These are that

A judge of a superior court may order a judgment debtor to be taken in execution on affidavit that he is about to leave England; and in such case due provision is made for inquiry into the fact and the security of the creditor.

The provisions of the Act relating to process in execution to be applicable to all Courts.

Where wages, &c. due by an employer to any person adjudged to pay money by any Court for the recovery of small debts, the Courts may order payment by instalments, or otherwise, to any person authorized by this Court to receive the same, and his receipt shall be a discharge to the said employer.

The 60th section protects from seizure a debtor's necessary wearing apparel, bedding, tools, and implements.

Any Court of Bankruptcy may issue warrant of arrest against a judgment creditor intending to leave England, and detain him till process can come from the court above.

The 62nd section discharges all prisoners in custody for debt at the time of the passing of the Act, except those remanded for misconduct. But a judgment creditor may nevertheless have execution against the property of the debtor so discharged; and pending petitions are to be proceeded with, and insolvents are to appear and file their schedules, and submit to be examined, on pain of commitment.

A judgment creditor who has, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, obtained a charge on securities, not to be deemed to have relinquished it by taking the person in execution.

The following sections provide for the service of summonses where the parties keep out of the way; for the punishment of false evidence, and for the dividing of forfeitures among the creditors.

The 70th section abolishes the jurisdiction of the Insolvent Debtors' Court, and transfers it to the Courts of Bankruptcy.

Provision is then made for the appointment of an official assignee in place of the provisional assignee, or to act with the other assignee, and for the payment of moneys received by the Insolvent Debtors' Court into the Bank of England, to the credit of the Accountant in Bankruptcy, and for calling in the securities belonging to insolvent debtors' estates, and carried to the Bankruptcy Fund account. The records of the Insolvent Court to be kept as heretofore: compensation to be given to the Insolvent Commissioners, with power to the Treasury to award compensation to any officer of the court, unless appointed to another office of equal value.

Such is a bird's-eye view of the provisions of this most important measure, which entirely reconstructs the law of debtor and creditor in this country; its whole purpose being to substitute an efficient remedy against the property of, and the due punishment of fraud by, debtors, for the barbarous system of imprisoning the person which has hitherto prevailed.

We understand that the Bill is to become law during the present session.

THE CRITIC.

[New Publications will receive early and impartial criticism in this department of the LAW TIMES, if forwarded to the Office, 29, Essex-street, addressed to the Editor.]

New Books.

Observations on the Socinian Endowment Bill, commonly called "The Dissenters' Chapels Bill," &c. &c. By GEORGE ROCHFORT CLARKE, Esq. of the Inner Temple. London, 1844. Benning.

WE are in doubt whether this pamphlet was intended to be a theological or a legal argument, but it is, in fact, a most disagreeable mixture of both, the theology spoiling the law, and the law marring the theology. If the former, we can only say of it that it betrays uncharitableness in its worst aspect, the entire absence of the spirit of Christianity. If the latter, reason is so manifestly blinded by bigotry, that a calm judgment could not be hoped for, and is not to be found.

It has been often said that the presence of the odium theologicum in any author is evidence of a weak head or of a bad heart. To which of these undesirable qualities in Mr. CLARKE the tone of this pamphlet is due, we will not take upon us to determine, but certain it is that he can only save the reputation of the one organ by the sacrifice of the other. As a lawyer, he ought to have brought to the discussion of a legal topic the sober dignity of the judge; but he has treated it with the virulence and abusiveness of an advocate, or rather of a sectarian partizan. As a man, he might have argued the propriety of the Bill upon its own merits, without flinging dirt at those whose ill chances to differ from his ism. As it is, the essay has no attraction, either for the sectarian or the lawyer; it is too professional for the one, and too doctrinal for the other.

The question involved in the Dissenters' Chapels Bill is simply this: whether there ought not to be a statute of limitations for property applied to religious uses, as for all other kinds of property. We can remember when the Dissenters used to make a great outcry about the nullum tempus claims of the church. In obedience to the general spirit of our law, the church wisely consented to resign that invidious privilege, and submitted to a statute of limitations.

It is now proposed to apply the same principles of limitation of suits to property held by Dissenters for religious uses, and we have the strange spectacle of Dissenters opposing the very limitations which they used to abuse the church for not adopting; and we see Churchmen, like Mr. Clarke, praying that the principles of limitation to which they have themselves acceded may not be applied to Dissenters.

But such are the inconsistencies into which men fall, when they permit personal, sectarian, or party hatreds to blind their judgments; and thus, perhaps, may the spirit of this pamphlet be explained. For the author's sake, we hope it will not be read, for it will create a prejudice against him which might seriously affect his reputation should he hereafter make his appearance with a work to which, as a lawyer, he may bring a calm pulse and a sound head; for this he cannot do when he mingles, in one treatise sober law with such exciting topics as Theology and Politics.

THE FIRST PUBLICATION OF

THE VERULAM SOCIETY will appear on Saturday next, the 15th instant. It will consist of No. I. of PRACTICAL REPORTS, comprising the MAGISTRATES' CASES of Easter Term last, by A. BITTLESTONE and J. C. SYMONS, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

N.B. The PRACTICAL REPORTS will consist of—I. MAGISTRATES' CASES, by A. BITTLESTONE and J. C. SYMONS, Barristers-at-Law. II. PRACTICE CASES, by J. A. FOOTE, T. W. SAUNDERS, H. B. ASPINALL, and H. T. ATKINSON, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law. III. REAL PROPERTY CASES, by R. G. WELFORD, G. GOLDSMITH, H. BAKER, T. MACAULEY, and G. T. ALLNUTT, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law. IV. CROWN CASES in the Central Criminal Court and on Circuit; and NISI PRIUS PRACTICE CASES, by various Barristers. Each Case to be authenticated by the Reporter.

The purpose of these PRACTICAL REPORTS is to supply to the Profession, at a trifling cost, and in the convenient compass of a single volume, full Reports of all the Cases likely to be useful in ordinary practice, without the necessity that now exists of purchasing and carrying about with them a mass of cases that are seldom or never referred to, save in the Courts above, where ready access to them can be obtained.

The PRACTICAL REPORTS of the Verulam Society will, it is expected, supply to the members, at a cost of about twelve shillings per annum, the above information, which they can now only procure by an outlay of upwards of twenty pounds per annum.

They will be issued in Parts, as completed. Each Part will consist of 32 pages large octavo, and will contain nearly as much matter as one of the Parts of the ordinary Reports. The outside leaves will be cut off in binding, so that the sheets will be clean and contiguous. It will be stamped, and sent free by post to the Subscribers in the country, as being cheaper and less troublesome than conveyance by parcel. They will form one annual volume.

The price will be, for each Part, to members of the Society, thirteen pence; to other persons, nineteen pence.

A PORTFOLIO for preserving the numbers of the current volume of the VERULAM SOCIETY REPORTS, so that they may be readily referred to, may be had at the Office, or by order from any Bookseller in the Country, Price 3s.

Members of the Society who may not have ordered the Reports are requested to do so forthwith. We subjoin a

PROSPECTUS OF THE VERULAM SOCIETY.

This Society is established to supply the members with Law Reports and Text Books at accessible prices.

It will consist of an indefinite number of Members.

Any person will be admitted a Member on payment of an entrance fee of 10s. 6d. before the 1st of August: after that date, the entrance fee will be 1*l.* 1s. (to defray the outlay of forming the Society and its current expenses), and an annual subscription of 2*l.* 2s. at the least. But payment of the subscription will not be required until the Society proceeds to publish some of the more costly of the works contemplated.

The Members will be entitled to all, or any of, the publications of the Society at the Society's prices. But if more in value be ordered than the amount of subscription will cover, the further sum must be transmitted with the order.

It should be expressly understood that the Members will incur no risks or responsibilities whatever. Arrangements have been made to avoid the difficulties of the Law of Partnership; thus: The works of the Society will be issued by the Publisher of the LAW TIMES at the Office of that Journal, on his single responsibility, as his own publication; but he will be secured from loss by the plan, which will invariably be followed, of sending to all the Members a notice of each publication as it is projected, with a form of order, and none will be published which does not thus previously secure subscribers enough to repay its expenses. By these means the Members will secure all the advantages of a sufficient supply of good and useful Law Books, at the lowest prices at which they can be produced, without incurring any of the risks and liabilities of partnership. This two-fold object is effectually accomplished by making it, in fact, a machinery for the publication of useful works by subscription.

The Society commences with the issue of the above series of Practical Reports, because its numbers do not yet justify entering on larger undertakings, and in the hope that, once in action, it will receive a large influx of supporters. As soon as the requisite number of Members is obtained, other more important works will be entered upon. One thousand Subscribers will justify the publication of a complete series of Reports of all the Courts, and 1,250 will permit the undertaking of a series of practical text-books at one-fourth of their present cost.

It should be understood that the whole of the subscription will be repaid in books, or the balance returned.

Persons desirous of joining the Society are requested to send their names and addresses, with the entrance fee, to the Publisher of the LAW TIMES, at the Offices of the Verulam Society, 29, Essex-street, Strand.

The following is a

Re DYCE SOMBRE, a Lunatic.

Jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor over lunatics.

This gentleman having come to England,

Bethell, for the committee of the person, wished that some short interval should elapse before the hearing of Mr. Dyce Sombre's petition to supersede the commission. His clients wished to obtain evidence from Paris. There should also be a period of probation. He also asked that the medical men who had given evidence on the inquisition should be ordered to have access to Mr. Sombre.

Walpole, for Mr. Sombre.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I have sent Dr. Southey and Dr. Bright to see Mr. Sombre, without consultation with any one, and on my own authority. There has been a considerable period of probation, but I shall allow a fortnight, which is not an unreasonable time. The petition must come on peremptorily the first day of the sitting after the term.

Re GERTRUDE STAFFORD SMITH, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Costs of an unsuccessful attempt to supersede the commission allowed out of the estate.

In this matter three petitions had been presented; the first, upon which the discussion turned, was from Mr Tucker, a solicitor, who had conducted an attempt on the part of the lunatic to supersede the commission, to have his costs paid out of the lunatic's estate; the second was that by the lunatic, to supersede the commission; and the third was by the committee of the estate, for an order to compel Mr. Tucker to pay over a sum of money which was admitted to have been paid to him by the lunatic. The lunatic's income was upwards of 600*l*. a year, of which 500*l*. had been allowed for her maintenance. Her insanity appeared to consist in certain delusions, but in other respects little more than eccentricity was observable in her conduct. She had been found lunatic in March 1842, but in pursuance of the recommendations of the jury, she had been permitted to reside in her own abode, and was apparently under no restraint, going where she liked for more than nine months, during which time no part of the allowance of 500*l*. had been paid to her. It seems she had a hoard of money, not known to those who prosecuted the commission against her. Under these circumstances she was introduced to Mr. Tucker, and retained him to present a petition to supersede the commission. Mr. Tucker obtained copies of the affidavits on which the commission originally issued, consulted counsel, and under their advice laid the affidavits before medical men, who also saw Miss Smith, and reported her sane. No direct application was made to the committee of the estate, but when Mr. Penfold, his solicitor, heard of the proceedings to supersede the commission, he wrote to Mr. Tucker, telling him the lunatic had changed her solicitor, but making no communication as to the peculiar character of her delusions. On the petition to supersede having been presented, the Lord Chancellor had directed Dr. Southey and another physician to examine the lunatic, who reported her decidedly insane. It was, therefore admitted, that the petition to supersede the commission must be dismissed, and the only question was, whether Mr. Tucker ought to be allowed the costs of the proceedings he had undertaken. If allowed those costs, the sum he had received from the lunatic would not be sufficient to cover the amount.

Bethell and Blunt, for the petition of Mr. Tucker, cited Wentworth v. Tubbs (2 Younge and Collyer, Chancery Cases, 537); and Williams v. Wentworth (5 Beavan's Rep. 355).

Cooper and Walpole, contrà, for the committee of the estate, cited Ex parte Ward (6 Vesey's Rep. 579).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I should like to know to what extent Mr. Blunt was consulted.

The case laid before Mr. Blunt, and his opinion thereon, were handed to the Chancellor.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The only point on which I entertain any doubt is, from Mr. Tucker not having in the first instance communicated with the committee and his solicitor. There was a committee, and his solicitor, Mr. Penfold, wrote to Mr. Tucker, but never communicated the nature of the delusions, having been wholly silent on the subject. Neither did he allege that the proceeding was an improper one. Thus, the committee having been silent, and Mr. Tucker having acted on the advice of counsel throughout, and as he did act fairly under that advice, I think he ought to have his costs. It was not right to leave this lady entirely to herself. She has delusions, and is eccentric in her manners and habits, and it is impossible to tell what shape her insanity may take. One order made on the three petitions.

Saturday, June 1.

Re LUDLOW CHARITIES.

Compromise of information.

A reference having been made to the Master to inquire whether the sum of 850*l*. offered by the corporation of Ludlow to the charity trustees ought to be accepted, which was afterwards extended to consider a further offer of 1,200*l*. a year, which had been made by the corporation in consequence of investigations as to the value of the property which had been made in the Master's office; before the Master had reported, the schoolmaster, the Rev. Mr. Willis, and others, presented a memorial to the Attorney-General, in which they stated that the property of the charity in hand was worth three times the sum offered, besides a property in houses of the value of 200,000*l*.

Lloyd, for the relators, now moved for leave to withdraw the order for the extended reference, and said the Master would now report against the first reference, when the matter would come back regularly upon the report.

Sir C. Wetherell and Wray, for the memorialists.

Twiss, for the Attorney-General.

Bacon, for the corporation, said they would not offer more than 1,200*l*. a year, and resolved to stand upon their rights, and resist the claims founded on the exaggerated estimates of the memorialists.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Then the Master should report at once on the first order of reference. The extended order may be withdrawn. I shall reserve the costs. This is altogether independent of the hearing of the memorial before the Attorney-General, with which I shall not interfere.

DEAN AND CHAPTER OF ELY v. BLISS.

Tithes—Statute of Limitations—Plea—Appeal to House of Lords—Legal question—Case for opinion of court of law.

This cause was in the paper to be spoken to.

Kindersley and Fagle, for the defendants, suggested that the Chancellor should decide on this plea at once, without the trial of an issue at law; and that the case, being one of great importance, might go to the House of Lords unfettered by technicalities.

Lloyd, for the plaintiffs, wished a case for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I gave no opinion on the points raised in this case, I only suggested doubts which may have a satisfactory solution in a court of law. As there are a great many cases depending upon the same points, I think they should have a solemn decision at law.

Let a case involving all the points upon the plea be stated for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer.

Re HARDCASTLE, a Lunatic.

Lunatic's will—Probate not conclusive.

Stinton, in support of a petition by the sister of deceased lunatic, who had proved his will, for payment of funds in court. The jury had found the deceased a lunatic "for three years and upwards before 1st of July, 1835." The will was dated on the 19th of April, 1835, and there were two codicils in 1828, which were in the form of promissory notes. The will was proved in the province of York, under a judicial sentence, after two years of litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court of that province.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I should like to see the proceedings before making any order.

Petition to stand over.

June 3 and 5.

SAYER v. WAGSTAFFE.

Taxation of solicitor's bill under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 73—Delivery of bill pending a suit—Pressure—Application to tax—Petition—Practice—Payment—Promissory note.

Where a solicitor delivers his bill of costs, and receives the amount during the progress of a suit, that is in itself such a special circumstance as will generally induce the Court to order the bill to be taxed, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 73, although more than a year has elapsed since the delivery and payment of the bill. A promissory note given to a solicitor on an arrangement, and compromise of the bill of costs is not such a payment as will make the statute begin to run against the client, it is only a security.

The presentment of a petition to tax the bill is such an application as will prevent the operation of the statute, and, therefore, where the petition to tax was presented and answered before the expiration of the year after the payment of a bill of costs, though the solicitor was not served with the petition until after that time, it was held that the application had been made in time.

What such errors and overcharges in a bill of costs as will furnish special circumstances sufficient to induce the Court to refer the bill for taxation under the statute after a year has elapsed.

The defendant Wagstaffe had petitioned the Master of the Rolls to refer his solicitor's bills for taxation under the recent Attorneys and Solicitors Act, and an order was made for their taxation. From that order the solicitor appealed. The costs were incurred in conducting the defence to a suit in this court, of considerable importance, and these bills were delivered from time to time during the progress of the suit. The first was delivered in October 1842, the second in January, and the third in May 1843. The two last greatly exceeded the first in amount, shewing that the greater portion of the business remained to be done when the first bill was delivered. On the 3rd of November, the petitioner, with a view to discharge the first bill, gave a promissory note for the amount of the first bill, which was due and duly honoured on the 17th of November, 1842. On the 15th of November, 1843, the petition was presented; on the 16th it was answered, and on the 21st served upon the solicitor.

The MASTER of the ROLLS had held that the application to tax was made, at all events, on the 16th of November, when the petition was answered, and that in the absence of special circumstances, throwing the risk of a promissory note upon the creditor, it is only a security for, and not payment of, a debt; and that, consequently, in this case the bill was not paid until the 17th of November, when the promissory note was honoured.

Wakefield, Cooper, and Moore, for the appeal, cited Taylor v. Harrison (2 Mylne & Craig's Rep. 274); Cook v. Davis (Turner & Russell's Rep. 209); Bramston v. Carter (2 Simon's Rep. 458); Tetley v. Tetley (4 Bingham's Rep. 214).

Russell and Stinton, contrà, cited Ex parte Harries (in Exchequer, reported in the Jurist, 453); and the present case (5 Beavan's Rep. 415).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is a stronger ground than a summons, for a petition states the particular ground upon which the application is made. I am told that in a case before Lord Brougham, upon the 11th order of April, 1828, which directs orders for references for scandal to be obtained within six days, and the question was whether the order should also have been served within six days, his lordship said, "I can't write" and be served "in the order." So here the petition states the case to the judge, who desires the parties to attend: it is impossible to say that is not an application to tax.

Russell, as to special circumstances, referred to Crossley v. Parker (1 Jacob & Walker's Rep. 460); Howell v. Edmonds (4 Russell's Rep. 67). The solicitor had charged two guineas a day for attending a commission to examine witnesses in the country, but in fact his clerk only had attended.

Wakefield, in reply, referred to Lord Erskine's order, settling the scale of fee in this court, in which 13s. 4d. was the sum allowed for attending a hearing, whether the principal or clerk only attended; and said that, by analogy, in this case the solicitor is entitled to charge the full fee, though his clerk attend. (Horlock v. Smith, 2 Mylne & Craig's Rep. 495.)

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The circumstance of a promissory note having been given indicates pressure on the part of the solicitor; and the suit still depending, the client would have found it difficult to change his solicitor. The Master of the Rolls seems to have thought the overcharges on the items of the bill furnished special circumstances for taxing the bill; but, except as to the charge of two guineas a day for a clerk, I doubt that. The mere circumstance of a cause depending does seem to be a special ground, and it was so stated by Sir Thomas Plumer. I have expressed my opinion, that giving a promissory note is not payment. I shall reserve my judgment on the meaning of the word application, and on the merits.

JUDGMENT.

Wednesday, June 5.—In Smith v. Horlock, Sir Thos. Plumer held that the pendency of the suit is sufficient to prevent payment, concluding the client from the right to tax his solicitor's bill, and Cropley v. Parker is consistent with that case. Here the alleged overcharges alone, except that of two guineas for the clerk's attendance, are not sufficient, after payment, to open the taxation. But the money was paid during the pendency of the suit, and a client cannot have his solicitor's bill taxed during the pendency of the suit without changing his solicitor. Sir Thos. Plumer seems to have considered the pending of the suit in all cases a sufficient ground for opening the taxation. It has been objected that some of the points were not raised before the Master of the Rolls, but that does not matter if they are raised here.

Order of the Master of the Rolls affirmed.

May 4 and June 1.

BOOTH v. CRESWICKE.

Speaking to minutes—Conformity of minutes with judgment—Points omitted in judgment—Practice—Delivery out of the minutes.

This case, of which the judgment is before reported, has been twice in the paper to be spoken to on the minutes.

On the 4th of May, Wakefield, for plaintiff, stated the minutes were not in conformity with the judgment, as the mortgagee's costs had not been provided for.

Stuart objected to any argument, as the cause had been fully heard, and judgment given.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Mr. Wakefield may deliver in the particulars he requires to enable me to consider whether they are matters which can now be discussed. To my judgment, the minutes are sufficient; but if it is necessary to vary the minutes of the decree as pronounced, there must be a rehearing.

June 4.—The LORD CHANCELLOR read the minutes of the decree, to which Wakefield objected that there was an omission to provide for the mortgagee's costs and charges. Pending the cause, these costs and charges had been provided for by interlocutory orders.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—On the motion for a rehearing it was granted upon the terms that the party applying to have the cause reheard should pay all the costs, and that the other party should be in precisely the same situation as if the rehearing had been applied for within the proper time. If that is not provided for, injustice will be done, but if my attention was not called to the point when the case was reheard, I am not in a condition to vary the decree. But in this instance I do not consider the minutes as settled; either party may be heard, for the registrar took down the four points I decided, leaving the formal parts to be added. Nor is the delivery out of the minutes material when the counsel on the one side was to prepare them, and the other side to see them. In this situation the case stands the same as if Mr. Wakefield had said, on hearing the judgment, "You have not disposed of that point;" and always considering that the basis of this decree was an arrangement, these points may be taken as having been mentioned then. If parties differ about the minutes, the case must come before me again.

Costs of the application reserved.

Re FRANKS, a Lunatic.

Costs in lunacy—Marshalling assets to pay costs—Construction of settlement.

This was a petition by the solicitors for the next of kin of the lunatic (now deceased), praying that their costs might be paid out of the produce of certain policies of assurance, as the general personal estate would prove deficient for the payment of these costs. In 1812 the deceased had effected certain policies of insurance upon his life, and mortgaged them to Pease, to secure 8,000*l.* and interest. The next day he assigned the policies, subject to the mortgage, to trustees, for the benefit of his wife for life, with remainder to his two daughters; and the settlement contained a proviso and declaration, that if any money should be paid by Franks in reduction of the mortgage, the amount so redeemed should be paid to the trustees, and on payment of all the mortgage-money, the mortgagee should assign the policies to the trustees. In 1817 he made a feoffment of certain real estates to trustees to sell for payment of debts, and afterwards to divide the surplus amongst all his children. By that deed it was directed that the two daughters should bring their shares of the policies settled by the deed of 1812 into hotchpot. The deceased had been found lunatic from 1816, but the validity of the deed of 1817 had been established on a trial at law. In the lunacy, and under the sanction of the Master, 23,000*l.* had been borrowed on annuity, out of which about 1,100*l.* had been paid to discharge Pease's mortgage, which by arrangement had been reduced to 2,800*l.* and the remainder had been paid off by selling to the insurance officers the bonuses which had accrued on the policies. This arrangement was sanctioned by the Lord Chancellor, and the costs were ordered to be taxed and paid.

Romilly, Glasse, and Cole, for petitioners, cited Ex parte Price (2 Vesey, sen. Rep. 407); Barnsley v. Powell (1 Ambler's Rep. 102); Williams v. Wentworth (5 Beavan's Rep.).

Tinney and Renshaw, Koe, Wilcock, and other counsel, for different parties, contrà. (Ex parte Grimstone, 2 Ambler.)

Romilly, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The payments on account of the mortgage debt were to be made for the benefit of the children entitled under the settlement; and the acts done by the committee under the sanction of the Court are acts done by the lunatic; therefore, the payments were made by the lunatic, of which the children are entitled to the benefit.

Petition dismissed.

Re TOLSON.

Costs—Prisoner—Practice.

In this case the LORD CHANCELLOR held that the provision of the Act for the abolition of arrest on mesne process, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, which gives to orders of the courts of equity for payment of money the effect of judgment, was sufficiently extensive to entitle a prisoner who had been confined more than a year for non-payment of costs to his discharge.

Koe stated that it now appeared that there are other detainers against Tolson; that therefore no actual discharge could take place.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The order must be to discharge the prisoner so far as regards this order for payment of costs. He is in the same condition as to his personal liberty as if the creditor had agreed to his discharge, but the debt still remains.

BOOLT v. CRESWICKE.

Varying minutes of decree—Practice.

This cause was again in the paper to be spoke to on the minutes of the decree.

Wakefield.—First there was a bill by Jones against Creswicke, to obtain payment of a mortgage debt by sale; on that there was a surplus, which was paid over to the plaintiff Boolt. Some costs were incurred in obtaining payment of that money. Then there was an adverse suit of James v. Creswicke, in which the defendant's title to the mortgage estate was disputed, and in that suit the mortgagee was put to some costs. Then Creswicke had made two unsuccessful applications to open the foreclosure, the costs of which were not ordered to be paid at the time. A supplemental bill had also been filed in Jones v. Creswicke, to which Boolt was made a party, for the purpose of impeaching the mortgage. None of these costs had been provided for in the minutes of the decree.

Stuart, contrà.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The decree must be drawn up according to the nature of the pleadings, and if that does not meet the merits of the case, Mr. Wakefield's client must present a petition to bring the particular points before me.

Costs reserved.

PENSON v. HAYTHORPE.

Appeal—Bankrupt plaintiff—Non-prosecution of appeal by assignees—Costs.

The plaintiff, who had presented a petition of appeal, had since become bankrupt. His assignees had been brought before the Court by supplemental bill, but they declined to proceed with the appeal. On the motion of Simpkinson, the appeal was dismissed, without costs.

ROLLS COURT.

Saturday, Feb. 24.

CLARKE v. MANNING.

A. a partner in the banking firm of B. and Co. becomes a shareholder and a managing director of a joint stock banking company, established to carry on business on the same premises (the business of B. and Co. being removed elsewhere for the purpose of winding up), and, at the request of M. a customer of B. and Co. consents by letter, to transfer his banking account and the balance due into the books of the joint-stock company. Payments are accordingly made into, and cheques drawn by M. on the joint-stock bank, some of which being paid into the bank of C. and Co. and by it transmitted to the joint-stock bank, A. writes to C. and Co. that he had credited them with the amount. A. subsequently becomes bankrupt, and it is then discovered that the pass-book of A. and the books of the bank do not agree, and that the balance was not duly entered as promised by A. M. then brings an action against the bank to recover the balance, and the bank files a bill for relief, alleging fraud, and collusion between A. and M. and complication of accounts, &c. which is denied by the answer. An injunction to stay execution only is granted; and, on the trial at law, a verdict being obtained by the defendant in equity, he is permitted to proceed to execution on his judgment so obtained, notwithstanding allegations of equitable fraud, as negligence, &c.

The plaintiff in this cause is the public officer of the Isle of Wight Joint Stock Banking Company, and the present motion was for the purpose of restraining the defendants from proceeding at law to recover the sum of 1,977*l.* 18s. 4d. which they claimed as the balance of their account with the bank. Previously to May 1842, Messrs. Roe and Blachford were partners in the banking firm of Basset and Co.; and it being in contemplation to establish a new bank, to be called the Isle of Wight Joint Stock Banking Company, it was judged expedient to purchase the premises, &c. of the old bank, and to obtain the assistance of Messrs. Roe and Blachford, as directors, which was accordingly done, the business of the old firm being removed elsewhere to wind up. The new company arranged to purchase such of the debts due to the old firm, and to make them such advances as they thought fit; but so as not to be responsible for their liabilities. The defendant Manning, and two others, had the management of certain trust property, and kept two accounts, a deposit account and a drawing account, as such trustees, with Basset and Co. After the formation of the new company, Manning requested Blachford to transfer the account and the balance (of which the sum in dispute was a part) due to them to an account to be opened with the Joint Stock Company, which he consented to do. In August 1842, the defendants discovered the transfer had not been made, and on applying to Blachford, he informed them by letter that their cheques would be honoured to the extent of the balance. They accordingly drew two cheques of 1,000*l.* each, and paid them to their solicitor (who was also solicitor for a mortgagor to whom they were lending the money), and he paid them to Maddison and Co. of Southampton, who kept a banking account with the Joint Stock Bank. Maddison and Co. having transmitted them to Newport, Blachford acknowledged the receipt in due course, and that he had given them credit for them. This whole transaction, however, he concealed from the other directors, and no account was opened with Manning and his co-trustees till Sept. 5. On the 23rd of the same month, Manning paid in the sum of 541*l.* 14s. 10d. to Roe, and asked and obtained a new pass-book, in which that sum only was entered, and no notice taken of any other by Roe, nor had Manning ever any communication, except on that occasion, with any director but Blachford. Various payments were subsequently made into the bank, &c. Blachford alone receiving the pass-book and making the entries. In December 1843, Roe and Blachford were made bankrupts, and it was then discovered that the pass-book and the entries in the books of the bank did not agree. The defendants, in January last, brought this action at law to recover the sum of 1,997*l.* 18s. 4d. the balance claimed beyond a certain sum admitted by the bank to be due and paid into court, and received by the defendants; and the present bill was filed for relief, on the ground of collusion and fraud with Blachford, and also because the accounts were complicated, and such as could be adjusted by this Court alone. The answer denied fraud, &c.

Kindersley, for the plaintiff, moved for an injunction.

Turner, for the defendants, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS stated the facts at great length, and proceeded:—The bill asks for relief, on the ground of direct fraud by concert, collusion, &c.; and to that it is answered, that such fraud, if made out, is a defence at law, and I should not interfere. To this it is replied, that the facts alleged shew fraud, which would not be a defence at law, arising from the negligent conduct of the parties; and as both that and legal fraud can be dealt with here, relief should be given. I think it is a case requiring investigation here, and the question then arises whether that investigation is to be in whole or in part. Now, why should not this Court relieve itself from what there is better machinery for investigating at law? If the action should be for the defendant at law, and legal fraud thus established, there is an end of the case. On the contrary, if the plaintiffs at law succeed in negativing the direct charges of fraud, the plaintiff in equity can strike them out, and rest on the others. I will, therefore, permit the trial to go on, but will, if necessary, stay execution till the parties come before me again.

Thursday, June 6.

The action accordingly having been tried at the last Winchester assizes before Mr. Justice Cresswell, and eighteen pleas having been pleaded thereto, and issues taken upon them all, a verdict was found upon all the counts for the plaintiffs at law, who now moved for leave to take proceedings to issue execution upon their judgment against the plaintiff in equity. This was resisted by the latter, on the ground of equitable fraud growing out of negligence, &c.

The MASTER of the ROLLS, after minutely entering into the several transactions between the trustees and Blachford, was of opinion that though Manning might have mentioned the other cheques to Roe when he paid him in the 561*l.* 14s. 10d., still his omission to do so could not be held to be a fraud; and that Blackford, being intrusted to make such arrangements, and having actually done so with Manning, Roe, the other managing director, must be held to be cognizant of the matter. If the company permitted Blackford to act for them, and did not examine into the state of their affairs, how were customers to be held answerable for that? if so, the business of mankind could not be carried on. As to the erasure, and the other charges and imputations of fraud, &c. against the trustees, he did not think them any ground to stay proceedings to take out execution. It is said that this is an end of the suit; but that is not so, for if the plaintiff succeed, they may recover the money back from the trustees. Let the defendants, then, proceed to take out execution on their judgment according to their legal right.

AMES v. PARKINSON.

Executors directed to invest legacy-money, "in their own names," on real securities or in the public funds, a year after their testator's decease, may appropriate a mortgage security for that sum taken by the testator himself; but they ought to satisfy themselves that it is a good security, and if they do not, and it fail, they are bound to make it good.

If the mortgage-security so appropriated be paid off and the executors do not invest the money, they are liable for so much stock as the money would have purchased within a reasonable time after; but in neither case are they liable for so much stock as could have been purchased a year after testator's decease.

William Parkinson, of Thorpe, near Norwich, directed his executors twelve months after his decease to lay out, "in their own names," 1,500*l.* of his personal estate on mortgage or government securities for the benefit of Daniel Ames, his wife and children, and appointed Wm. Wiggett Parkinson and three others his executors, one of whom and Wm. Wiggett Parkinson were also two of three residuary legatees of the testator. On the 27th December, 1825, the testator died, leaving three of the executors surviving, who proved, acted under the trusts of the will, and paid off every thing but the 1,500*l.* legacy. In satisfaction of this they appropriated three mortgage securities of the testator's for 500*l.* 200*l.* and 800*l.* respectively. The 500*l.* mortgage being paid off, 150*l.* was applied in payment of legacy duty, Daniel Ames not being a relation of the testator, and the remaining 350*l.* invested as government securities. The 800*l.* was paid off in 1836, and never invested in any security, but placed in a bank to a separate account by W. W. Parkinson, the then surviving executor, for which he received 2*l.* per cent. and paid 5*l.* per cent. to Daniel Ames. Ames, it appears, constantly pressed him to invest the monies in stock, which he neglected to do; and in 1841 he was found a lunatic from 1840, though it was alleged that he was occasionally of unsound mind from 1834. The plaintiffs now filed their bill, and sought to charge the executors and trustees, &c. with so much stock as the 1,500*l.* would have purchased in 1826, on the ground of the securities not having been taken in their own name, an investment of part of the funds not having been made at all, and the mortgage security being insufficient. They charged neglect, &c.

The cases cited were Marsh v. Hunter (6 Madd. 295); Hockley v. Bantock (1 Russ. 141); Stickney v. Sewell (1 Myl. & Cr. 8).

Kindersley and Busk, for the plaintiffs.

Turner and J. Adams, for the defendants.

The MASTER of the ROLLS, after stating the facts, said the surviving executor must be presumed to be sane at the various times of dealing with the fund, unless it were alleged and proved that at the exact times he was of unsound mind; no satisfactory evidence to that effect was produced. As to the investment, the trustees, having a discretionary power, might appropriate the mortgages as they had done; but that did not relieve them from responsibility, for they ought to see that the security was a good one. Two of the mortgages had been paid off, and, therefore, their discretion as to those was exercised without any harm. The other (the 200*l.*) stood on a different footing. The plaintiffs could not be allowed the amount of stock which might have been purchased in 1826, for the trustees had a discretion as to investment. The 500*l.* was properly disposed of; the 800*l.* not being invested after 1836 at all, the cestui que trust has a right to the eventual benefit that would have accrued from it, if the discretion had been exercised. I shall look into the cases, and mention it on Friday. Accordingly, Friday, June 7.—His LORDSHIP saw no reason to alter his opinion. The defendants were to be charged with so much stock as could have been purchased with the 800*l.* within a reasonable time after 1836; the 200*l.* mortgage only to be made good, but no more; the costs to be paid by the defendants; but they to set off so much costs as was occasioned by the allegations of insufficiency of the securities for the 500*l.* and the 800*l.*; and the defendant, W. W. Parkinson, to be recouped the difference between the 5 per cent. interest paid by him on the 800*l.* and the interest which would have been payable on the stock purchased therewith.

JONES v. HORRIDGE.

The plaintiffs paying rent for premises under an agreement for a lease, being embarrassed by two claimants of the rent, refuse to pay without an indemnity, and an ejectment being brought, file their bill for specific performance of the agreement, and to stay the ejectment an injunction is granted on their paying the arrear into court, or to the defendant, without prejudice.

The plaintiffs, in 1838, entered into an agreement with one Sarah Styan, of Morben Lodge, for a lease of a place called Wood's Quay, at Machgulleth, on the river Dovey, and built thereon kilns for burning lime, &c., and paid rent from 1st July, 1838, to 1st January, 1842. Mrs. Styan having gone to Cheltenham to reside, the plaintiff Jones, asked her there to whom he was to pay the rent, and she said he was to pay it to the defendant, Horridge, to whom, it appears, she had demised the premises for fifty years, if she should so long live. In September, 1842, the plaintiff received notice from one Wymie, a mortgagee of the premises so far back as 1807, not to pay the rent to any one but him. On the 8th August, the solicitors of Horridge demanded the rent due, and the plaintiffs immediately replied, that they would not pay without an indemnity against Mrs. Styan's and Mr. Wymie's claims. This was refused, and notice to quit the premises was served on the part of Horridge. The plaintiffs then filed their bill for specific performance of the agreement, and for an injunction to stay action of ejectment. On motion to continue the injunction, it was resisted on the grounds, first, that the plaintiffs had repudiated their landlord's title, by refusing the rent without an indemnity, and had therefore incurred a forfeiture; and, secondly, that the agreement in question was waived by a parol agreement between plaintiffs and Mrs. Styan, as to the same premises. The cases cited were, Daniels v. Davison (16 Ves. 249, 17 Ves. 433); Doe dem. Whiteman v. Pittman (2 Nev. & Man. 673).

Purvis, with him Rasch, for the motion.

Turner, with him James, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The plaintiffs paying, within a fortnight, the arrears due into court, or to the defendant, without prejudice, let the injunction be continued, with liberty to apply.

Saturday, June 8.

GRUBB v. PERRING.

The production of papers proved in one cause will be ordered in another, relating to the very same subject-matter, though the parties are not all the same in both.

On Friday, the 24th May last, a motion was made by the plaintiff for the production of certain documents in another cause, of Perring v. Medowcroft, relating to the same matters. Those documents were brought in by Perring and Hicks, the executors of Jane Medowcroft, as vouchers, and are now in the Master's office.

The plaintiff, on a former day, had proved his interest on affidavit, &c., and the right being now assumed, the discussion was directed principally to the former of the orders. As to this there was a great difference among the register's clerks, &c., who had, at the desire of the Court, been consulted. Some of those officers declined giving any opinion; others thought the papers might, and others that they could not be produced.

May 8.—The MASTER of the ROLLS this day intimated that, on due consideration of the matter, he was of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to the production of the documents if they related to the very same subject-matter as that involved in the cause of Perring v. Medowcroft, but not otherwise, and that in the meantime he was entitled to inspect them in the Master's office.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Saturday, May 25.

SHIPPERSON v. TOWER.

Apportionment.—4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 22.

Where a testator directed that if any person, upon becoming beneficially entitled, either as tenant for life or in tail, to estates devised by him to trustees, should be a minor, the trustees should enter into possession, and, after providing for the maintenance of the minor out of the rents, should invest and accumulate the surplus until the said minor attained 21, and should then apply the accumulations to the same trusts as directed concerning the body of his estate, and an infant-tenant for life attained the age of 21 between the days on which the rents became payable, it was held to be a case within the above Act, and that the rents were accordingly apportionable.

George Baker, by his will, dated the 5th of July, 1833, devised all his freehold and copyhold estates to trustees in fee, in trust for his grandson, Henry John Tower, during the term of his natural life, with remainder in trust for the only son, or, in case there should be more than one son, for the first and other sons of the said H. J. Tower, severally and successively in tail male, with remainders over. The testator also gave his trustees power, at the request of the tenants for life or tenants in tail, to sell or exchange for other hereditaments in England or Wales, all or any part of the devised estates; and he directed that the estates to be purchased or taken in exchange should be subject to the same trusts as the estates sold or given in exchange, or as near thereto as could be. And the testator further directed, that if, upon any person becoming beneficially entitled to the said real estates thereby devised, either as tenant for life or in tail, he should be under the age of twenty-one years, provided such event happened within twenty-one years after the testator's decease, then it should be lawful for his trustees, during such minority or such proportionate part of such minority as should arise within twenty-one years after his decease, to enter into possession of the said estates, and receive the rents and profits thereof, and apply such part thereof as they should think proper for the maintenance of such minor, and to lay out and invest the surplus and receive the interest thereof, and make similar and repeated investments thereof, so that the said surplus might accumulate in the way of compound interest. And the testator declared that at the end of each such period of accumulation, or sooner if they should think proper, the trustees should convert the said accumulated fund into money, and apply the same in the same way as directed concerning the body of the estate. At the testator's death, H. J. Tower was a minor, and a considerable amount of stock was accumulated from the investment of the surplus rents. The dividends of this stock were payable in January and July, and the rents of the estates in May and November. H. J. Tower attained the age of twenty-one years on the 29th of June. The question was, whether this was an interest within the 4 & 5 Wm 4, c. 22, s. 2.

Wigram and Freeling, for H. J. Tower, submitted that there was not in this case such a determination of an interest as was contemplated by the Act (Browne v. Amyot, 3 Hare, 173, and Re Markby, 4 M. & Cr. 484), and therefore that the tenant for life was entitled to the whole of the dividends and rents payable on the quarter-days next following his attaining his majority.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (without hearing the other side) said that he thought, upon the true construction of the Act, there must be an apportionment. The estates were devised to trustees to hold possession and receive the rents and profits thereof, and, after applying a portion towards the maintenance of the tenant for life, to accumulate the surplus until he attained twenty-one. It was clearly a case of an interest determinable on the tenant for life attaining twenty-one. The same rule was applicable to the dividends.

PERRY v. WALKER.

Pauper—Possession of property—Vexatious proceedings.

Where a person suing in formâ pauperis was possessed of property which was greater in amount than 5l. though not after payment of his debts, he was directed to be dispaupered.

Semble.—A pauper guilty of vexatious proceedings in the conduct of a suit may on that ground be dispaupered.

This was a motion made on the part of the defendant, for the purpose of preventing the plaintiff from continuing the suit in formâ pauperis. The application was made upon two grounds: 1st, on account of the vexatious conduct of the plaintiff in the cause; and, 2nd, because the plaintiff was not now in such a position in respect of property as to justify his suing in formâ pauperis. In 1842 a similar application had been made to the Court upon the first ground of the present motion, and refused; and the Vice-Chancellor accordingly considered that the evidence upon the present occasion should be confined to what had been done since that motion was made. The charge of vexatious proceedings on the part of the plaintiff was sustained by evidence, that on several occasions long affidavits had been filed in support of proceedings in the Master's office, all of which affidavits had been reported by the Master to be insufficient for the purposes for which they had been filed, and that several applications had been made to the Court for similar objects, which had altogether failed.

Cooper and Wright, for the defendant.

Southgate, for the plaintiff.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he was not disposed to doubt the proposition that a pauper might so conduct himself in the cause as to allow of his being dispaupered, but he considered that the grounds of vexatious litigation upon which this motion was made were not sufficient. The application made in 1842, behind which he did not think he ought to go, had been refused upon certain undertakings, and from that order no appeal had been made. The grounds now suggested were urged on that occasion, or they were not. If they were, he had already decided the question, and if they were not, they ought to have been. He could not now hear it said that the case should be decided upon grounds which were not, but ought to have been, then brought forward. If what the pauper had done was under professional advice, he might not have been the only party answerable; and if it was not, then the party aggrieved might have applied to the Court for its protection.

Upon the second ground of the application, that of the pauper's possessing property, several affidavits were read, and it was proved and admitted that he was possessed of considerable property beyond the sum of 5*l.* but not after the payment of his debts. The following cases were cited. Perry v. Walker (1 Y. & C. C. C. 676); Wagner v. Mears (3 Sim. 127); Reg. Lib. 21 April, 1600; Romilly v. Grint (2 Bea. 186); Raxworthy v. Raxworthy (7 Law J. 136); Tunstall v. Pruning (Rolls, May 19, 1702); Bartlett v. Smith (Rolls, Nov. 8, 1703); Clerk v. Pike (Rolls, 1706); and Barer v. Barer (Rolls, 1700).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The Court has laid down certain technical rules for ascertaining the description of persons who ought to be considered poor persons, and it is impossible for me to exercise a general discretion upon the subject. The practice at the Rolls has been to omit the words "after payment of his just debts" in the affidavit upon which the order to sue or defend in formâ pauperis is obtained. Considering the course the plaintiff has pursued for many years, though he appears, from time to time, to have been greatly distressed, and to have been unable to support his family without assistance, yet he was engaged in the performance of works in his trade, and in otherwise earning his living, and, further, considering that he now possesses houses, the unexpired term in which is nine years, and the rental of which is 79*l.* besides that part occupied by himself and family, the ground-rent not being more than 50*l.* and that these houses were bought by him in his own name, and while suing as a pauper in this Court, I cannot say, although the houses are equitably mortgaged for money lent to complete the purchase, that the plaintiff is in a condition to sue in formâ pauperis, and I must, therefore, direct that he be dispaupered.

Thursday, June 6.

MILLBANK v. COLLIER.

Pleading—Parties—Administration suit—Appointees of a fund partially raised.

The original bill in this case was filed by persons interested under the will of James Cliff, for the purpose of having his estate administered by the decree of the Court. By his will, Cliff devised all his real and personal estate to trustees upon certain trusts, one of which was to raise and invest the sum of 20,000*l.* This sum he directed should be held for the benefit of his wife, for her life, and after her decease for such persons as she should appoint. By a codicil to his will, the testator directed that, if necessary, the 20,000*l.* should be raised by mortgage of his real estate, and that the receipts of his trustees should be full discharges to persons paying the same, and should free them from seeing to the application thereof. The sum of 10,000*l.* had been already raised and invested, but the testator's personal estate was insufficient to answer the remaining 10,000*l.* On the 13th of January last, the testator's widow died, having made a will, whereby she apportioned this fund amongst thirty-seven persons, two of whom were already before the Court, and nominated two executors, one of whom (Collier) was a trustee under her husband's will. A supplemental bill having been filed against these executors, Collier, by his answer, set forth the widow's will, and submitted that the appointees of the 20,000*l.* were necessary parties to the suit.

Spence and Elmsley, for the plaintiff, argued, that it was a case within the 30th order of August 1841.

Simpkinson, for the defendant.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR thought that so far as this legacy was not satisfied by appropriation or otherwise, these appointees were not necessary parties. Those who were interested in the legacy might come in and prove, so far as it might be considered an unsatisfied legacy. He wished, however, to hear the plaintiff's counsel upon the question, whether, if the legacy has been satisfied to a certain extent, and a sum set apart for that purpose, and if it be an object to make that sum contributory to certain demands upon the widow's estate, the appointees were not necessary parties.

Spence, in reply upon this point, stated, that as the appointees were so numerous, and two of them were already before the Court, he would propose to amend the supplemental bill by stating those circumstances, to which proposition

Simpkinson assented, and

The VICE-CHANCELLOR made an order accordingly.

PIDGLEY v. PIDGLEY.

Construction of Will—Appointment.

Where a testator, having a power of appointment by will over certain property, had, by his will, given, devised, and bequeathed, directed, limited, and appointed all the residue of his real and personal estate, or over which he had any power of appointment, to trustees upon certain trusts, without any further reference to the power, and it was admitted that the testator had no other power but that in question, it was held that the testator had duly exercised the power.

In this cause, which was being heard on further directions, the following question arose:—By the settlement, dated the 10th of March, 1797, made on the marriage of J. M. Pidgley and Rebecca his wife, it was declared that the sum of 1,000*l.* Bank Stock, standing in the names of certain trustees, should, if there were any child or children of the marriage who should attain the age of twenty-one years, be paid unto and amongst such child or children as J. M. Pidgley and Rebecca his wife, should jointly by deed, or as the survivor of them should, by deed or will, appoint. There were only two children of the marriage who attained the age of twenty-one years, viz. the plaintiff and Mrs. Patch, one of the defendants. On the 29th of January, 1827, J. M. Pidgley and Rebecca his wife by deed appointed a moiety of the Bank Stock to Mrs. Patch. Rebecca Pidgley died in her husband's lifetime. The Bank Stock was sold out, and the proceeds were lent to J. M. Pidgley upon his bond, and this continued up to the time of his death. By his will, dated the 18th of May, 1838, J. M. Pidgley, after making several devises and bequests, declared that as to all the residue of his real estate over which he had any power of appointment or other testamentary disposition, with the appurtenances, and all his estate and interest therein at the time of his decease, whether vested or contingent, in possession or reversion; and as to all his monies and securities for money, goods, chattels, rights, credits, personal and testamentary estate and effects, over which he had any right or power of appointment, or other testamentary disposition; he gave, devised, and bequeathed, directed, limited, and appointed the same, according to the quality of the estate, to trustees upon trust to raise the sum of 3,000*l.* for the benefit of his daughter and her children, and subject thereto upon further trust to pay the rents, issues, interest, dividends, and annual income thereof unto his son, the plaintiff, during the term of his natural life, and after his decease, upon trust for all and every the child and children of his said son, &c. It was admitted that J. M. Pidgley, the testator, had no other power of appointment than that given him by the settlement of 1797.

Tripp, on behalf of Mrs. Patch, submitted that by J. M. Pidgley's will there was no execution of the power, the testator having no intention of executing it. He cited Roach v. Haynes (8 Ves. 584), and Bradly v. Westcott (13 Ves. 445.)

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The question is certainly an arguable one. The proper construction of the will appears to be that it was the testator's intention to pass his settled and unsettled property in a mass, and as I must now assume that there is no other power, and as the testator has used the words "give, devise, and bequeath, direct, limit and appoint," I think it is right to conclude that he intended to execute some power, and this being the only power, that his intention was to execute this power.

Bond for cohabitation; past, or future—Turpis contractus.

Where a bond was given for past cohabitation to a woman, who continued to be maintained and visited by the obligor, but there being no evidence of subsequent cohabitation: Held, that the bond was valid.

This was a suit instituted by the plaintiff against the executors of a testator for the payment of an annuity for life, secured by bond, in consideration of cohabitation with the testator. Upon reference, the Master had found that the bond was a good and valid one, and the executors having excepted to that finding, the case was now argued upon the exceptions.

It appeared that the bond was executed by the obligor upon it being represented to him that he ought to provide for the mother of his children, for whom he had made a liberal provision; he accordingly secured her an annuity by bond, to take effect after his decease, and deposited the bond with his solicitor, but did not inform her of the matter. She continued to reside at the house provided by him, where he maintained her, and occasionally visited her.

The ground for exception to the Master's finding was, that the bond was in consideration of future, as well as of past, cohabitation.

Cases cited: Annandale v. Harris (2 P. W. 432); Batty v. Chester (5 Beav. 103); Gray v. Matthias (5 Ves. 285).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—A bond given for future, or as a motive for continuing, cohabitation, is void, as a turpis contractus. In this case, the inference is, that it was given for past to the mother of the children; she never knew of its existence, and therefore could not have been actuated by it. I cannot distinguish this case from that of Gray v. Matthias. There is no evidence, after the bond was given, of his doing more than maintaining her, and occasionally visiting her; and as to the possession of the bond, that makes no difference; for upon it being proved to have been duly perfected, it is quite immaterial in whose possession it is placed for safe custody. The exceptions must therefore be overruled.

SCOTT v. VANSANDAN.

Award—Finality—Ex parte proceeding.

Erle and Cleasby shewed cause against a rule to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for the sum of 1,358*l.* or such damages as the Court should think fit, pursuant to the arbitrator's award.

The cause, and all matters in difference in the cause, were referred at Nisi Prius, with a clause in the submission, providing that "the arbitrator should have the same power as a judge at Nisi Prius to adjudge as to the admissibility of evidence, and to reserve matters for the opinion of the Court." The arbitrator made his award, whereby he stated that having heard and considered the allegations submitted to him, he awarded that the verdict should stand for the plaintiff on all the issues, and that the same should be reduced to the sum of 1,358*l.* in case the Court should be of opinion that a certain commission, and the depositions of certain witnesses examined on interrogatories, were admissible in evidence; or to the sum of 1,165*l.* in case only certain of them therein specified should be admissible; or to the sum of 508*l.* in case neither was admissible. It was submitted that was bad, on the ground of its being hypothetical, inasmuch as there was no finding of any event; that, having power to state facts for the opinion of the Court, he was bound to make some finding, and should, therefore, have found with certainty, whether the evidence was admissible or not; and that the arbitrator had proceeded ex parte: citing, Re Wright and The Cromford Canal Company (1 Q. B. 98); Barton v. Ransom (3 M. & W. 326); Anderson v. Fuller (4 M. & W. 470); Scott v. Vansandan (1 Q. B. 102).

Platt and Peacock, contrà, contended that the award was sufficiently final, and that the arbitrator did not proceed ex parte until the defendant had full notice of the meetings, and refused to recognize the abitrator's authority: citing [illegible] v. [illegible] (Ex. E. T. 1844, 3 Law T.)

By the Court.—The objection as to the finality of the award is not tenable, because the plaintiff is entitled to have the verdict entered for him for the smallest amount, at any rate. If he is satisfied with that, there is an end of the matter; and it is only in the case of his thinking himself entitled to the larger amount, that it is necessary for him to come here. With respect to the arbitrator proceeding ex parte, it is clear the defendant had notice of the meeting, and did not choose to attend, and in such case the arbitrator has a right to proceed ex parte without further notice, and was therefore perfectly justified in what he did. With respect to the amount for which the verdict is to be entered, we will take time to consider. Cur. adv. vult.

Reg. v. Justices of Merioneth.

Costs allowed by Quarter Sessions on appeals.

Jervis shewed cause against a rule for a mandamus against the said justices, commanding them to enter continuances and hear an appeal against an order of magistrates for the removal of a pauper from the parish of Llangar to the parish of Lanyo, in that county. On the 30th of January the appellants gave notice of their intention to appeal, and the grounds of appeal were served in March. On the 29th of March, after service of the grounds of appeal, a supersedeas was served, and on the 9th of April the respondents went again before the magistrates, and obtained a fresh order of removal. The sessions were held on the 12th of April, and on that day the respondents tendered the sum of two guineas to the appellants in respect of their costs. This the appellants refused, on the ground that at that time a considerably greater sum had been expended by them in preparing for the sessions, and accordingly applied to the Sessions for leave to enter the appeal, but they refused to allow it to be entered, on the ground that there was an order of Sessions providing that the sum of 30s. only should be allowed on appeals against orders of removal tried in such court, and that, therefore, the appellants might have got two guineas for their costs, which is twelve shillings more than they could have got by going to the sessions.

Yardley, for the justices.

Welsby, in support of the rule, submitted that the appellants had a right to enter their appeal, according to the decision of this Court in Reg. v. Townstall and Stayley (2 P. & D. 676, S. C. 3 Q.B.), and that it could hardly be that the Sessions would have applied their rule to such a case as the present, when it was known that much larger costs had been incurred.

By the Court.—We do not interfere as to the amount of costs, although we are well aware they frequently are not given on a remunerative principle; but after Reg. v. Townstall and Stayley, we can hardly do otherwise than grant the writ, although we should probably be hardly right in doing so if we thought the justices would maintain their practice. Still, as it is probable the will alter their rule, and pay costs according to the merits of the case, the writ may go. Rule absolute.

Elgood v. Bullock.

Demurrer—Unreasonable by-law.

Trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's booth in a certain fair at Angel Hill, in the town of Bury St. Edmunds.

Plea—That the plaintiff wrongfully erected the said booth contrary to a by-law of the said town of Bury St. Edmunds, whereby, amongst other things, the defendant, as mayor of the said borough, upon the requisition of three inhabitants of the said borough, was authorized to require the plaintiff to remove the said booth, and in default of his so doing, was empowered to remove it.

Demurrer.

The defendant pleaded, secondly, that Angel Hill is a public highway, and that the said booth was wrongfully erected thereon, wherefore the defendant, as such mayor, removed the same.

Replication—De injuriâ.—Demurrer.

Watson (Gurdon with him), contrà, citing Com. Dig. Bye-law, B. 3; Fyson v. Smith (6 A. & E. 745).

By the Court.—This by-law goes much further than any policy can allow, for it is clearly unreasonable that the plaintiff should be allowed to erect his booth, and then, upon the mere complaint of three householders, without his being heard, the mayor should be authorized to go and pull it down.

Demurrer.

Assumpsit, for money had and received.

Plea, that after the accruing of the debt in the declaration mentioned, the defendant had certain sums of money owing to him, equal to the moneys owing by him to the plaintiff; that he then gave the plaintiff an irrevocable authority to receive the same, and that he had the option of receiving the same, but did not.

Reg. v. The Governors of St. Andrew's, Holborn.

Every person having the collection, &c. of moneys assessed for the relief of the poor in any parish, is bound to account to the auditors of the Poor Law Commissioners, notwithstanding he has already accounted to the auditors appointed under a local Act of Parliament: and that, not simply for so much of the rate as is actually applied for the relief of the poor, but for the whole amount collected, although a part of that amount is applied to other purposes than the relief of the poor.

In this case a mandamus had issued to the defendants, commanding them to account for the poor-rate of their parish to the auditor of the Poor Law Commissioners. The defendants returned that they had accounted, and also that they were not bound to account, and issue was taken upon that return. At the trial, the jury found a verdict for the Crown, and a rule had been subsequently obtained to set that verdict aside, and to enter a verdict for the defendants. The case was argued on the 27th April last, when two questions were raised: first, whether the defendants, having accounted to the auditors under a local Act of Parliament, were also bound to account to the auditor of the Poor Law Commissioners; and, secondly, if they were, whether the parish, being governed by such local Act, was bound to account to the auditor of the union for the whole of the rate collected, which included poor-rate and water-rate, and out of which other things, besides the mere relief of the poor, had always been provided for, or only for that part of it which was actually applied to the latter purpose.

Denman, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—In this case, two questions were proposed for our consideration: first, whether the defendants, having accounted to the auditors under the local Act of Parliament, 6 Geo. 4, they were also bound to account to the auditors appointed to act as auditors by the Poor Law Commissioners under the New Poor Law Act; and, secondly, if that be so, whether the account stated by them was sufficient under the provisions of that Act. With respect to the first question, we are clearly of opinion that the defendants are bound to account to the latter auditors, although they have already accounted to the auditors appointed under the local Act; that was decided by the case of Reg. v. The Poor Law Commissioners, Alstonefield Incorporation (11 A. & E. 558). As to the second point, it was contended that the defendants were not bound to account to the auditors of the Poor Law Commissioners for all accounts of the sums received by them, but only for so much of the produce of the rates as was raised for, and applied to, the relief of the poor. The whole rate is estimated at more than 6,000*l.*; but not more than one-half of that sum is applicable to the relief of the poor; the residue is applied to the police-rate, county-rate, payment of principal and interest of money borrowed, and various expenses attendant on the carrying out of the provisions of the Act. The defendants did account for so much of the moneys received by them as were applied to the relief of the poor; but it was objected they ought to have done so as to the residue, which was applied for other purposes. By the 46th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act, it is provided, that the commissioners may direct the guardians of any parish or union to appoint such officers as the commissioners shall think necessary for the examining and auditing, allowing and disallowing of accounts in such parish or union. In pursuance of this power, the commissioners did direct the guardians of the Holborn Union, of which the district in question forms a part, to appoint auditors to examine the accounts, and ascertain whether the expenditure was such as is authorized to be made by the Act.

The 47th section of the Poor Law Act provides, that every person having the collection, receipt, or distribution of the moneys assessed for the relief of the poor in any parish or union, shall, at the times therein mentioned, make and render to the auditors appointed to examine, audit, allow, or disallow such accounts, a full account of all moneys, matters, and things committed to their charge.

With respect to this section, two things may be observed: first, that the accounts are to be rendered to the persons appointed to act as auditors by the Poor Law Commissioners; and, secondly, that the accounts are to be made of all moneys committed to their charge: that would apply to all moneys, whether raised by means of the poor-rate or otherwise. It therefore appears that, by the terms of the 46th and 47th sections, the defendant is bound to account to the officer appointed by the order of the Poor Law Commissioners, not only for so much as is applied to the purposes of the Poor Law Act, but for the whole amount of the money raised by this rate; consequently, the return is insufficient, and the verdict at present entered ought to stand. Rule discharged.

Reg. v. The Mayor of New Windsor.

Borough-rate—Assessment of parish—Excessive rate.

Byles, Serjt. and Peacock shewed cause against a rule for a mandamus commanding the defendant to insert the name of James Thomas Bedborough on the burgess-roll of that borough.

It appeared that the borough of New Windsor consists of the several parishes of New Windsor, Clewar, and Lower Castle Ward, part only of the two former being within the borough, and the third extra-parochial. An order of the town-council was made that a borough-rate, calculated at 6d. in the pound, be made upon the under-mentioned parishes, viz. New Windsor, 519*l.* 3s.; Clewar, 119*l.* 2s.; and the Lower Castle Ward, 31*l.* 11s. 6d. The overseers made a rate of 7d. in the pound upon the parish of New Windsor. This Mr. Bedborough declined to pay, but he tendered the amount of the rate at 6d. in the pound, which the overseers rejected, and thereupon the mayor refused to put his name on the burgess-roll, upon the ground of the non-payment of rates and taxes as required by the Act of Parliament. The present rule was obtained on two grounds: first, that the rate was bad as being larger than authorized by the order of council, and, in reality, producing 614*l.* 10s. 9d. instead of 519*l.* 3s.; and, secondly, assuming it to be good, the non-payment thereof did not disqualify a party from being on the burgess-roll of the borough. It was submitted that the mayor was justified in his refusal; that the rate was in the nature of a county-rate, to which the whole parish, and not the individual inhabitants, are assessed; and against which it was not competent to the inhabitants, but only for the parish at large, to appeal; therefore, until the objection should be taken by the parish of New Windsor, the validity of the rate could not be disputed by any single rate-payer; and, moreover, that it appeared, from the affidavits, that the amount assessed upon the parish could not be raised by means of the 6d. rate, on account of the number of uninhabited houses therein; citing 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, ss. 9, 92; 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 104, s. 5; 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 29; 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 81, ss. 1, 3; 55 Geo. 3, c. 51; Rex v. Inhabitants of Blackawton (10 B. & C. 792); Rex v. Justices of Westmoreland (ib. 226); Anon. case (Loft Rep. 398); Rex v. Palmer (2 East, P. Macarthy v. Nepean.

Upon a feigned issue under the Tithe Commutation Act, with several counts, to try the validity of an equal number of moduses, as to some of which the plaintiff succeeds, and the defendant as to the remainder, neither party is entitled to the general costs of the issue. Form of order as in Lewis v. Holding (2 M. & G. 885).

Crowder, Moody, and Bayley shewed cause against a rule obtained by the plaintiff calling on the defendant to shew cause why he should not deliver up the postea to the plaintiff.

This was a feigned issue, under 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 74, s. 46, directed by way of appeal against the decision of the Tithe Commissioners, to try the validity of three moduses which the commissioners had found to exist. There were three counts in the declaration, each having reference to a particular modus. At the trial, the defendant proved two moduses, and it was thereupon agreed that a verdict should be taken for the defendant upon two of the issues, and for the plaintiff on the third. It was submitted that it must be added as a condition that no general costs of the issues directed by the learned judge be paid by either party, but that the defendant do pay costs to the plaintiff, as well interlocutory as otherwise, as have been occasioned by trying the issue found for the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff pay similar costs to the defendant on the issues found for him, according to the rule laid down in Lewis v. Holding (2 M. & G. 885).

Butt, contrà.

By the Court.—This case cannot be distinguished from that of Lewis v. Holding, and, therefore, the same rule must be drawn up as in that case.

Rule absolute accordingly.

Herbert v. Sayer.

Amendment of record.

Willes shewed cause against a rule calling on the defendant to shew cause why the record, and the transcript thereof, should not be amended by entering thereon an order of Williams, J. enabling the defendant to withdraw the first five pleas to the declaration, and for leave for the plaintiff to enter a retraxit in pursuance of that order. (See ante, p. 159, vol. 3, where the rule is erroneously reported to have been refused.)

Erle and G. Atkinson, in support of the rule.

By the COURT.—The defendant made his election when he wanted to strike out the first five pleas, and cannot now object to the plaintiff's doing what he himself applied to have done. Rule absolute.

Argued 29th May.

REG. v. THE SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Appeal against poor-rate—Amending rate defective by reason of the omission of the declaration of churchwardens and overseers—Time of Appeal.

Kelly and Archbold shewed cause against a rule for a certiorari to bring up an order of the Court of Quarter Sessions of the county of Berkshire, for the purpose of being quashed. It appeared that two poor-rates had been respectively made on the 22nd November, 1842, and the 24th February, 1843, but that the declaration required by the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 96, s. 2, to be signed by the churchwardens and overseers of the parish, had been omitted. These rules, omitting the declaration, had been afterwards allowed by two magistrates. The error was subsequently discovered; and, upon that discovery, the parish officers cancelled the allowance of the magistrates, and inserted the required declaration. They then proceeded before two other magistrates on the 25th and 26th March, 1843, and the 1st and 2nd April, 1843, to have the allowance made in the amended form, but without altering the original date; and the rate was then allowed. A party of the name of Britnell thereupon appealed against the two rates. The appeal came on to be heard at the Midsummer Quarter Sessions in June 1843, and the rates were then quashed, and an order, dated the 27th of June, 1843, made under the statute, that new rules be made in lieu thereof; new rules were accordingly made in lieu thereof under the order of sessions, on the 14th and 22nd of July respectively. Against these the South Western Railway Company, who had not appealed against the former rates, now appealed. The appeal came on to be heard at the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions, and by an order of the 17th of October, 1843, both rates were confirmed. The present rule was obtained for the purpose of quashing the orders of sessions of the 27th of June, 1843, and the 17th of October, 1843, respectively; and the grounds on which it was moved for were, that these rates having been originally made, the one in November, 1842, and the other in February, 1843, no appeal could be against them except to the next practicable Quarter Sessions, and consequently the appeal to the Midsummer Sessions was too late, and that this was not a matter of practice but of jurisdiction; that the next practicable sessions having been allowed to pass, the Midsummer sessions had no jurisdiction at all, and therefore the orders were altogether void.

2ndly. That the appeal by Britnell against the rates in question was matter of arrangement between the parties, and that he was not a hostile appellant.

3rdly. That the rates were prospective.

4thly. That they were bad for including profits of trade.

The first ground was the only one relied on in the argument. It was submitted that there was a preliminary objection to the South Western Railway Company being heard, viz. that they were no parties to the appeal at the Midsummer Sessions, and not having objected then, they could not do so now; that although they might have a right to bring up the order of the Michaelmas Sessions to be quashed, they had no right to be heard on the June order, first, because they were no parties to it, and secondly, because they were not interested under it. With respect to the question of jurisdiction it was submitted that the time for appealing was to be calculated, not from the time of the original allowance of the rates, but from the date of the final allowance, on the 25th and 26th of March and 1st and 2nd of April, and, that the appeal was therefore in perfect time; at any rate, the objection not having been made at the June sessions, they had jurisdiction to make the order: citing 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 96, s. 2; 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, s. 4; 49 Geo. 3, c. 124; Rex v. Bass (5 T. R. 251); Reg. v. Abergele (8 A.& E. 394); Reg. v. Fordham (11 A.&E. 73).

M. D. Hill and Corrie, contrà citing Rex v. Standard Hill (4 M. & Sel. 378); Rex v. Atkins (4 T. R. 12); Rex v. Coode (1 Bott. 276); Rex v. Justices of Worcestershire (5 M. & Sel. 457); Rex v. Wavell (1 Dougl. 115); Much Waltham v. Perrin (2 Salk. 474); Muskett v. Drummond (10 B. & C. 353); Green v. Elgie (1 Dowl. 344); Christy v. Unwin (3 P. & D. 204); Reg. v. Martin (2 Q.B. 1037); Rex v. Justices of Oxfordshire (1 M. & S. 446); Governors of Bristol Poor v. Wait (1 A. & E. 264).

By the COURT.—The case is attended with some difficulty, owing to the suggestion of our being called on to review the decision of the Court of Quarter Sessions upon the facts of the case. We disclaim any authority to interfere with that, and accordingly our decision depends, in a great degree, upon the orders themselves, the affidavits having in no degree been relied on, except so far as they bear on the question of jurisdiction. By the former of the two orders of sessions, dated 29th June, 1843, two rates for the relief of the poor had been quashed; and from the statement, it appears that the former was made on the 22nd November, 1842, and the latter on the 24 h February, 1843; therefore, as to the one, two quarter sessions had passed, and as to the other, one quarter session had passed; and consequently, as to them the time of appeal had passed inasmuch as there is no entry of respite, or entry of any kind to shew that the Midsummer Sessions had jurisdiction. Now both these rates wanted the declaration required by the statute to be made by the churchwardens and overseers, and were therefore void; but it was contended that fresh rates had been made and allowed by the justices on the 26th March and 1st April, 1843, with respect to which, the appeal was in time. That, however, is wholly unsupported by the facts of the case, from which it is perfectly clear that the old rates remained, and that nothing more was done to them than the adding of the signature of the parish officers at the foot; consequently, the sessions had no jurisdiction to make the order of the 27th June, and therefore all the orders of sessions must be quashed. Rule absolute.

The COURT gave judgment on Monday, the 10th inst. on the ground that the Rochdale Act, by which the road in question was regulated, was an improvement Act, and, therefore, within the exception contained in the statute of 7th Vict.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Thursday, June 6.

KEELE v. WHEELER.

The defendant agreed, through an agent, to purchase of the plaintiff certain securities known as Old Pier Bonds. Bonds of this description were understood in the market to bear 5l. per cent. interest. The plaintiff delivered Old Pier Bonds, on which was indorsed a memorandum, made prior to their execution, for the agreed acceptance of 4l. per cent. interest only, in discharge of the interest on the bonds. The plaintiff was not guilty of any fraud, and intended only to sell bonds at 4l. per cent. interest, and the defendant's agent kept the bonds for two days, before the memorandum lowering the rate of interest was discovered. In an action for refusing to accept, Held, that the bonds were not such as the defendant was bound to take, and that the contract had failed through the plaintiff's laches, in not informing the defendant or his agent of the memorandum on the back of the bonds.

Talfourd, Serjt. (Ball with him), shewed cause against a rule obtained by the plaintiff for setting aside the verdict found for the defendant, and entering one for the plaintiff for 800*l*. pursuant to leave reserved by the learned judge at the trial, if the Court should think that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict from the facts of the case, notwithstanding the finding of the jury upon the questions left to them by the learned judge.

The declaration was in assumpsit, for not accepting eight Southampton pier bonds, known by the name of Old Pier bonds, alleged to have been sold by the plaintiff to the defendant, at 100*l*. apiece. The defendant had pleaded non-assumpsit, and, also that he did not buy, nor did the plaintiff sell to him these securities. At the trial, before Wightman, J. at the last Lent assizes for Winchester, it appeared from the evidence that the plaintiff was possessed of eight bonds, originally granted by the commissioners of the port of Southampton, under a local Act (43 Geo. 3, c. 21), to a Mr. Maddison, for securing each the sum of 100*l*. and interest on the dock dues, such interest not exceeding 5*l*. per cent. per annum; but on the back of the bonds there was a memorandum to the effect that Maddison would receive 4*l*. per cent. in discharge of the interest, provided the treasurers should pay the same on the days it became due. This memorandum was made before the execution of the bonds. The known usual interest the Southampton Old Pier bonds bore was 5*l*. per cent.; but for some private person Maddison advanced the money to the commissioners at 4l. per cent. only, and the bonds so given to him therefore had the above memorandum indorsed on them. The defendant, through a person of the name of Clark, as his agent, agreed with the plaintiff for the purchase of eight Old Pier bonds at par. The bonds in question to Maddison were shewn and given by the plaintiff to Clark, and remained in his possession for two days, at the expiration of which time, and when the purchase-money was about to be paid, it was discovered that the interest was limited to 4l. per cent. and the defendant in consequence refused to complete. The learned judge left it to the jury to say whether the bargain was or was not for Old Pier bonds of the ordinary form, and at the usual interest. The jury found that the plaintiff intended only to sell bonds at 4l. per cent. interest, but that the bargain was for Old Pier bonds at the usual interest they bore, which was 5l. per cent.

It was submitted that the memorandum indorsed being made at the time, and before the execution of the bonds, formed part of the security itself, and that if not at common law, at all events in equity, the instrument would be discharged on payment of interest at 4l. per cent. and therefore the bonds were not what the defendant had contracted for. Lyburn v. Warrington (1 Starkie's C. 162), and Simpson v. Vaughan (2 Atk. 32), were cited.

Gaselee, Serjt. (Crowder and Kinglake with him) in support of the rule, contended that the correspondence by the letters was merely introductory to the contract which arose when the bonds in question were shewn to and delivered to Clark, and that the defendant, therefore, by his agent, must be deemed to have contracted for the bonds he had, or else that these bonds were in fact bonds at 5l. per cent. and the memorandum on the back of them, though binding on Maddison, would not be so on the defendant.

TINDAL, C.J.—I think that the verdict which has been found should stand. The question here arises on a contract, by which the defendant agreed to purchase what were understood to be bonds, although strictly they were not bonds. When the contract is about to be completed, it is found that the bonds have on the back of them a certain memorandum; did this or not vary the original instrument? The original instrument is in the nature of an annuity on the docks of Southampton, which is in no event to exceed 5l. per cent. interest on the 100l. advanced, but until the 100l. is paid off, the interest would vary according to the dues received on the harbour. Now it appears that 5l. per cent. interest was the rate which Old Pier bonds bore in the market. The memorandum appears from the evidence to have been written before the instrument was executed, and as it also bears date the same day, the presumption therefore is that it was all one transaction. By that memorandum it appears Maddison agreed to take interest at the rate of 4l. per cent. That being the state of these eight bonds, it appears that the plaintiff was desirous of selling them, and Clark acted as the agent of the defendant, who wanted to invest money on Old Pier bonds. Now no one can doubt, that when eight Old Pier bonds were offered to the defendant, without any thing being said to call his attention to the memorandum in question, the presumption would be, that he was purchasing Old Pier bonds understood to bear 5l. per cent. interest. There being no fraud on the part of the plaintiff, the question therefore is, on which side is there the greater laches. Now the plaintiff at the time knew that the bonds he held bore only 4l. per cent. interest; and he knew also that the general understanding was, that Old Pier bonds bore 5l. per cent. interest. The plaintiff, therefore, was guilty of laches in not disclosing to defendant or Clark the existence of the private memorandum on the bonds, lowering the rate of interest to 4l. per cent. The only laches which can be imputed to the defendant is, that his agent Clark did not, during the two days the bonds were in his possession, viz. from the 14th to the 16th Sept. find out the interest which they in fact bore. I do not see that there was any duty on his part to look at the bonds, and therefore the laches were less on his part than those of the plaintiff; besides, the plaintiff is not deprived of his bonds, and has sustained no injury; but if the defendant should be compelled to pay a larger sum than the bonds were worth, in consequence of this difference in the rate of interest, he would by so much be a loser. It was by the plaintiff's own fault that the contract failed, and he must therefore abide by the consequence.

COLTMAN, J.—Although a bond cannot be varied by a parol contract, yet as what took place was all at one time, and formed one transaction, I have no doubt that in Chancery the party would be bound to accept only 4l. per cent. interest on these bonds. I think, also, the jury have come to a reasonable conclusion. The defendant was buying bonds, which he supposed were at 5l. per cent. interest. The circumstance of the bonds being kept for two days has certainly an operation in the case; it has a tendency to shew that the bargain was not for bonds at 5l. per cent. interest; but still it does not preclude the defendant from shewing what was the nature of the contract.

CRESSWELL, J.—The bonds offered for sale were described as Old Pier bonds; now, according to the evidence, that meant bonds which bore a rate of interest at 5l. per cent. The plaintiff only intended to sell bonds which bore 4l. per cent. interest, and there is no fraud imputed to him; yet having, in fact, described them as carrying a greater rate of interest, both parties must be considered as contracting on the footing of such description. The jury have not found any acceptance by the defendant, or his agent, of the specific bonds in question, therefore, unless they are bonds which bear the rate of 5l. per cent. interest, the defendant is not bound to accept them. These are not such bonds; the memorandum on the back is, I think, a binding agreement to accept only 4l. per cent. interest, and is within the authority of the case Burgh and Others v. Preston (8 T. R. 483); at all events it is binding in equity.

Rule discharged.

NEEDHAM v. BRISCOE.

Practice—An application to enlarge a peremptory undertaking, if made only the day before the day of trial, is too late.

Gaselee, Serjt. moved to enlarge the plaintiff's peremptory undertaking. The undertaking had been to try at the second sittings in London, being the day subsequent only to that of the present application.

By the COURT.—The application is made too late. If we were to grant a rule to shew cause, the plaintiff would have all the benefit of a rule absolute.

Rule refused.

HANES v. KIMBER.—Byles, Serjt. (Kinglake with him) shewed cause against a rule for setting aside verdict found for the plaintiff as being against evidence. Talfourd, Serjt. in support of rule. Rule discharged.

WOOD v. WEATHERBY and ANOTHER.—The interpleader rule in this case was enlarged until the disposal of the cause in the Court of Exchequer.

Rule accordingly.

GERISH v. CHARTIER.—Shee, Serjt. moved, in behalf of the plaintiff, for a rule for a new trial, on the ground of verdict being against evidence, and of inadmissible evidence having been received at the trial. Rule nisi on the latter ground only.

Friday, June 7.

BEDELLS and OTHERS v. MASSEY.

Pleading—Issuable plea—Several pleas involving same defence.

Byles, Serjt. applied for a rule to shew cause why the first and third pleas pleaded in this action should not be struck out, and the plaintiffs be at liberty to sign judgment.

The declaration was for an infringement of a patent. The defendant was under terms to plead issuably, and, amongst other pleas, had pleaded, 1st, that the Queen did not grant the letters patent; 3rd, that the invention was not an improvement; and, 6th, that the invention was of no use to the public. The objection to the first plea was, that it was not issuable, as the existence of letters patent cannot be put in issue. Hynde's case (4 Rep. 71), and Eden's case (6 Rep. 15) were cited. The third plea was objected to as involving the same defence contained in the sixth plea, and also because not pleaded in the terms of the abstract of pleas delivered.

Rule nisi.

DOE dem. SMITH v. ROE.

Practice—Special service of declaration in ejectment.

Dowling, Serjt. moved for judgment against the casual ejector.

The affidavit stated that the deponent found the house of the tenant shut up, the doors being fastened, and having ascertained that the tenant might possibly be found at a certain public-house, where he called sometimes, the deponent went there several times, but had been unable to meet with him, and that the tenant was in debt, and keeping out of the way of his creditors. The deponent had attached a copy of the declaration to each of the doors of the house. The premises had not been abandoned by the tenant to enable proceedings to be taken as on a vacant possession.

The COURT granted a rule nisi to be served personally, if possible; but if not, then in the same way as the copy of the declaration had been, by fixing same to the premises. Rule nisi accordingly.

Re MARY ANN KIRBY.

Conveyance by married woman under the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74, s. 91.

Dowling, Serjt. moved for an order under the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74, s. 91, to enable a married woman to mortgage her share in certain property without her husband's concurrence. The affidavit of the wife stated that the husband had, subsequently to the marriage, become insane, and had left the country for Calcutta some years ago, and it was not then known where he was. Rule granted.

JENKYNS v. USBORN.—Shee, Serjt. (Addison with him) was heard for the plaintiff, and Byles, Serjt. (with Ogle) for the defendant. Cur. adv. vult.

Saturday, June 8.

BELCHER and ANOTHER v. LAMBERT.

Dowling, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence, and misdirection.

Byles, contrà.

By the COURT.—It appears to us the present case is one for the consideration of another jury. The proper point was not submitted to the jury. If the plaintiffs think it right, they are at liberty to amend their particulars. Rule absolute.

FITZGERALD v. FITZGERALD.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi why an order, made by Cresswell, J. on the 31st May, respecting a writ of capias, should not be quashed, and the bail-bond delivered up to be cancelled. Rule nisi.

EDWARDS v. BATES and ANOTHER.

Assumpsit for money had and received. Plea, never indebted. The plaintiff had authorized the defendants, by a deed under seal, to receive a sum of money on his account, and after paying the costs and charges of the trust, to pay over to a banking company who had made certain advances to the plaintiff, whatever might be due. The defendants received, by virtue of this deed, upwards of 700l. on the 7th April, and paid to the bank 500l. On the 10th of the same month, the plaintiff brought an action for the surplus for money had and received. Held, that money had and received would not lie.

Talfourd, Serjt. (Butt with him) shewed cause.—If the action would lie at all, it must be in covenant on the deed. In every case, with one single exception, where the rights of parties arise upon a deed, the action must be upon the deed itself. (Atty v. Parish, 1 Bos. & Pul. N. R. 104; 8 Mod. 807.) Money had and received will not lie, because at the time of writ sued out the relation of trustee and cestui que trust existed, and no sum certain ascertained to be due. It cannot be contended this was not a covenant to pay over the surplus. This case falls strongly within Filmer v. Burnby (2 M. & G. 529); Shack v. Anthony (1 M. & S. 573); Foster v. Allanson (2 T.R. 479); White v. Parkin (12 East, 578); Roper v. Holland (3 A. & E. 99); Harvey and Others v. Archbold (3 B. & C. 626). In this case there is no money ascertained at all in the defendants' hands. When the defendants received the money, their first duty was to pay the bank, then to ascertain the costs and charges. (Holt, N. P. 500; English v. Blundell, 8 C. & P. 332.)

Atcherley, Serjt. (Peacock with him) contrà.—The action will lie against all persons who take an assignment of a chose in action. The defendants had no legal interest, but merely an assignment. They were authorized to receive a sum not exceeding 500l. and they have received more than 700l. The right to the surplus is in the assignor. (Burnett v. Lynch, 5 B. & C. 611; Tilson v. Warwickshire Gas Company, 7 D. & Ry. 381.) There is no trust to pay over the surplus to the plaintiff. Supposing the action to be wrongly brought, that defence cannot be gone into on the present pleadings. The declaration is in debt for money had and received; and the answer to that is, never indebted. Now some money has been received on the part of the defendants. The object of the new rules was to simplify the question to be tried; and the question ought then to have been, deed or no deed. In the first place, there is no covenant; and, in the second place, if there is, the cause of action does not arise upon the deed.

TINDAL, C. J. delivering judgment.—This is an action of debt, to recover money had and received by the defendant to the use of the plaintiff. The principle on which this action is maintainable is, that the defendant ex æquo et ex bono ought to pay over to the plaintiff such money as the defendant may have belonging to the plaintiff. I have never known an instance where the action has been brought unless there has been something definite and certain to be paid over. This is a case in which, after the money has come into the hands of the defendants, there was something to be done before any part became the money of the plaintiff. It was shewn from the deed, that the defendants were to receive a sum of money on certain specific trusts. First, to pay all the costs and charges of the trust; 2nd, to pay the banking company, represented by Bates, the defendant, all the advances which had been made; and then comes the third trust, on which the plaintiff's right to recover rests, namely, that the surplus should be paid over to him. The plaintiff says, "By your receiving the money, by bare operation of law, it becomes money had and received." The amount may have been completely absorbed. If this action is maintainable, it is the first of the kind brought. The present case comes within that class in which it is held, that where money is paid within a special contract, that there no right exists to bring an action for money had and received. What is this but money put into the hands of the two defendants to pay certain charges and debts due to third persons? Stewart v. Wilkins (Doug. 23), and Power v. Wells (Cowp. 818), decide, that where money is paid on a special contract, until that contract is rescinded, money had and received will not lie.

Coltman, J. and Cresswell, J. delivered judgment to the same effect. Rule discharged.

Gordon v. Ellis.

Where one of three partners receives advances on property given by him to be sold to an auctioneer, and the auctioneer does not know at the time it is the property of the partnership, such advances will be construed to be advances made in anticipation of sale.

Channell, Serjt. on Monday, May 27, shewed cause. This was a rule obtained by the defendants, why judgment should not be arrested, on the ground that, in the 5th and 6th pleas, which shewed a good defence to the action, the plaintiffs had traversed immaterial allegations, and had left in the residue of the pleas sufficient to constitute a good defence to the action.

The declaration was in assumpsit for money had and received by the defendants to the use of the plaintiffs. The fifth plea states that as to so much of the cause of action in the declaration mentioned, as related to the sum of 352*l*. 1s. 8d. parcel of the moneys in the declaration mentioned, the defendants say, that before the said money in the declaration mentioned had been had and received by the defendants, the plaintiffs carried on business as partners, and that the plaintiff, N. F. Gordon, with the privity and concurrence of the other partners, directed the defendants to put up the premises in question for sale; and that the defendants believed that the all property belonged to the said N. F. Gordon alone, and advanced divers sums of money, amounting to the sum in the plea mentioned, to the said N. F. Gordon; and that it was agreed the defendants should reimburse themselves out of the proceeds of the property so sold; and that they advanced the money to Gordon in consideration of this agreement; and also that the other plaintiffs suffered Gordon to deal with this property as if it was his own. On this, the defendants, &c.

The replication traversed, that the other plaintiffs suffered Gordon to deal with the property as his own. The sixth plea was the same in substance. In this case, there is no ground to interfere with the verdict. Even supposing there is any defect in the pleadings, a fair intendment must be made in favour of the verdict. The defendants must make out clearly that the residue of the plea not traversed afforded a defence to the action. The plea does not constitute a good defence; the allegation is an essential allegation to make the plea a good plea. It does not state express authority, nor such authority as might be implied. The plea seems to have been framed on the decision in George v. Claggett (7 T. R. 359); Baring v. Corrie (2 B. & Ald. 137); Carr v. Hinchcliff (4 B. & C. 533). It was there held the plea was good on the ground of permission; and that it stated an identity between the parties, such as to entitle the defendant to set up a debt as against the plaintiff in the action, and good as amounting to an extinguishment of the debt. Here, the defendants are setting up a right to detain a debt for a loan not made to the firm, but to one of the firm. It is contended, that the residue of the plea is an answer, because Gordon would be estopped from suing the defendants alone. The defendants do not allege fraud on the part of Gordon, but that there is an express agreement which binds the other partners. The pleas admit the defendants received the goods, and were to account to the plaintiffs for the sale. (Purchell v. Salter, 1 Q. B. 197.) As to a repleader, it cannot be allowed to the first party making a mistake. (Wordsworth v. Brown, 3 Dowl. 698; Plemer v. Ross, 5 Taunt. 387; Com. Dig. Pleader, R. 18.)

Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. contrà.—The statute of set-off does not apply. The principal question does not depend upon Gordon's authority, but the right to maintain this action jointly with the other partners, in contravention of his own agreement. In this case there was no notice and no fraud on the face of the agreement. It was in effect Gordon procuring money to pay the partnership debts. There being no fraud, the partners get an advance in anticipation of the proceeds of the sale. The agreement with Gordon was, specifically, that the money advanced should be in respect of the goods. If the jury had found there was no such agreement or any such advances made, the substantial parts of the special plea would have been negatived. The right of one partner to receive money on account of the partnership is equal to the right of all; and a party to a suit is concluded from availing himself of his own fraud. Where a plea does not disclose a good answer to the action, a party taking issue on an immaterial fact, and succeeding on that plea, the issue so taken does not give the Court the means of giving a good judgment. Once the party succeeds upon his issue, he may have a repleader. But where the issue is improperly taken, and does not give the Court power to give judgment, and the parts of the plea not traversed give a good answer, the party first mistaking is not entitled to a repleader. It is impossible to give judgment in this case to the plaintiff, because there is a good bar unanswered. Judgment ought to be arrested after the plaintiff has taken issue on an immaterial fact. (Plomer v. Ross, 5 Taunton, 386.)

Byles, Serjt. in support.—This is a case in which general damages have been given on several pleas, some bad and some good. A repleader is not grantable to the person who makes the first fault in pleading. (Negelen v. Mitchell, 7 M. & W. 622.) Richmond v. Healey (1 Stark. 202) is a strong authority in favour of the defendants. Cur. adv. vult.

Tindal, C. J. delivering judgment of the Court. —This case comes before us on a rule to shew cause why judgment for the plaintiff should not be arrested, for so much of the demand as is contained in the introductory part of the fifth and sixth pleas, those pleas containing the same ground of defence, the decision on one governing the other three. The argument is, that although the replication puts in issue a part, enough remains on the plea to form a good bar to the action; and that the defendants have a right to pray judgment. One of the questions is, admitting the allegations in the plea to be sufficient, what will be the legal result as to the plaintiff's right of judgment? The plea is not intended to be a plea of set-off; it purports to be a plea setting up a right to retain a part of the money to the use of the plaintiffs, on a special agreement made with Gordon, one of the plaintiffs? We think the arguments urged by the plaintiffs' counsel, as to the right of the defendants to set-off, inapplicable to this case. The real point is, whether the agreement disclosed by the plea was one which Gordon had a right to make, and was one which bound the other partners. Looking at the pleas not traversed, it appears that the plaintiffs were co-partners in their trade; that the plaintiff Gordon, with the privity of the other partners, employed the defendants to sell the property; that the defendants believed Gordon to be the sole owner of the property, and that the defendants, having no knowledge that the other plaintiffs had any interest in it, before the property was sold, did, at the request of Gordon, lend him several sums of money in the pleas mentioned, and that the agreement was, they (the defendants) might retain and deduct, and reimburse themselves out of the proceeds of the property so sold, and that the loans and advances were made on the faith and confidence of such agreement. And we think the fact stated in the defence a good answer. If Gordon had been the sole plaintiff, he could not have maintained this action; and if he could not have sued alone, why should the case be different because he sues conjointly with his partners? Gordon was the acting partner, and no doubt was authorized by the others to sell the property. The goods are allowed to be sold by anticipation. There was no averment to the contrary, and it was consistent with the allegations in the pleas that the advances were necessary for the purposes of the business. We see no reason why the agreement should not be binding on the firm. In Jones v. Yates (9 B. & C. 532), it was held that the indorsement of a bill belonging to the partnership by one partner, in discharge of his own private debt, without the knowledge of the other, was a fraud on the other partner; but in that case the two partners could not bring trover. Lord Tenterden, in giving judgment, said, "We are not aware of any instance in which a person has been allowed, as plaintiff in a court of law, to rescind his own act, on the ground that such act was a fraud on some other person, whether the party seeking to do this has sued in his own name only or jointly with such other person." But in the present case there is no imputation of fraud. Sparrow and Others v. Chisman (9 B. & C. 241), and Wallace v. Kelsall (7 M. & W. 264), are equally strong authorities; in the latter, an accord and satisfaction with one of the plaintiffs, by a part payment in cash and a set-off of a private debt due from that one to the defendant, was held a good answer to a joint action by the three plaintiffs, and that on the principle that if one of the plaintiffs be barred, he cannot recover. We therefore think enough of the plea left unanswered to bar the demand of the plaintiffs. As to the second point, whether judgment should be arrested, the replication traversed the plea that Gordon was suffered and permitted to deal with the property as his own; on which issue was joined; but this traverse taken by the plaintiff being on an immaterial point, it was a point which, after the finding of the jury, decided nothing between the parties. It ought to be observed, it would be decisive if the agreement set out had been denied. In the present state of the record, we think we ought not to arrest the judgment, but award judgment of repleader.

Judgment of repleader accordingly.

Bedells v. Massey.

Issuable plea—Non concessit.

Channell, Serjt. shewed cause why certain pleas should not be struck out because at variance with the abstract: and why the plea of non concessit should not remain. [Byles, Serjt.—My objection is, that the plea of non concessit is no plea at all.] The plea is a perfectly good plea, and was pleaded in a case tried before the Chief Justice of this court, in Nicholls v. London Caoutchouc Company. The plea puts the operation of the letters patent in question.

Byles, Serjt. contrà.—No one can declare on letters patent without making profert of them. There is no mode of putting them in issue. Nul tiel record even could not be pleaded. (Rex v. Amery, 1 T. R. 149).

Tindal, C. J.—The plea of non concessit is said by counsel to be a plea not allowed by law. We will not take upon ourselves to decide that question upon a motion like the present. As to the second objection, that the plea is at variance with the abstract; the abstract should not be critically considered: if it contain the substance of the plea, it is sufficient. I do not see in this case there is any violation of the new rules. Rule enlarged.

Wood v. Weatherby.

Rule enlarged.

Clinton v. Peabody.

Commission—Forgery.

Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause why certain American notes, on which forgery was alleged, should not be sent out of the custody of the Master of this court for the purposes of a commission.

Dowling, contrà. Rule absolute.

Evans v. Robertson.

Rule discharged.

Hawker v. Bownass.

New trial—Verdict against evidence.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence.

Tindal, C. J.—The difficulty at the trial was produced by the plaintiff himself, who had a receipt, but preferred calling witnesses. Rule refused.

Goslin v. Bidder.

This case was argued by Talfourd, Serjt. and Channell, Serjt. upon affidavits.

By the Court.—We think the circumstances of this case render it necessary to be submitted to the investigation of another jury. It may be suggested that where so much lies in the privity of the parties themselves, it would be better to submit the case to arbitration, with power to examine both plaintiff and defendant. Rule absolute.

Lunn v. Thornton.

Channell, Serjt. shewed cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and instead thereof, a verdict entered for the plaintiff, with 5*l*. damages.

Byles, Serjt. contrà. Cur. adv. vult.

Beverley v. Lee.

Rule nisi; cause to be shewn at chambers.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Friday, June 7.

Allen v. Hopkins.

Where matter of defence is so informally pleaded as to leave it in doubt whether it is a bar to the whole action or only to the further maintenance, yet if it appears distinctly to be either one or the other, it can only be objected to upon special demurrer, and is no ground for judgment non obstante veredicto. It is a good plea to an action for goods sold and delivered, that the defendant bought the goods from the plaintiff as the goods of A B, deceased, whose executor the defendant believed the plaintiff to be, and that they were the goods of A B, and that the defendant has paid the real executor, being a person other than the plaintiff.

Crowder, Q.C., and ———, shewed cause against a rule for judgment non obstante veredicto.

Butt, contrà.

Action for goods sold and delivered.

The plea alleged in substance that the goods were, before and at the time of the sale, parcel of the estate and effects of John Allen, who died intestate; that the plaintiff, pretending to be the executor of the said J. A. sold the goods to defendant; that plaintiff was not executor, and had no right to sell the goods; and that, after the sale, letters of administration were granted to G. N. who thereupon became entitled to the said sum, and demanded it of the defendant, who paid the same; and that G. N. accepted such payment in satisfaction and discharge.

It was contended that this plea was no answer; that the defendant, having contracted with the plaintiff, was estopped from afterwards setting up the title of a third party; that if he had any remedy, it was by a cross action against the plaintiff, and that the principle of caveat emptor applied to the transaction. It was also contended that the plea did not sufficiently shew that the payment to the real executor was before action brought.

The other side argued that the substance of the plea was a good answer to the action, and that, although the last objection might have availed on special demurrer, it was cured by verdict, and could not be taken at this stage of the case.

By the COURT.—There can be no doubt that this plea would have been bad upon special demurrer. It discloses matter of defence which can only be sufficient assuming the payment to have been before action. But it is left in doubt whether it was made before action or only before plea pleaded. Upon this defect we were asked to enter judgment non obstante veredicto. It seemed to the Court they could hardly do so where, by the facts stated in the plea, and either admitted by the replication or found by the jury, there appeared to have been a payment either in bar of the action or of its further maintenance. If we find that there is a plea which bars the plaintiff from further maintaining his action, it would be very inconsistent with our opinion and with the authorities to give him judgment non obstante veredicto. The plea alleges that the person really entitled to the goods was the representative of the deceased, whom defendant had paid. The defendant says, in fact, that he has paid the party to whom the goods belonged, and who would be entitled to bring trover for them if not paid. It was argued that the defendant's proper remedy was by a cross action for misrepresentation. It appears to us that he was placed in no such position. He had a right simply to say—" You had no authority to sell. The property in the goods was in another. I have discovered that, and I have paid him the value." It was also put on the ground of caveat emptor. We entirely dissent from that application of the doctrine. That doctrine does not mean that it is for the buyer of goods to take care that the seller has a title to them. It applies not at all to the title, but to the value and condition of the goods. Nor do we think the doctrine of estoppel can be at all applied to this case. In substance, then, we hold this to be a good answer, and we think the formal objection comes too late.

Saturday, June 8.

PEEL v. WEATHERBY.

An accidental allusion, in the heat of argument, by a junior counsel to an affidavit which his leader had previously determined not to use, will not bind his client to file it. An affidavit must be made by a claimant under the Interpleader Act before an issue can be directed.

Ogle, on the part of the defendant, had applied for and obtained an interpleader rule, and an issue had been directed between Colonel Peel and Mr. Wood, to try whether Running Rein, the horse which came in first at the late race for the Derby stakes, was foaled in 1841, and whether his sire was Saddler and his dam Mab. Upon the argument upon that rule, Martin, Q.C. appeared for Colonel Peel, and Platt, Q.C. and James, for Mr. Wood. During the argument, James had made some allusion to an affidavit which had been sworn on the part of Mr. Wood, but which his counsel had previously determined not to use. The affidavit had not been filed.

Martin, Q. C. now applied that it might be filed before his client accepted the issue.

Platt, Q. C. shewed cause, and contended that he, as the leader of the case, having determined that the affidavit should not be used, he was not bound by an accidental mention of it by his junior.

The Court being of this opinion,

Martin then objected, that he was not bound to accept the issue at all, unless an affidavit was filed on behalf of Mr. Wood, the claimant. He cited Power v. Leek (3 A. & E. 316), which he contended was a direct authority to shew that an affidavit must be filed, in addition to the statute itself, 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 58, which clearly shews that it is necessary.

The Court were of this opinion, and ordered an affidavit to be filed.

ALDERSON, B. then inquired whether any alteration would be necessary in the issue.

Martin, Q.C.—I believe not, my Lord.

ALDERSON, B.—If there were, I should for one most vehemently protest against this Court being made a party to any argument not to set up illegality in this transaction. I think the time of the Court ought not to be occupied in settling matters illegal in themselves. I do not mean at present to say whether this is such a case or not; but I wish to express this opinion. Rule accordingly.

STEPHENS v. THORN.

It is sufficient to entitle a party to apply to set aside proceedings in a cause, if he shews that he is the person served with process, though he may not have been the intended defendant. It is an irregularity in a writ of summons to omit the name of the court in which the defendant is required to appear.

Humfrey shewed cause against a rule obtained by Miller, to set aside service of a writ of summons.

The writ commanded the person to whom it was directed "to appear in her Majesty's Court of ———, at Westminster," omitting the name of the court. It was tested in the name of Sir F. Pollock.

Humfrey now objected, that the affidavit upon which the rule was obtained did not state that the party making the application was defendant in the suit, but only that he had been served with a copy of the writ, and cited Johnson v. Smallwood (2 Dowl. 588), and France v. Wright (3 Dowl. 325). He also contended, that the teste of the writ sufficiently shewed out of what court it issued, and that the omission in the body of it did not amount to an irregularity.

Miller, contrà, argued, that in the cases cited, the parties applying to set aside the writ neither shewed themselves to be defendants nor to have been served with process. The service of a writ upon a party makes him defendant in the action, and, unless he applies to correct the misnomer, the plaintiff might have execution against the party served by the name in the writ. As to the other point, it is a clear irregularity.

By the COURT.—On the first point, the party sued having been served with process, would be bound to appear in some name or other, or take the consequences. In shewing that he has been served, therefore, though he does not shew himself to have been the party intended, he does enough to entitle him to make this application. As to the other question, the Court think that when a form is given by Act of Parliament, it is better to hold that it shall be strictly followed. Rule absolute.

Monday, June 10.

STOPPANI v. CATTANEO.

The powers of a single judge under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, s. 2, to act in questions of interpleader relating to sheriffs, are independent of the Court, and they have no power to review his exercise of such jurisdiction.

Roebuck, Q.C. moved to set aside an order of Parke, B. barring a claimant under the clauses relating to sheriffs in the Interpleader Acts, 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 58, s. 6, and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, s. 2. He was proceeding to state the grounds upon which he sought to rescind the order.

ALDERSON, B.—Have you considered, Mr. Roebuck, whether the Court has any jurisdiction over this order? The Acts of Parliament give the power either to the Court or to a judge, and the power of the judge is altogether independent of that of the Court.

The rest of the Court concurred in this view of the clauses in question. Rule refused.

ATKINSON v. WEBSTER.

A rule to discharge a rule for a new trial granted upon payment of costs, because they have not been paid, is a rule nisi, and not absolute in the first instance.

Watson, Q.C. moved to discharge a rule of this Court for a new trial on payment of costs; the costs not having been paid within a reasonable time after demand. He contended that the rule should be absolute in the first instance, and cited Champion v. Griffiths (1 Dowl. N. S. 319), in which Patteson, J. says—" I think this is a rule which may be absolute in the first instance for discharging plaintiff's rule. If there is any occasion for altering it, he may apply to the Court for that purpose."

By the COURT.—It is better to grant a rule to shew cause, because why should we compel the party to make a special application to the Court when he has violated no positive rule of Court? Rule nisi.

Tuesday, June 11.

JERVIS v. SOUTH.

A judgment upon a warrant of attorney executed in vacation in the usual form authorizing it to be signed as of the preceding Term, or of a subsequent one, may be regularly signed in that vacation as of the preceding Term. Semble, it could not be done in a subsequent vacation.

Watson, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Wood to set aside a judgment signed on a warrant of attorney. The warrant of attorney was dated in July 1841, in vacation, and authorized the persons therein named, or any other attorneys, in the usual form, to appear for the defendant as of Trinity Term last, Michaelmas Term next, or any subsequent Term, &c." Judgment was signed upon this warrant in August 1841, in vacation, and it was now contended that since the rule of court, H. T. 4 Wm. 4, 23, by which judgments are to be entered of the day, whether in term or vacation, when signed, and shall not have relation to any other day, it could only be signed as of the Term by being signed in Term, and could, therefore, not be regularly signed at all in vacation; citing Rayment v. Smith (3 Dowl. N. S. 166, and Cobbold v. Chilver (4 Scott, N. R. 678).

For the plaintiff it was argued that upon such a construction no judgment could be signed at all, because, in the sense contended for by the other side, a judgment cannot be signed since the rule as of a term at all, but that at all events it might be done by consent of the parties; and that all the cases cited were where the judgment was signed in a subsequent vacation, whereas here it was done in the same vacation, and of the preceding Trinity term, according to the very words of the warrant, and the only construction which could give any effect at all to them.

By the COURT.—In Cobbold v. Chilver, the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas took the very distinction pointed out by Mr. Watson. No judgment at all could be signed in this case of the preceding Trinity term, which was past when the warrant of attorney was executed, unless it were to be signed in vacation. We must, therefore, take that to have been the meaning of the parties when they provided for a judgment being so signed. By the consent of the parties, there is nothing to prevent a judgment from being signed still as of a preceding term, although it would only be entered of and have relation to the day when actually signed. There is a clear distinction between the first vacation and a subsequent one. Rule discharged with costs.

BAIL COURT.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

Saturday, June 8.

REG. v. JOHN HARRIS, Esq. Mayor of Abingdon.

Application for a criminal information.

A party applying for leave to file a criminal information is bound to come to the Court at the earliest period.

F. V. Lee moved, on behalf of a Mr. Vestbrook, for a rule nisi for leave to file a criminal information against the above gentleman for certain alleged misconduct in relation to a judicial inquiry before him. It appeared that the alleged impropriety came to the knowledge of the applicant about the middle of April last.

WIGHTMAN, J.—Why did you not come earlier?

Lee.—The delay is not unreasonable. On the 4th of June we gave the mayor copies of our affidavits, with a notice that this application would be made as soon after as possible.

WIGHTMAN, J.—You shew no reason why you did not come here before. You allow the whole of Easter Term to elapse, and make the application so late in this one, that cause cannot be shewn until the next. It is not right that such a charge as this should be hanging over this gentleman's head all the long vacation; the rule is, that you must come either within the Term or give some excuse for not doing so, and come sufficiently early in the next as to enable the defendant to shew cause in the term. Rule refused.

FORBES v. WHALLEY.

Where a rule is discharged with costs, the Court will not, on the suggestion that it has been so discharged upon the strength of affidavits which it is suggested were false, and in respect of which an indictment for perjury will be preferred, interfere to postpone the payment of costs.

R. Allen applied for a rule that no taxation of costs subsequent to the issuing of the writ of summons should take place, and that the defendant may pay ir o court the costs of the rule discharged herein on a former day, and the debt on which the action was brought. On a former occasion, a rule had been obtained by the defendant to set aside the proceedings in the action, on the ground of there having been no service of the writ of summons. In answer to this rule, an affidavit was made by the party who originally swore to the service of the writ of summons, distinctly averring personal service. Upon this the rule was discharged with costs. It was now argued, that as gross perjury must have been committed by the one party or the other, and as it was the intention of the defendant to prefer an indictment for perjury, this rule ought to be granted, and the ulterior disposal of the costs and debt to abide the event of the criminal proceedings.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I cannot interfere; the rule has been discharged, and the costs follow as an incident. I cannot enter into the question of perjury, and were I to grant this application, I might be called upon to do so in every case, and motions would never be final.

Rule refused.

REG. v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF WARRINGTON UNION, LANCASHIRE.

Mandamus to guardians of a poor-law union, commanding them to appoint an officer, as directed by the commissioners.

Tomlinson moved for a mandamus to be directed to the above parties, commanding them to appoint an officer, called "the superintendent of pauper labour," as required by an order of the Poor-Law Commissioners, and with which order they had neglected to comply. Rule nisi.

Monday, June 10.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

THE OFFICE OF JUDGE PROMOTED by BURDER v. HODGSON.

Prohibition to the Court of Arches to restrain it from further proceeding in a suit.

Erle, Q. C. moved for a rule nisi for a writ of prohibition to the Court of Arches, to restrain further proceedings in this suit, on the ground that the libel sets out an indictable offence, which should be submitted to a jury at common law before it could be made the ground of deprivation by an ecclesiastical court. (Reg. v. Marsh, 5 Ad. & Ellis, 602; Rogers' Ecclesiastical Law, p. 715.) Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE MAYOR AND TOWN COUNCIL OF DOVOR.

Ex parte HENRY HART.

Certiorari to remove orders of a town-council for the payment of money, in order to quash same.

Stephens moved for a rule nisi for a certiorari, to remove into this court 104 orders of the town-council of Dover for the payment by the borough treasurer of 3,821*l.* 17s. 10½d. out of the borough fund. The orders in question were of three classes.

1st class.—A certain order made for the payment of 772*l.* 16s. 7d. due in respect of the constabulary force from June 6, 1843, to June 6, 1844; the objection to which order was, that though it purported to be signed by three members of the council, pursuant to the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 59, one of the three had ceased to be a member of the town-council from October 1841, and was not therefore qualified to sign.

2nd class.—102 orders; objected to as having been paid out of money not legally applicable, and not made by an order of the town-council.

3rd class.—An order for the payment to Mr. Ledger of the amount of his annuity, granted as compensation for the loss of his office; the objection to which was, that, like the first-mentioned order, one of the three persons purporting to be town-councillors who signed it had ceased to be a member at the time the amount became due, in respect of which the order was made, the order having been post-dated, and the town-councillor having died before the amount was due and payable.

WIGHTMAN, J. not feeling satisfied of the sufficiency of the affidavits in support of the objection to the second class of orders, gave leave to have the case again mentioned upon amended affidavits, but granted

Rule nisi upon the 1st and 3rd objections.

Ex parte CHARLES HALL.

Habeas corpus and certiorari to bring up the defendant and the depositions upon which he was committed to take his trial in Kent for murder, with the view to his being committed to Newgate, to be tried at the Central Criminal Court.

Charnock moved for writs of habeas corpus and certiorari, under the following circumstances. The wife of the defendant had been found dead at Wimbledon, in Surrey, under circumstances which gave rise to a coroner's inquest. Upon viewing the body, and hearing surgical and other testimony, the jury returned a verdict to the effect that the deceased died from natural causes. Subsequently, the husband of the deceased was taken into custody at Seven Oaks, in Kent, on a charge of having murdered his wife, and was taken before a magistrate of that county, who committed him to the county gaol at Maidstone, to take his trial at the next Kent assizes, and who bound over a policeman as prosecutor, and the various witnesses, to appear and prosecute, and give evidence accordingly. From the foregoing facts it was clear, that the offence (if any) having been committed in Surrey, the prisoner could not be indicted for it in Kent; and Wimbledon, in Surrey—the place where the offence was committed (if at all)—being within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, these writs were sought with the view of having the prisoner committed to Newgate, in order to take his trial at the present sessions, instead of being kept in confinement until the next assizes.

Writs granted, returnable on Wednesday.

Tuesday, June 11.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF THE NORTH RIDING OF YORKSHIRE.

Ex parte EDWARD PECKHAM.

Motion for a certiorari to remove order of affiliation, the same having been made without corroborative testimony.

Martin, Q.C. moved for a certiorari, to remove an order of affiliation of petty sessions, made by the above justices, under the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 72, and 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85. The principal objection to the order was, that it had been made upon the uncorroborated testimony of the female alone, contrary to the provisions of the 72nd section of the first-mentioned Act. At the hearing, the female deposed, amongst other facts, to the present applicant having been one evening discovered by his mother in her (the deponent's) bed-room, whereupon the justices held that it was the applicant's duty to produce his mother to negative the fact, if it were not true; and, in the absence of such negative testimony, they made an order of affiliation without any other testimony than that of the woman herself. It was also objected that it did not appear by the order that the union was within the district for which the justices acted.

Rule granted.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF CORNWALL.

Certiorari to remove two orders made in respect of a lunatic pauper, in order to quash same for defects upon their face.

Greenwood moved for a certiorari to bring up an order of Petty Sessions, and an order of Quarter Sessions confirming the same, with the view to their being quashed. An order had, previous to the above ones, been made to remove a lunatic pauper to the county lunatic asylum, and, by virtue of the 42nd section of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, a subsequent order of Petty Sessions (one of the two sought to be removed) was made, adjudicating upon the settlement of the pauper, and directing the parish to pay the expense of his maintenance, &c. By the above section, the justices have only power to make such order when no adjudication of the settlement has before been made, and the objection to the order (which was confirmed at the quarter sessions) was, that it did not shew upon its face that such settlement had not been ascertained.

WOODWARD and ANOTHER v. MEREDITH.

JUDGMENT.

The Court will stay proceedings on a sci. fa. where the plaintiff has elected to prove his debt under the defendant's fiat, though he only proceeds for his costs, which he has not been enabled to prove, by reason of the fiat having issued before he has signed judgment.

This was a motion to stay all proceedings on a sci. fa. An action had been commenced by the plaintiffs against the defendant in 1842, on two bills of exchange for 18*l.* each, which was tried on the 24th Nov. following, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiffs. On the 30th of Nov. a fiat in bankruptcy issued against the defendant, and, on the 17th of February, 1843, he passed his final examination, but has not yet obtained his certificate. On the 9th of January, 1843, judgment was signed for 68*l.* 6*s.* the amount of the debt and costs. On the 10th, the plaintiffs proved for the amount of their debt, 32*l.* the commissioner refusing the proof of the costs, on the ground that the judgment (which alone entitled them to their costs) was signed after the issuing of the fiat. On the 3rd of February last, the sci. fa. issued to recover (as it was sworn) the amount only of the costs. A rule having been obtained to stay these proceedings (see 3 Law T. 40, 80), it was contended, in opposition to the application, by Henderson, that the defendant should plead the election of the defendants to come in under the fiat, in bar to the action, and that there is no instance of the Court thus interfering. (Harley v. Greenwood, 5 B. & A. 95; Watson v. ——, 1 B. & Al.; —— v. Kelly, 1 B. & P. 302; Hill v. ——, 1 B. & P. 424; Percy v. Powell, 3 B. & P.; Ransford v. Barren, 7 Dowl. 807, also in the Jurist, 3 vol. 655; 2 Taunt. 246; Baker v. ——, 2 Bing. 41; 1 Atkins.)

In support of the rule, Gray distinguished the above cases from the law as it at present exists, those cases having been decided when the proof by a creditor was not an election, and which was first made such by 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, s. 14, re-enacted in the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 59. (Ex parte Capot, 1 Atkins, 219; Ex parte Lindsey, 1 Atk. 220; Ex parte Dorvillier, 1 Atk. 221; Cook's Bankrupt Law, 5th ed. before 49 Geo. 3, pp. 130, 133; Olivier v. Ames, 8 T. R. 364; 11 Ves. jun. 203; Ex parte Warwick, 14 Ves. jun. 136, all before the 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, since when the law has been otherwise; Atherstone v. Huddlestone, 2 Taunt. 181; Singing v. Comyn, 2 Taunt. 246; Harley v. Greenwood, 5 B. & Ald. 95; Adams v. Bridger, 8 Bing. 314; Ransford v. Barren, 7 Dowl. more correctly reported in the Jurist, 3 vol. 655, also in 3 L. J. N. S. Ex. 254; —— v. Pringle, 1 N. R. 190; Dimsdale v. ——, 2 B. & B. 8; Watson v. Medex, 1 B. & Ald. 121; see 2 Law T. 40 & 80.)

His LORDSHIP now gave judgment, and held that the words of the 59th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, are too clear to leave any doubt in his mind that the plaintiffs had no right to proceed with this action, and that as the plaintiffs had done that which was a legal relinquishment of their suit, he ought to interfere to stay these proceedings.

Rule absolute, without costs.

THOMAS v. STANNAWAY.

Altering teste of a writ of trial.

JUDGMENT.

On a former day, H. Wilde obtained a rule calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the writ of trial and all subsequent proceedings should not be set aside for irregularity. In the issue delivered, the teste of the writ of trial was set out as of the 16th of February, and the return day the 19th following, whereas the actual teste of the writ of trial was the 14th of February, and the return day the 16th of January next. There being no jury to try the cause on the 16th, before the Secondary, the cause was made a remanet, and the plaintiff's attorney resealed the writ and altered the return to the [illegible] of February, and caused a fresh indorsement to be made as to when it was to be executed.

In support of the rule, it was contended, by H. Wilde, that there was a fatal variance between the issue and the writ of trial, and that the plaintiff's attorney had no authority to make the alteration in the return-day as he had done.

Against the rule, Thomas argued that the variance relied upon was immaterial, and that the plaintiff's attorney was perfectly justified in making the alteration. (See 2 Law T. 186.)

His LORDSHIP now delivered his judgment, and directed the rule to be discharged, on the ground that, however irregular it was for an attorney to alter the return of a writ without the order of a judge, yet that, as this amounted only to an irregularity, it was waived by the lapse of time.

Rule discharged with costs.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF WIGAN.

Certiorari to remove an order of justices.

Where a certiorari is applied for to remove an order of justices, the affidavit should set out a copy of the order.

Where an order of justices is not in writing, no certiorari can issue to bring it up.

Cowling shewed cause against a rule for a certiorari to remove an order of justices at a special sessions, holden pursuant to the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 96, s. 6, whereby a certain rate of 666*l.* was reduced to 474*l.* and he took as a preliminary objection, that the affidavit on which the rule was moved, did not set out the order itself, or give any reason for its not being set out, and that it did not therefore appear that there was in fact any order in writing.

Godson, Q. C.—It may be taken, as I believe was the fact, that there was no order in writing.

COLERIDGE, J.—Then how can I remove it by certiorari? If there is no order in writing, there is nothing to remove.

The rule must be discharged without costs.

Ex parte JACKLIN.

Conviction under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, s. 3 (the Masters and Servants Act).

Where the misconduct imputed to the servant amounts to a felony, the justices have no jurisdiction to convict under this Act.

Gunning shewed cause against the discharge of this prisoner (see 3 Law T. 185), and produced a conviction which he contended was good, and therefore cured all the defects of the warrant. The misconduct as alleged against the applicant was set out in the conviction, and was, that he opened his master's granary with a skeleton key, in the night, and purloined a quantity of barley, which he gave to his master's horses.

Whitehurst, contrà.

COLERIDGE, J. said that, although mere captious objections ought not to be countenanced, yet it nevertheless was necessary to restrain magistrates from perverting an Act of Parliament to purposes not within it, and that, admitting that the prisoner was a servant in the charge of horses, or a farm-servant, yet the evidence shewed that the offence was a felony, and not therefore the subject of a summary conviction under the Act.

Rule absolute for the discharge.

Ex parte JOHN FULLER.

Commitment under the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, for fraudulently conveying away property to cheat the landlord —Defects in commitment.

This prisoner had been committed to the county gaol for Huntingdon upon a conviction under the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, ss. 1 & 4, for clandestinely removing his goods to prevent his landlord from distraining upon them for arrears of rent, and had been adjudged to pay a sum of 20*l.* to his landlord (double the value of the goods), and in default to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for six months.

The objections to the commitment were,

1. That it did not appear that the two persons who made it were two magistrates authorized within the Act.
2. That it did not allege or find any rent due in respect of the premises.
3. That it did not find that the relation of landlord and tenant existed at the time of the removal.
4. That it did not appear that any complaint was made by the landlord or his bailiff or agent.
5. That it did not allege that the removal was after the rent became due.
6. That it was not shewn that the 20*l.* was unpaid.
7. That it was not alleged that any warrant had issued.
8. That it was not found that the present applicant had not sufficient goods whereon to distrain for the sum awarded.

The order itself was brought up, to which a variety of objections were made.

Henderson, in support of the return.

Gunning, contrà.

The rule was ultimately disposed of upon the argument upon the fourth objection; COLERIDGE, J. observing, that no rule is more certain than that a commitment must shew enough to give the justices jurisdiction; that in this case it is essential that there should be a complaint in writing; and that, far from there being any such in writing, there is no statement of any complaint at all; nor could it be intended that a complaint had, in fact, been made, upon the presumption, as it was argued, that the justices would not have acted without it; since such an intendment would be made in every case, and would have no limit.

Prisoner discharged.

BELL v. PAXTON.

All motions for new trials, whether the cause were tried at Nisi Prius or before the sheriff, must be made within four days of the return of the distringas or writ of trial, reckoning the return-day of the writ as one of such four.

Granger shewed cause against this rule, which was obtained by Watson, for a nonsuit or for a new trial. The cause was tried before the undersheriff of Durham, on the 22nd of May, and the writ was returnable on the 24th. This rule was moved for on the 29th of the same month. It was now contended as a preliminary objection, that the rule was moved for a day too late; that the motion should have been made within four days after the return of the writ, reckoning the day of the return as one. That this is clearly so in all causes tried at the assizes in which the distringases are always made returnable on the first day of the next term, when the motion must be made within the four first days of term, unless leave is obtained to make it after.

Watson, Q.C. contrà.—The four days are exclusive of the return-day, and mean four clear ones. There is sometimes great difficulty in getting the undersheriff's notes in time.

COLERIDGE, J.—That would be a ground for a special application to postpone the motion.

Watson.—The books of practice lay it down that the motion is to be made within four days after the return of the distringas. (Wheeler v. Whitmore, 4 Dowl. 245.)

COLERIDGE, J.—I think you are too late; the Master reports to me that you must include the return-day in the four. The rule, you say, is a strict one; it must, therefore, be held strict.

Rule discharged.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF FLINTSHIRE.

Ex parte The PARISH OF LLANGERNIEW, Appellants, and The PARISH OF CWM, Respondents.

Where an order of removal is quashed at sessions, and a subsequent order is obtained, which is appealed against, on the ground that it is made after a former order quashed, the respondents have a right to shew by evidence that such former order was not quashed on the merits.

On a former day, Townsend had obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus, commanding the above justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal. It appeared that on the 5th December, 1842, an order of removal had been made, and that on the 13th of March, 1833, notice and grounds of appeal were given. On the 30th March the respondents gave notice of abandonment, and it was then agreed that the order should be quashed. The appellants having entered their appeal at the previous sessions, appeared at the spring sessions and got the order quashed generally. Subsequently the respondents obtained another order of removal, which was appealed against, one of the grounds being that a former order of removal had been quashed. This appeal came on for trial at the last Michaelmas sessions, when the respondents tendered evidence to shew that the former order was quashed on a point of form only. The Court of Quarter Sessions, however, refused to hear evidence on this point, on the ground that evidence was inadmissible to qualify a former order. They, however, granted a case, which was not brought up, inasmuch as it was objectionable in form, and would not have been entertained.

Hayes, for the appellants, contended that the justices were right, and that as the consent to quash was general, the order of Sessions, being general, was correct, and could not be varied.

Townsend, for the respondents.—We had a right to shew on what grounds the former order was quashed; the Sessions were wrong in refusing to hear evidence. (Reg. v. The Justices of Lancashire, 2 D. & R.; Reg. v. Peranzabuloe, 3 Gale & Dav.; 13 L. J. M. C. 47.)

COLERIDGE, J.—The question is, whether the Sessions have heard this appeal or not? If they have, this Court will not interfere; but if they have not, it will do so. Now, have they heard the respondents? An order of removal is made, and agreed to be quashed by consent; it is accordingly quashed generally by the Sessions. Another order of removal is made to which there is an appeal, and the appellants go to the sessions and this order of Sessions is put in, and it appears to be general; and if you admit no evidence, it must be taken as conclusive. It was open, however, to the other side to shew that the order was not made upon the merits. It is said that this is a solemn order of Sessions, but this must be understood as the facts really were. I think that the Court ought to have received the evidence. I do not say how the decision of the Sessions will ultimately be, but the fault has been that they have refused to hear. If they had heard the evidence on which each party relied, and had then said "We will not disturb the order," this Court would not have interfered. I think, therefore, that the Sessions have not heard this case, and that they ought to hear it.

Rule absolute.

REG. v. ——.

Certiorari to remove from a borough, an indictment, when same shall have been found, on the ground of difficult points of law being likely to arise,—that he cannot have an impartial trial without removal, and to enable him to have the assistance of Queen's Counsel.

Erle, Q.C. moved, under the provisions of the 60 Geo. 3, c. 4, s. 4, for a writ of certiorari to remove an indictment which may be found at the ensuing sessions for the city and borough of Bath into this court, with the view to its being sent down for trial at the next assizes for the county of Somerset. This application was made at the instance of the defendant, who was stated to be a gentleman occupying a high position in the city of Bath, and who has recently been held to bail to answer a serious charge at the next sessions for that city. The motion was founded upon an affidavit, which stated that the defendant was anxious to have the professional assistance of Queen's Counsel; that difficult points of law were likely to arise; and that, from his position in the town, he would not be likely to have an impartial trial. Certiorari granted.

BADAM v. BATEMAN.

Where a writ of distringas to compel an appearance is made returnable in vacation, it is a void writ, and not merely an irregular one.

R. A. Price shewed cause against a rule to seaside the writ of distringas to compel an appearance, the objection to the writ being that it was made returnable on a day in vacation (15th May). He contended that this, being merely an irregularity, the det fendant should have come to the Court to have set the writ aside within eight days after it was executed (Alexander v. Smith, 1 Dow. & Low. 467); and that as he had not obtained his rule until the eleventh day after, he was too late.

Smythies, contrà.—The writ of distringas made returnable in vacation is altogether void (Kenworthy v. Peppial, 4 B. & A. 288), independently of which, the delay runs alone from the time when a party has notice of what has been done. The motion here was made on the eleventh day, Sunday having been the tenth, and the defendant having been from home when the distringas was executed.

WIGHTMAN, J.—It appears to me that this is a void process, and the rule must be made absolute.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.
(Before Mr. Commissioner Serjt. STEPHEN.)
Friday, June 7.
Re BARRETT (see ante, p. 140).

An apothecary may petition for protection from arrest notwithstanding his debts amount to 300l.

His HONOUR, in giving judgment, said—Two questions were raised in this case: one, whether the insolvent was an apothecary; the other, whether by being an apothecary, he was excluded from the benefit derived from petitioning this Court by the 1st clause of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116. Although my opinion was rather adverse to the insolvent's wishes on the first point, yet I do not consider it necessary to decide that now, for with reference to the second point, I think that the insolvent is not excluded from the benefit of this Act, even supposing he has been, and is, an apothecary. I have carefully considered the terms of the Act, and though it cannot be doubted but that the intention of the Legislature was to include this case, yet that intention is not expressed; this is an omitted case in the Act, and of course the insolvent is entitled to the benefit of his being an omitted case. The words of the statute are "not being a trader within the meaning of the statutes now in force relating to bankrupts;" and the question is, whether this insolvent, as an apothecary, does not fall within this description. I do not think he does; he was not a trader within the meaning of any statutes in force at the time of the passing of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116. At that time the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, was the latest Bankrupt Act; the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122 (by the 10th section of which apothecaries are made liable to the bankrupt laws) was not then in force. That Act came into force at the same time as the new Insolvent Debtors Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116. Prior to the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, it was decided that any apothecary, not trading as a druggist, was not liable to the bankrupt laws; it therefore follows that this insolvent is not a trader within the meaning of any bankrupt laws in force at the time of the passing of the Insolvent Act, and on this construction he is entitled to petition this Court. Final order granted.

Homes, in support of the insolvent.
Bridges, insolvent's attorney.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

No progress has been made with any measure of interest to our readers. The County Courts Bill bides the fate of the Debtors and Creditors Bill in the Lords. The Ecclesiastical Courts Bill is adjourned, and probably will be permitted to expire. Sir JAMES GRAHAM says that the Lord Chancellor intends to introduce a Bill for the regulation of Charitable Trusts, and to pass it this session; but with his lordship there is unfortunately a wide difference between saying and doing. He is pre-eminently a man of good intentions. We fear, from the delay in the Debtors Bill, that there is a hitch somewhere. We hope not, for it is a most important and useful measure, and as it affects so many interests, it ought not to be delayed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

POSTPONEMENT OF THE ENSUING ASSIZES.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12.—Mr. E. BULLER said that in consequence of an appeal which was shortly to be brought before the House of Lords, the judges were not able to fix a day for holding the assizes. The question which he wished to put to the right hon. baronet opposite (Sir James Graham) was, whether he was aware of the time when the appeal would come on before the Upper House?—Sir J. GRAHAM said that the appeal on the writ of error would arrive in town in the course of twenty four hours. On the part of Government, every effort would be made to expedite the hearing, so as, he believed, to enable the judges to proceed on circuit at a period not later than ten days after the usual time.

IRISH LAW COURTS BILL.

THURSDAY, JUNE 13.—Mr. FRENCH, seeing the right hon. gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his place, wished to ask him when it was intended to bring forward the Law Courts of Ireland Bill? A great number of persons were interested in the measure, and it had now been in consideration for three years. — The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, that he was waiting for the return of the Attorney-General for Ireland before taking any steps upon the subject, but that he would be able to give the hon. member an answer in the course of two days.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.

Mr. C. BERKELEY wished to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the reason of the delay to the introduction of the Charitable Trusts Bill into the other House? It would be in the recollection of the right hon. baronet that, on the discussion which had taken place upon the subject some time ago, the right. hon. baronet promised that the Bill would be introduced by the Lord Chancellor in a fortnight. Three weeks had passed away since then, and yet no step had been taken as to the introduction of the Bill. He therefore thought it fair to give notice that if the Government brought in a Bill on that subject during the present session, in the month of July, when the House must be very thin, he would think it his duty to throw every obstacle in the way of the Bill which the rules of the House would allow.—Sir J. GRAHAM stated, that the Bill was then in the course of preparation by the Lord Chancellor, and that he had every reason to think that the Bill would be passed through during the present session. The power of introducing a Bill was in the hands of the Government, but the power of passing it rested with the House. The hon. member was aware that a whole evening was passed in discussing the first clause of the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill, and it was therefore impossible to say when a measure might be carried through the legislature.—Sir G. GREY said, that the right hon. baronet might rest assured that the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill would always meet with the same opposition in the house; at least, unless its present form were very greatly modified. —Mr. T. DUNCOMBE expressed his surprise, that, after what had fallen from the right hon. baronet, the Charitable Trusts Bill had not been introduced into the House of Lords, especially as that House did not seem to have very much to do. (A laugh.)—Sir J. GRAHAM was quite ready to abide by his former assertion. The Lord Chancellor would introduce the measure into the House of Lords, and on the part of the Government there was a most earnest desire to pass it during that session. —Mr. C. BERKELEY wished to know whether the right hon. baronet could state positively when the Bill was to be introduced?—Sir J. GRAHAM said, that the Bill was in the course of preparation by the Lord Chancellor, and would be introduced as soon as it was complete.

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON GAMING.

The Select Committee appointed to inquire into the existing statutes against gaming of every kind, to ascertain to what extent these statutes are evaded, and to consider whether any and what amendment should be made in such statutes, have proceeded to inquire into the matters referred to them, and have agreed upon the following report:—

Upon the first branch of their inquiry your committee have obtained the assistance of Mr. Justice Patteson, and of Mr. Starkie and Mr. Bellenden Ker, the two commissioners for making a digest of the criminal law; and they beg to refer to the evidence of those three persons, and to the papers furnished by the two latter, and inserted in the appendix to this report, for a full and accurate detail of the enactments now in force which bear upon gaming of all kinds, and for a statement of the governing decisions which have been made by the courts of law upon cases which, under those enactments, have been brought before them for judgment.

Your committee feel that it would be impossible for them to give in a more condensed form the substance of the statements made by those learned persons; and that if they were to attempt to make an abstract of those statements, they would either mislead the House by an imperfect recital, or render their report unnecessarily long by superfluous repetition of matters contained in the appendix.

It will be seen from these statements, that upon some branches of this subject much uncertainty exists as to what the law, as bearing upon any given case, really is; and that some of the statutes do not contain within themselves sufficient elements for an application of their enactments, in all cases, without reference to the provisions of other statutes, which in their turn are sometimes of doubtful construction; and in regard to one branch of the subject, namely, the application of some of these statutes, and especially of the Act of the 9th of Anne, clause 14, to horseracing, there seems good grounds for believing that the decisions by which the courts are stated to have been guided are at variance with the intention of the framers of the law which has been so construed.

The laws now in force about gaming may be divided into four classes:—

1. Those of very early periods, which prohibited certain games and amusements on political grounds, and in order that the people might not be led by such diversions to disuse the practice of archery, a general skilfulness in which was deemed essential for the defence of the realm. (17 Edw. 4, c. 3; 33 Hen. 8, c. 9.)

2. Those which were of the nature of sumptuary laws, being intended to prevent what the framers of those laws considered excessive gaming; and being thus destined to restrain individuals from wasting their substance by losing too much money on games and pastimes.

3. Those which belong to the class of laws against fraud, and which have for their purpose to prevent cheating and other unfair practices in games upon which money is to be lost and won.

4. Those which relate to public morals, and which prohibit common gaming-houses and public gambling as public nuisances, by which the peace of society may be disturbed, and by which simple and unwary men are liable to be led into dissolute and vicious habits, whereby the morals and interests of the community would be injured.

The ways in which these various laws profess to accomplish their several purposes are—first, by imposing pecuniary penalties upon offending persons; secondly, by rendering all winnings null and void in certain cases, and by giving losers a power to recover sums which they have paid to winners; and, thirdly, by making offenders liable to imprisonment and hard labour.

Such is the general outline of these laws, the principal of which are as old as the reigns of Chas. 2 and Queen Anne, and some of which are of a still earlier date.

With regard to the extent to which these laws have been evaded, your committee might be justified in saying that, with the exception of the enactments for the suppression of common gaming-houses, these laws have, generally speaking, and with some particular and occasional exceptions, seldom been called into action.

In fact, many of the enactments of these laws are founded upon notions and maxims which prevailed in times long since gone by, and are at variance with the habits and manners, and opinions of the present day; and it is manifest that laws of such a kind, though they may continue to live in the statute-book, will seldom be heard of in the courts.

But to keep upon the statute-book laws of a penal character which have become obsolete and are little known, having fallen into desuetude, is not a matter of indifference; because such laws being called into action now and then, in special and particular cases, from motives arising out of personal considerations, become snares for the few, instead of being restraints for the many; and, instead of promoting what their framers considered to be the public interest, they are converted into instruments for gratifying the passions of private individuals.

It will be naturally inferred from these remarks that your committee are prepared to recommend that considerable alterations and amendments should be made in these laws.

And, first, they beg to recommend that the old and obsolete enactments which restrain persons of any degree from playing at certain games, many of which are conducive to health as well as to amusement, should be repealed. The political motive upon which those enactments were founded has long ceased to exist, and, even if these laws were expedient when they were passed, which may well be doubted, they ought no longer to remain in force.

Secondly, your committee recommend that these laws about gaming, which are of the nature of sumptuary laws, and which prescribe the pecuniary amount which private individuals may win or lose by playing at or by betting upon any game or pastime, be repealed; such laws being, generally speaking, wholly inoperative, and, even if they were effectual for their object, being unsuited to the spirit of the age.

In earlier periods of European civilization it was thought to be the duty of governments to exercise a minute superintendence and control over all those private actions of the members of the community which, through their operation upon the interests of the individuals concerned, could be supposed to bear indirectly upon the general interests of the community at large; and for this purpose the governments thought themselves not only entitled but bound to restrain the imprudence of private persons, and to protect them against the consequences of their own improvidence.

This notion was not confined to despotic governments, but was shared by representative legislatures; and thence arose the laws on our statute-book, which prescribed to the different classes of the people what apparel they should wear, what games they should play at, what amount of money they might win or lose, how their tables should be served, and which established many other interferences with the free action of individuals in the management of their private concerns.

Such regulations are out of date; and nobody now disputes the opinion of Adam Smith, that governments ought not to pretend to watch over the economy of private people, and to restrain their expense by sumptuary laws; but that if they look well after their own expenses, they may safely trust private people with theirs.

Your committee consider as comprehended under this recommendation all the enactments which impose penalties for losing or winning more than a certain amount of money at games, or bets upon games, played under circumstances not otherwise prohibited by law; and they are of opinion that these penalties ought to be repealed.

What sense can there be in declaring by law that a man may win or lose 10*l.* by a game or a wager; but that if he win or lose a larger sum, he shall be liable to a heavy fine? Does such a law even accomplish its own apparent purpose of protecting individuals from their own imprudence? For may not that sum, the loss of which is a trifle to a man in one class of society, be a matter of great importance to another man in a poorer condition? And if protection is the object of this law, does it not protect most of those who from their station in life need protection the least, and leave comparatively unprotected those of an inferior class, who may be severe sufferers from apparently small losses?

In the last century the practice of betting was much more common in this country than it is now; bets about disputed facts and upon future events were things of daily occurrence, and a wager was proverbially known to be an English way of settling a controversy. At present wagers are chiefly confined to sporting events, but the practice of wagering is still deeply rooted in the habits of the nation, and the practical imposition of pecuniary penalties for wagers would be so repugnant to the general feelings of the people, that such penalties would be scarcely ever enforced, or if enforced, would be looked upon as an arbitrary interference with the freedom of private life. A somewhat similar case exists with regard to time bargains for the purchase and sale of stock in the British funds. Such transactions are made penal by the Act of 7 Geo. 2, c. 8; but it is perfectly notorious that such transactions go on daily, and to a great extent, and the law against them is inoperative.

So, also, may be instanced the laws against forestalling and regrating, which, though rigorous in their enactments, are daily violated in the ordinary transactions of commerce, and have in later times been allowed to remain a dead letter.

The technical question which Government has to consider upon this branch of the subject is, whether the laws inflicting such penalties shall be abrogated, or shall be allowed to continue; but the practical question is, in fact, the reverse of that. These laws have, generally speaking, not been enforced; and if they were now to be enforced, their enforcement would have the character and effect of a new enactment.

The question, indeed, whether the penalties which are imposed by the statute of Anne for betting more than a specified amount on games should be held to apply to wagers made on horse-races, is one which has not yet been decided by the courts; no case has yet been determined in which that question was directly at issue; and no such penalties, therefore, have ever yet been awarded. If the courts should decide that those penalties do apply to bets on horse-racing, such a decision would practically be tantamount to a new law; and therefore your committee, in recommending that these penalties should be repealed, consider themselves as virtually recommending that things in this respect should be left as they have hitherto been.

But your committee, while they recommend that wagering should be free, and subject to no penalty, are also of opinion that wagers are not matters which ought to be brought for adjudication before courts of law. The law of England considers wagers in general as legal contracts; and the winner of such a wager can, therefore, enforce his claim in a court of law.

The law of Scotland is different in this respect; and the courts in that part of the United Kingdom have held, "that they were instituted to try adverse rights, and not to determine silly or impertinent doubts or inquiries of persons not interested in the matters in question;" and they have decided "that their proper functions are to enforce the rights of parties arising out of serious transactions, and not to pay regard to sponsiones ludicræ."

The Scotch courts have, therefore, declined to take cognizance of claims for money won by wagers; and your committee recommend that the law of England should in this respect be assimilated to the practice in Scotland.

If private individuals choose to make wagers with each other, there seems to be no good reason why they should be prevented from doing so, or why they should be punished for so doing; but neither, on the other hand, does there seem to be any sufficient reason why the valuable time of the courts of law should be consumed by adjudicating disputes which may arise between individuals in consequence of such wagers. Such disputes appear to be of the nature of private differences, which, not turning upon the construction of any law or statute, are matters for private settlement rather than for legal adjudication; and such disputes must frequently involve the statement of a variety of trifling details, little suited to the dignity of a court of law, and as to which such court could have no peculiar competence to judge.

Your committee, therefore, recommend that the courts of law should be entirely relieved from the obligation of taking cognizance of claims for money won by wagers of any kind. Persons wagering together should be left to take their chance as to getting from the party with whom they have wagered the money which they have won.

With regard to those enactments which are aimed at cheating and unfair play at games, your committee are of opinion that frauds of all kinds ought to be punishable by law; and that no man should be permitted to enjoy impunity who attempts in any way whatsoever to obtain money fraudulently from another person.

In a preceding passage in this report, your committee, for the sake of perspicuity, made a separate mention of the enactments against deceitful play, and of those which are intended for the suppression of common gaming-houses. But, in truth, both these classes of enactments rest upon the same principle—namely, the propriety of preventing frauds; for common gaming-houses, in which description must be included gaming-booths on racecourses, are founded on fraud—are maintained by fraud—and, as has been stated in evidence, frequently lead by their results to the commission of fraud by persons who, in such places, have begun by being only dupes.

Your committee have to express their regret that the existing enactments for the suppression of common gaming-houses have not hitherto accomplished the purpose for which they were intended. It appears that many houses of this description have been open nightly in the metropolis; and that the parties who are concerned in these establishments have been in the habit of frequenting country races, and of setting up their gaming-tables either in booths on the racecourse during the day, or in hired apartments in some adjoining town during the night.

Your committee cannot too strongly recommend that these nuisances should be effectually put down.

The powers which at present exist for the suppression of common gaming-houses in the metropolis, in addition to those given by the common law, are conferred by the provisions in the Acts which regulate the metropolitan and the city police. These Acts provide, that whenever a superintendent of police shall report to the commissioners, in writing, that there is good ground for believing that any house is a common gaming-house; and if two householders declare, upon oath and in writing, before a magistrate, that such house is commonly reported to be, and is by them believed to be, a common gaming-house, then it shall be lawful for the commissioner, by order in writing, to authorize the superintendent to enter such house by force, if necessary, and, with the aid of such constables as the commissioner may direct, to take into custody all persons who may be found therein.

It seems at first sight extraordinary that the police being invested with such powers, and being aware that fifteen common gaming-houses mentioned in the evidence have been open in Westminster, those gaming-houses should not have been long ago suppressed.

But it is stated that some difficulty has been experienced in finding householders willing to make the necessary affidavits, such persons being apprehensive that by so doing they might expose themselves to annoyance, and get themselves into trouble; and it also appears that in some cases it has happened that after such affidavits have been made, and after the subsequent authority to enter has been given, some time has elapsed before that authority has been acted upon by the superintendent.

The fact seems to be, that the officers of the police have felt in these matters an apparently overstrained fear of being thought to exercise too vigorously the powers conferred on them by the law; and they have also been withheld by apprehensions, carried, as your committee believe, too far, that they might render themselves liable to actions for trespass in the execution of this part of their duties.

The police have been under the impression that it was necessary for their legal security that they should be able to prove that play was actually going on in the house at the time when they entered; and for this end they have been obliged to resort to stratagems and arrangements, which have frequently been the cause of great delay in the execution of warrants given to a superintendent by a commissioner of police.

Your committee believe that such fears on the part of the police are groundless. The public has no sympathy with the keepers and frequenters of these common gaming-houses; and a display of activity on the part of the police in carrying into effect the law for the suppression of such houses must always, your committee are convinced, meet with general approbation.

Moreover, the provisions of the law seem to afford full protection to the officers of the police in the bonâ fide execution of their duty.

If the written report and the written affidavits required by the Act are laid before the commissioner, the law enjoins him to give a written authority to the superintendent to enter. The superintendent, therefore, is armed with a strictly legal authority, upon which it his duty to act; and if in acting on that authority he shall use no unnecessary violence, your committee cannot conceive that he can incur any legal responsibility.

Your committee, however, learned, with great satisfaction, on the last day of their inquiry, that a few nights previously the police had, by a simultaneous movement of several parties of their force, entered at one and the same time all the common gambling-houses, seventeen in number, which were then known to exist within the metropolitan police district.

The results of this very praiseworthy measure are stated in the evidence; and, although in the cases of some of the houses so entered, no convictions of the persons found therein have been obtained, yet there can be no doubt that the effect of such interruptions, even in those cases, must be greatly to discourage the keepers and frequenters of these fraudulent establishments.

But your committee are led to think that the efficiency of the action of the police in regard to gaming-houses entered by them would be much increased if they were empowered by law to search the persons of individuals found therein, in order thus to discover concealed implements of gaming; and they are of opinion that convictions of the keepers of such houses would be far more effectual, as examples to prevent the repetition of such offences, if the magistrates who sentence such offenders were, in virtue of the powers conferred on them by the Police Act, to award imprisonment and hard labour, instead of pecuniary fines.

The suppression of gaming-houses in race towns and in other places out of the metropolitan police district is to be effected under the common law and under the enactments of statutes different from the Metropolitan Police Act. Much laxity and neglect have hitherto prevailed in this respect; and your committee think that the attention of magistrates might usefully be directed to this matter. But if it should be found that the powers given by the existing law are insufficient, your committee would recommend that additional powers should be conferred.

Your committee have found that it is the practice on some race-courses to let out ground for the erection of gaming-booths during the races, in order that the high rents paid by the keepers of these booths may be added to the fund whence prizes to be run for are given; and some of the witnesses examined have stated that certain race-meetings, which they have named, could not be kept up if this practice were to be discontinued.

Your committee would be sorry to appear to discourage horseracing; the sport has long been a favourite one of all classes of the British nation, both at home and abroad, and it has been systematically encouraged by the Government, by means of numerous plates annually given by the Crown to be run for, with a view to the important object of keeping up, by the competition of private individuals, and without any other charge to the Government, an improved breed of horses throughout the country.

But your committee cannot consider the establishment of gaming booths on racecourses as in any way an essential accompaniment to racing; and they feel that they cannot too strongly express their opinion, that all such practices ought to be entirely and universally discontinued. If there is in any place a real demand for races, money enough is sure to be subscribed for plates and stakes to be run for; and if at any place sufficient sums for those purposes cannot be raised without the aid of gaming-booth rents, the races at such places had much better be left off.

Your committee think that it would be very desirable that some measures should be adopted for the purpose of suppressing gaming-tables kept by the proprietors of clubs, the mixed character and the regulations of which render it doubtful whether they properly fall within the description of common gambling-houses; provided such suppression could be effected without the violation of the general principle which protects private houses from intrusion. But the inquiries of your committee have not enabled them to suggest any specific enactments for the accomplishment of this object.

Your committee have some evidence to shew that frauds are occasionally committed in horseracing and in betting on the turf; but they feel difficulty in suggesting any remedies for this evil more stringent, or more likely to be effectual, than those already in existence.

Your committee have in conclusion to state, that they have not deemed it expedient to inquire into the matters connected with the qui tam actions which have been suspended for a limited time by an Act of this session.

Those actions were not mentioned in the order of reference, and your committee therefore concluded that it was not expected that they should inquire into them; and, moreover, your committee felt, that to inquire into the matters to which those actions relate would be, in some respects, to try the actions by anticipation, and that by so doing they might at all events extract from witnesses statements which might tend to the future prejudice of some of the parties, if those actions should hereafter be brought to trial.—May 20.

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

The Corn Trade.—A paper containing accounts relative to the import, export, and consumption of corn, grain, meal, and flour, in the year 1843, ending the 5th of January, 1844, has been printed by order of the House of Commons on the motion of Mr. W. Gladstone, the President of the Board of Trade. The statistical information which it contains will be found an useful addition to that already obtained by previous returns relative to grain, printed during the present session, and of which abstracts have appeared in The Times. It appears that the total quantity of foreign wheat upon which duty was paid for home consumption from the 5th of January, 1843, up to the 4th of January, 1844, amounted to 843,739 quarters; the quantity of British colonial wheat (under the Act 5 Vict. c. 14), to 12,406 quarters; and the quantity of Canadian wheat (at the fixed duty of 1s.), to 12,412 quarters. No idea, however, can yet be formed of the probable annual importation of corn from Canada at the reduced rate of duty, as the Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 29) only came into operation last autumn. The total amount of duty received thereon was—for foreign wheat, 601,172*l.*; for British colonial wheat, 2,532*l.*; and for Canadian, 620*l.* The duties ruling in foreign corn during the period in question (1843-44) amounted from January to the end of July 1843, to 20s.; in August and September it fluctuated between 18s. and 14s.; and in October, November, and December, the duty was never lower than 19s. and frequently as high as 20s. The average rate of duty throughout the year may be stated at 14s. 3d. on foreign wheat. The largest quantity of foreign wheat was entered in the month of September, when no less than 600,846 quarters were entered, in one week, at a duty of 15s. per quarter. As many as 46,396 quarters were entered in the same month, at a duty of 17s. and 40,601 quarters at a duty of 18s. a quarter. Under the old corn law, the greater part of the foreign wheat imported during the year was thrown upon the market in September or October, at a duty of 1s. per quarter only, and thus whilst the new law has not restricted the importations, it has secured an immense increase of revenue. The total quantity of foreign wheat and wheat flour imported during the past year amounted to 948,309 quarters, and the total quantity of colonial to 119,239 quarters. The total quantity of foreign and colonial wheat and wheat-flour remaining in warehouse at the end of December 1843, amounted to 220,748 quarters. The highest monthly average price of wheat in England and Wales was 59s. 7d. and the lowest, 46s. 2d. exhibiting a difference between the two extremes of 13s. 5d. The quantities of other foreign grain imported during the year 1843 were as follows:—viz. barley, 178,686 quarters; oats and oatmeal, 84,597 quarters; rye and rye meal, 4,872 quarters; peas, 39,668 quarters; and beans, 47,990 quarters. It further appears that the average annual price of wheat of last year in the island of Guernsey amounted to 44s. per imperial quarter, and in Jersey to 46s. 6d. per imperial quarter, as far as regarded the produce of the island itself, but only 43s. as regarded foreign wheat. The quantities imported into, and exported from Guernsey, were respectively 21,874 quarters, and 4,185 quarters. In Jersey, the respective quantities imported and exported amounted to 33,461 quarters, and 7,513 quarters. The total quantity of wheat and wheat-flour exported from Great Britain was 71,236 quarters, against 1,485,495 quarters imported. The largest wheat-exporting countries to Great Britain are Prussia (which exports about two-thirds of the whole), Germany, Russia, Denmark, and the North American colonies. Belgium takes the greater part of the wheat re-exported from England. From another part of this very interesting return—which has so important a bearing upon the corn-law question—we find that in the year 1842 (from the passing of the new Corn Bill on the 29th of April) the total quantity of foreign wheat imported was no less than 2,612,488 quarters, which yielded a duty of 1,093,340*l.*; and thus the gross total amount which has accrued to the revenue of the country since the Act came into operation is 1,694,512*l.* averaging the sum of 847,256*l.* per annum. The average rate of duty paid in 1842 was only 8s. 4d. whereas in 1843 it was 14s. 3d. a quarter. Finally, it appears that the total quantity of corn, meal, and flour of Irish growth imported from Ireland into Great Britain, in the year ended the 5th of January, 1844, amounted to 3,206,484 quarters, of which 413,466 quarters consisted of wheat and wheat-flour.

Smuggling.—In England, in the last two years, the law expenses for proceedings against smugglers (1,962 cases) were 8,854*l.* 10s. 7d.; the amount of duties received was 320*l.* 0s. 8d.; of penalties, 2,725*l.* 19s. 10d.; for compromises, 3,228*l.* 15s. 8d. In Ireland, in the same period, the law expenses (292 cases) were 1,148*l.* 7s. 3d.; received for duties recovered, 684*l.* 3s. 1d.; for penalties, 841*l.* 10s.; for compromises, 1,071*l.* 6s. 9d. In Ireland, the law expenses were (171 cases) 184*l.* 10s. 8d.; duties recovered, 25*l.* 18s. 11d.; pennalties, 163*l.* 18s.; compromises, 665*l.* 6s. 9d. The English expenses were, of course, much swelled by the Custom-house frauds.

Patent Medicines.—We learn from a Parliamentary return just printed that the amount of duty on patent medicines, in the ten years ending on the 5th January, 1844, was, on an average, nearly 30,000*l.* a year. This shews an immense consumption.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

A curious document has just made its appearance; it consists of the returns to the Repeal Association of the cases heard and determined in the Arbitration Courts established by that society. They are remarkable both for the number of disputes thus voluntarily withdrawn from the legal tribunals of the country, and still more so for the acquiescence even of the losing parties in judgments which they might have defied had they pleased. It appears from the report, which extends only over the first quarter, that the first sitting of the arbitrators was held on the 29th of September, 1843: in the course of the quarter similar Courts were established in 104 different localities. The returns are made by thirty-three districts only; they give the names of the districts, and of the parties making the return — the number of sittings, the number and nature of the cases decided, and the number who refused to obey the awards. The average period during which the system was in operation in these 33 districts was about two months only; and in that time no less than 1,345 cases were brought before the self-constituted tribunals, and of this number only twelve refused to obey the award. The report proceeds to state:

"A careful perusal of the statistical table above given will shew that the nature of the cases brought before the arbitrators is no less important than their numbers. Disputes of every possible character have been submitted to their decisions, and their awards have in most cases been cheerfully obeyed. Your committee would here enumerate the several classes of cases in which awards have been made:—

Wages.	Separate maintenance.
Labourers' hire.	Rent.
Book accounts.	Illegal distress.
Damages for assault.	Disputed wills.
Disputed title.	Division of property between co-heirs.
Right of passage.
Conacre disputes.	Possession of land.

"From this it will be seen that the arbitration system has been proved to be applicable to the wants of the country, and that already cases of almost every—if not of every—possible class of dispute of which the civil law takes cognizance, that can arise among the agricultural, mechanical, and trading classes of society, have been satisfactorily arranged by the arbitrators. Your committee would observe, that in all the cases of assault that have been submitted to arbitration, the plaintiff has sought compensation for personal injury sustained; and the award, when in favour of the plaintiff, has been an award for damage inflicted by the defendant.

"Your committee find that in nearly every case the award of the arbitrators is promptly and cheerfully obeyed. Some cases have occurred in which the temporary inability of the party to comply with the award has caused delay. But refusal to comply with the award is so rare, that it may almost be said to be unknown."

A startling fact is this revolt of a whole nation against the constitutional administrators of the law—a phenomenon without precedent in history, and wonderful enough to make the most careless sober, the most thoughtless thoughtful.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

It will be seen that the Circuits are to be postponed for the Writ of Error in the State Trials, but such postponement is not to exceed ten days. We confess ourselves unable to perceive the justice of any postponement at all. Why are some hundreds of persons to suffer ten days' additional imprisonment, and, still worse, so many days of the torture of suspense, for the sake of eight men, whose imprisonment is, as compared with theirs, a luxurious retreat? We have heard, we know not if from sufficient authority, that the Western Circuit is to take its usual course, as it has been intimated to the learned judges who preside upon it that their attendance at the House of Lords on the 7th July will be excused; that being the day appointed for hearing the Writ of Error. Our legal intelligence of the week exhibits cheering evidence that the Profession is alive to its interests, and that we do not appeal in vain to its members. Petitions are going up to Parliament, from various parts of the country, against the clause that has been smuggled into the Poor Law Amendment Bill, permitting clerks to Boards of Guardians to practise as attorneys in parochial matters. But the Profession want a mouth-piece in the House as well as out of it.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

DUTIES OF THE COMMON-LAW MASTERS.

A Return of the various Duties executed by the Masters of the Court of Queen's Bench on the Plea Side.

As taxing officers, the Masters attend at the Masters' office, both in Term and out of Term, to tax costs upon posteas, inquiries, writs of trial, rules of court, judges' orders, and other proceedings in causes and matters. They also tax attorneys' bills as between attorney and client, when referred to them; and additional duties have been recently cast upon them in this respect by the new Attorneys and Solicitors Act, under which they now tax some of such bills ex parte. In the progress of this business they have very often to investigate and decide upon long and complicated accounts.

The enlarged discretion now exercised by the Masters in taxing bills of costs as between party and party, and the nice questions that arise upon issues found for different contending parties (mixed issues), require a careful examination and analysis of the whole case, and a searching scrutiny into the evidence; duties much more onerous and difficult, and greatly more judicial, than under the former practice; and the Masters' duties are also considerably increased by the recent practice of the commissioners, requiring all bills of costs in bankruptcy to be taxed previous to payment.

Two Masters also attend the two Courts of Queen's Bench, the full court and the Bail Court, during Term; and one Master attends during the recently appointed sittings after Term, and at the sittings of the Court of Error, from the Court of Queen's Bench.

In court the Masters examine and sign, in the name of the Court, all affidavits and writs of habeas corpus, and commitments thereon; enter minutes of all judgments, rules, and orders of the Court; record various proceedings; report the practice of the Court, when appealed to thereon, and receive the directions of the Court in all matters referred to them.

The Masters also take the examinations of witnesses, generally attended by counsel; settle special issues, and hear counsel and parties upon references to hear them by the Court, often matters of great importance and difficulty.

The Masters of the Court of Queen's Bench also exercise the power and perform the duties of the following abolished officers:—

The chief clerk,
Secondary,
Clerk of the rules,
Clerk of the papers,
Clerk of the docquets and judgments,
Signer of the writs,
Clerk of the declarations,
Clerk of appearances, estreats, and posteas,
Custos brevium and recordorum,
Clerk of the inner and upper treasury,
Clerk of the outer treasury,
Clerk of the errors,
Filacer and clerk of the outlawries.

In which character they superintend the issuing, passing, and signing of the various writs. They also superintend and revise the drawing up and entering of all orders and rules—"a duty," say the commissioners of 1783, "of the greatest discretion, skill, and care." They also overlook and have the custody of warrants of attorney and cognovits, the filing and keeping careful and correct indexes thereof under the statute, and the custody of all entries, affidavits, writs, rolls, and other matters of record, and the signing interlocutory and final judgments, and correct entry of the same in the judgment and docquet books.

The Masters are also charged with the responsible duty of receiving and paying into the Bank of England the moneys paid into court by the suitors (upon which a poundage of one per cent. was formerly received by the officer), and of paying the same out of court to the suitors; also of collecting and accounting for the fee-fund; the said moneys amounting together to a large sum annually.

There are now no sinecure offices, or offices performed by deputy, in the Court of Queen's Bench.

FORTUNATUS DWARRIS,
A. D. CROFT,
R. GOODRICH,
JAMES BUNCE,
C. R. TURNER,
} Masters of the Court of Queen's Bench.

Return of the duties performed by the Queen's Coroner and Attorney and the Masters on the Crown side of the Court of Queen's Bench.

The various duties performed by the Queen's coroner and attorney and masters on the Crown side of the Court of Queen's Bench, are nearly similar to those performed by the Masters on the plea side of the said court with regard to attendance in court during Term, drawing up and entering the rules and orders, and taxing the costs in all matters on the Crown side of the said court. They are appointed under and by virtue of the statute 6 Viet. c. 20, in lieu of the following officers abolished by that Act; viz.

Secondary,
Clerk of the rules,
Clerk of the affidavits,
Examiner,
Calendar keeper,
Clerk of the grand juries,
Nine clerks in court, and
The Queen's clerk in court.

And they perform the duties prescribed by section 16 of that statute, in the care and custody of the record, and other proceedings on the Crown side of the said court, and the enrolment thereof, filing affidavits, and the issuing and filing of writs, and other proceedings, and all other matters and things relating to the practice and the general business to be transacted on the Crown side of the said court, as directed by the judges of the said court in pursuance of the said statute; they have also to tax all bills in criminal proceedings at assize, sessions of the peace, and Central Criminal Court, when taxed between attorney and client, and parish bills taxed by order of the guardians of the poor.

By the 8th section of the statute 6 Vict. c. 20, certain salaries were granted to the Queen's coroner and attorney and the Masters on the Crown side, in lieu of the compensations awarded to them by virtue of the statute 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Wm. 4, c. 58, and of other profits received by them, and they severally receive such salaries for the duties performed by them.

CHARLES F. ROBINSON,
Queen's Coroner and Attorney in the said court,
WM. SAM. JONES, Master.

UNITED LAW-CLERKS' SOCIETY.

The twelfth anniversary of this excellent society, the merits of which we feel assured only require to be generally known to be duly appreciated, was celebrated on Tuesday evening by a public dinner at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, Strand.

The objects of the society are to establish a general benefit fund for rendering assistance, in the event of death, sickness, or inability, to its members, and to establish a casual fund to afford assistance by loans to law-clerks in temporary distress, whether members or not, to provide situations for law-clerks generally, and the Profession with efficient clerks, and also to form a library of useful legal works.

A numerous company of professional gentlemen sat down to an excellent dinner, the chair being taken by the Hon. Sir Robert Monsey Rolfe, Baron of the Exchequer. Amongst the company we noticed Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, Fitzroy Kelly, Esq., M.P.; John Jervis, Esq., M.P.; W. H. Watson, Esq., M.P.; A. E. Cockburn, Esq.; — Gregory, Esq.; — Sewell, Esq.; and various other leading members of the different branches of the Profession.

After the cloth was drawn, and grace (Benedictus) sung, and the usual loyal toasts given,

The report of the society was read by the secretary. It announced that sixteen members were at present receiving pecuniary assistance, to the amount of 47*l*. 2s.; that the total expenditure during the twelve years of the society's existence amounted to 814*l*.; that by the report of April 1, 1843, the society was possessed of funds to the amount of 5,363*l*. 17s. 6d.; that the subscriptions of the present year amounted to 1,479*l*. and the disbursements to 499*l*. leaving a balance, in addition to that of April, 1843, of 980*l*. 6,449*l*. of the total balance had been invested in the public securities. That the committee gratefully acknowledged, besides a donation of twenty guineas from Mr. Scott, the gift of a complete copy of his Law Reports. (Cheers.)

In proposing "Prosperity to the United Law-Clerks' Society," the chairman regretted that it had not previously occurred to him to invite two distinguished individuals at present in this country, members of high standing amongst the lawyers of Prussia, who had been sent to this country by the King of Prussia for the purpose of reporting to his Majesty the state and condition of our laws, and who, he felt assured, would not fail, whatever report they might make, to describe the harmony and friendship existing in the various branches of the Profession.

The toast was most vociferously cheered by the company.

A list of subscriptions was then announced, some of which were as follows: Lord Chief Justice Tindal, 10 guineas; J. Romilly, esq. 10 guineas; Fitzroy Kelly, esq. M.P. 10 guineas; Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, 5 guineas; Charles Dickens, esq. 3 guineas; C. Faber, esq. 5 guineas; her Majesty's Advocate-General, 5*l*.; —— Westoby, esq. 10 guineas; Messrs. Dimock and Burney, 10 guineas; and others, amounting to about 250*l*.

The musical arrangements, under the direction of Mr. Young, assisted by Messrs. Lloyd, Fitzwilliam, Jolly, and Leffler, and two youths from Westminster Abbey, and an effective band, gave general satisfaction. The toasts were announced by Mr. James Toole, with his usual energy and vigour.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Henry Coare Kingsford, of Canterbury, in the county of Kent, Gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

CROWN-OFFICE, June 12, 1844.—Her Majesty has been pleased to appoint Edward Goulburn, Serjeant-at-law, to be one of the Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy, of London, in the place of John Herman Merivale, esq. deceased.

LIONEL BANCRAFT, Esq. of Barnstaple, Solicitor, was elected, on Saturday, June 1, Town Clerk and Registrar of the Court of Record of that borough.

CALLS TO THE BAR.—INNER TEMPLE, June 7.—The probationary terms to qualify for the degree of Barrister-at-Law having been completed by the undermentioned gentlemen, they were this day sworn in in the accustomed manner, and admitted as members of the bar:—M Richard Musgrave, of the Island of Montserrat; William Andrew Rew, of St. John's College, Oxford; John Dodson De Skelton, of Trinity Hall, Cambridge; Charles James Hargreave, of Wortley, near Leeds; James Welch, of Queen's College, Oxford; Arthur Bigge, of All Souls College, Oxford; Charles Edwards, of Framlingham, in the county of Suffolk; Robert Donn, of St. John's College, Cambridge; and Edward Elcock Mollyneux, of London, Esqrs.

MIDDLE TEMPLE, June 8.—On Saturday evening last, the calls to the bar by this honourable society comprised the undermentioned gentlemen, to whom, according to the existing practice, the accustomed oaths were administered in the dining-hall, before several of the benchers present. This is the only inn of court where the ancient practice exists of the "calls" on the day of their admission to the bar, dining in forensic costume:—Thomas Edward Preston Lefroy, of Fulford, in the county of York; Stanes Brocket Brocket, of Brocket Hall, in the county of Essex; Uvedale Corbett, of Tettenhall, in the county of Stafford; William Frederick Northey, of Tonbridge-wells, in the county of Kent; Benjamin Badger, of Rotherham, in the county of York; and Peter Alexander Michael Strappini, of the city of London, Esqrs.

THE TEMPLE, June 12.—This evening a special call to the bar was made by the hon. Society of the Middle Temple, in the person of Mr. Titus Hibbert Ware, of Edinburgh. The peculiar characteristic of a "special call" is in the fact of its being made only under particular circumstances, and upon petition to the bench, which petition is brought before and decided upon by the benchers when in "parliament" assembled for the transaction of the affairs of their corporate body.

LINCOLN'S-INN.—All the under mentioned gentlemen having kept the full number of terms to qualify for admission to the bar, they were on Friday last sworn in in the usual manner before several Benchers of the hon. Society:—William James Voules, of Somerset-house; William John Payne, of Doughty-street, in the county of Middlesex; William Osborne Maclaine, of Wadham College, Oxford; Henry Sackville Willby, of Bishop's Stortford; John Solomon Cartwright, late of Kingston, in the province of Canada; and John James Randolph, of Hadham, in the county of Hertford, Esqrs.

THE CHANCERY COMPENSATION JOB.—It is not a fair compensation, but an inordinate compensation, to which we are objecting. The Six Clerks ought not to have been summarily discharged without due regard to the inveterate character of the abuse, and the traditional expectations entertained on the successive devolution of that office. But, on the other hand, it is not denied that the Chancellor had inherent power in the great seal to have brought them to reason. An intimation on his part that reasonable compensation was at their service, but that on the presentation of unreasonable claims another mode was within his reach, and we should have heard nothing of these monstrous pensioners. They would have got off on large annuities; but not on terms transcending the imagination of a German prince or an American president. Ex-chancellors have 6,000*l*. a year; ex-six clerks rejoice in 7,000*l*. When ex-chancellors die, the pensions cease; when an ex-six clerk dies, his posthumous annuity begins. Our readers, no doubt, are conversant with the expositions of Mr. Burke in his memorable speeches on economical reform. He painted the separate jurisdictions of Lancaster and Cornwall—the ducal law courts—the palatinate authorities—the triple unity of Kings of England, Dukes of Lancaster, and Dukes of Cornwall. But in none of Mr. Burke's pictures, however exaggerated or however droll—in none of those dramatic and vivid portraitures of antediluvian jobs—is there any thing so droll as so indefensible as a six clerk millionnaire. We do not wish these gentlemen to starve, but we object to their having such enormous appanages; it is more than King Loui requires for his naval hero, M. de Joinville; it is more than our Nelsons, or our Collingwoods, received for the Nile and for Trafalgar. It would build churches enough to satisfy Sir R. Inglis, and it would fill our galleries with noble works of art.—Morning Chronicle.

A supplement to the London Gazette was published on the 3rd inst. for the purpose of making known a series of orders in Council, passed on the 23rd ult., on the representation of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, constituting separate districts for spiritual purposes in the following places: Stockport, Ashton-under-Lyne, Bolton-le-Moor and Bury, Lancashire; Burslem, Shelton, and Wednesbury, Staffordshire; Whitford, Flintshire; St. Mary, Pembroke; in Bethnal-green (six); All Saints, Newcastle; Camborne and Illogan, Cornwall; Charles the Martyr, Plymouth, Devon; Halstead, Essex; St. John, Horsleydown, Surrey; Birstal, Keighley, and St. George, Barnsley, parish of Silkstone, Yorkshire; and St. Philip and Jacob, Bristol.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

YORKSHIRE LAW SOCIETY.

At a Meeting of the Committee of the Yorkshire Law Society, held at the Law Library, Minster-gates, York, on the 5th June instant, the following Petition was adopted; and afterwards forwarded to H. R. Yorke, esq. M.P. for presentation.

To the honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Attorneys and Solicitors practising in the city of York, sheweth,

That by a Bill now before your honourable House for the amendment of the laws relating to the poor in England, it is proposed, by "clause 60," to enact that notwithstanding any thing contained in an Act passed in the 7th year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled "An Act for consolidating and amending several of the Laws relating to Attorneys and Solicitors practising in England and Wales," it shall be lawful for any clerk or other officer to any board of guardians constituted under the therein first-recited Act, or to any district board, if duly empowered by such board, to make or resist any application, claim, or complaint, or to take and conduct any proceedings on behalf of such board before any justice or justices of the peace at petty or special sessions, or out of sessions, although such clerk or officer be not an attorney or solicitor, or have not obtained a stamped certificate in pursuance of the provisions of the said Act.

That the said Act of the 7th year of her present Majesty's reign was not passed without full consideration, and it appears unnecessary that its provisions should be repealed in the manner proposed. That your petitioners have had a great portion of their time occupied, and have been at considerable cost, in studying their profession, and have paid heavy stamp-duties on their articles of clerkship, and on their admissions as attorneys and solicitors, they are also charged with an annual duty of 8*l.* in addition to the tax upon their professional incomes, for being allowed to carry on their business; they therefore submit that it will be most unjust to them to permit persons to practise their profession, and receive a share of its profits, without being subject to its burthens.

That it appears to your Petitioners that it would be quite as reasonable to permit druggists, patent medicine vendors, or any other persons who have not passed the College of Surgeons or been admitted licentiates of Apothecaries' Hall, to practise as medical officers of unions, as to permit unqualified persons, who may happen to be clerks or other officers of boards of guardians, to practise the profession of your Petitioners.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray that the sixtieth clause of the said Bill, which contains the proposed enactment, may not be passed into a law.

Clause 34 of the same Bill is also extremely objectionable, as it is intended that if a solicitor does not get his bill taxed by the clerk of the peace (which he must do at his own cost), it shall be subject to the decision of the auditor, both as to its reasonableness and legality, although the auditor may not be a person acquainted with the law; and his desire will be to reduce all the charges to the lowest possible amount, in order to make the public believe that the working of the new poor law is economical.

MANCHESTER LAW SOCIETY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I am much obliged by your kindness in calling the attention of the Manchester Law Association to the letter purporting to proceed from the committee of the Bolton Court of Request Club, demanding payment of a debt under a threat, in case of non-compliance, of a "warrant against body and goods without further notice."

Letters of a similar character are becoming daily more common, and the committee of our association have had several under their consideration.

I beg to forward you a few specimens, which I think it would be well if you were to notice in your valuable publication.

You will observe that some of the letters have the appearance of writs, and are doubtless intended to frighten the ignorant into that belief; others being in aid of a "special Act of Parliament;" others purport to be signed by "Wm. Healey, solicitor," there being, of course, no such party; and in another, costs to the amount of 10*s.* 6*d.* are demanded.

The forms of application above-mentioned are sold ready signed, "Healey and Co." and "Healey, solicitor," at 2*s.* per quire, to the shopkeepers, many of whom regularly use them; and I have heard of one instance where money was received for the letter.

The committee of the Manchester Law Association are using every exertion to put a stop to this very improper practice, and I trust that you will aid their endeavours by calling public attention to the subject.

I remain, dear Sir, yours,
THOMAS TAYLOR.

BEVERLEY.
POOR LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I have much pleasure in forwarding you a copy of a petition adopted and signed by the Solicitors at this place against the clause in the Poor Law Amendment Bill empowering clerks to boards of guardians, though not attorneys, to practise as such in all matters relating to the administration of the Poor Law. The clause is an unwarrantable interference with the rights and privileges of the Profession, and I trust the Profession, as a body, will at once petition against the retaining of the clause in the Bill.

The Profession are much indebted to you for the timely and able manner in which you expose and give warning of all undue and insidious inroads upon their rights and privileges.

I am, Sir, yours very obediently,
12th June, 1844. W. F. CLARK.

To the honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the Solicitors practising in the borough of Beverly, in the East Riding of the county of York, sheweth,

That your Petitioners have observed with much surprise a clause introduced into the Poor Law Amendment Bill now before your honourable House, empowering clerks to boards of guardians, though, not attornies, to practise as such in all matters relating to the administration of the Poor Law.

That most of your Petitioners have, for a number of years, been concerned for, and transacted the law business of, a great many of the parishes in and about the East Riding of Yorkshire.

That your Petitioners were compelled to serve under articles of clerkship for a term of years, and they, or some one on their behalf, have expended large sums of money and paid heavy duties on articles and admissions before they were, by law, entitled to practise and transact such business, and do now annually pay the certificate duty to enable them to practise.

That your Petitioners consider the clause introduced into the said Bill as inconsistent with the rights and privileges of your Petitioners as professional men, and if allowed to stand will deprive your Petitioners of a portion of their legitimate practice.

Your Petitioners, therefore, humbly pray that your honourable House will expunge the said clause from the Bill.

And your Petitioners will ever pray, &c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—The Court of Common Pleas appears to have decided, in the case of Brooks v. Hodgson (reported in your number of the 1st inst.), that the body of a writ of execution, as well as the indorsement, should correspond with the judgment-rule, where judgment is signed upon a judge's order, and that a variance is fatal, and cannot be amended. Now, it has hitherto been usual in the body of a writ of fi. fa. for the sheriff to be commanded to levy the amount of debt or damages mentioned in the declaration, pursuant to the judgment, whether judgment was signed by default, or upon a judge's order, or cognovit (the real amount to be levied being indorsed on the back of the writ). I beg, therefore, to call the attention of my brother subscribers to your journal as to the question, whether judgment upon a judge's order can now be legally signed for any other sum than that authorized by the order, whatever may be the amount of debt or damages laid in the declaration? and whether the precise debt mentioned in the order must not be inserted in the body of the execution? and the same rule, I presume, will apply to cognovits as to judges' orders.

It certainly seems anomalous that a judge's order or cognovit should authorize judgment to be entered up for a certain sum in default of payment, and that judgment should afterwards be signed, and the sheriff, in the body of the execution-writ, be directed to levy a totally different sum, thereby exceeding the authority given by the judge's order or cognovit, although the execution may be correctly indorsed.

I remain your obedient servant,
W. H. SEYMOUR.

Coventry, June 12, 1844.

AGREEMENT AND PROXY STAMPS REDUCED.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—It will be important to some of your readers who have not leisure or opportunity to read the statutes as they come out, to learn that by the 7 Vict. c. 21—

The stamp on agreements formerly chargeable with the 1*l.* duty is reduced to 2*s.* 6*d.*

Sec. 5 empowers stamping same within fourteen days without penalty, and imposes a penalty of 10*l.* for stamping after that time.

And that

Proxies to vote at joint-stock company meetings are treated as powers of attorney and charged with a duty of 2*s.* 6*d.*

Sec. 7 imposes a penalty of 50*l.* for voting on an unstamped proxy.

The same Act also reduces the duty on sea insurance policies, and exempts from duty bonds for obtaining drawbacks of customs or excise duties.

The reduction of the agreement stamp is, I think, a wise measure, and will, in all probability, lead to an increase of the revenue in that respect; as no one, now, will think of preparing agreements on unstamped paper. At present, nine agreements out of every ten are so made.

I do not see why the voting on an unstamped proxy should be made a penal offence. Would it not have been sufficient to have made such votes simply void?

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,
R. A.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, JUNE 15, 1844.

GAMING.

THE Report of the Committee appointed to investigate the Law of Gaming will be found in its proper place in our columns to-day. It is a remarkably honest and sensible report; it takes a plain, manly view of the question, neither affecting the cant that expects perfection in an imperfect world, nor being wilfully blind to vices because they chance to be fashionable. The evil is candidly acknowledged, and rational remedies are suggested. If such a committee were to sit upon every proposed change in the law, and report upon it as sensibly as in this instance, the country would not have to complain of so much foolish and blundering legislation as it is now vexed withal.

We advise the careful perusal of the report itself, therefore we shall here notice only its more prominent recommendations.

There can be no question about the propriety of repealing all laws that restrain healthful games, as well as those equally absurd ones that prescribe how much private individuals shall bet or stake.

But the committee with equal wisdom recommend that wagers shall in no case be recoverable by law.

The committee urge the more vigilant enforcement of the existing law against gambling-houses, and express hostility to gaming-clubs, but are unable to suggest an effective mode of suppressing them.

Nothing is said about that species of gambling under which fall the Derby stakes and other lotteries. But we presume the law upon these matters was too clear to need investigation. But is it as certainly a good law?

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

THE columns of the LAW TIMES have recorded some disgraceful specimens of this disreputable race; but nothing that in its unblushing effrontery, its shameless disregard of decency, its reckless defiance not merely of professional etiquette, but of manly feeling, approaches to the following, which appeared in the advertising columns of the Doncaster Gazette:—

PROTECTION!

PROTECTION AGAINST JUDGMENTS, EXECUTIONS, BAILIFFS, AND ARREST.

Proceedings in Bankruptcy and Insolvency, under the New Rules and Orders of the Court.

Mr. BULLOCK, Attorney at Law, Attorney of the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and Solicitor in Bankruptcy, 15, Paradise square, Sheffield, respectfully informs the inhabitants of Doncaster and its vicinity, who may find themselves suffering under pecuniary difficulty or embarrassment, and have occasion for such services, that he procures protections against executions, bailiffs, and arrest, within 14 days, under the new statute, the 5th and 6th Vict. cap. 116, by which parties applying to him are enabled to obtain their protection from arrest, and release from debt and difficulty without an hour's incarceration or imprisonment in gaol, or their property being taken away from them under execution.

Mr. BULLOCK having had 25 years' practice and experience in the profession, has within a recent period procured the liberation and release (from debt and difficulty) of near two hundred persons in the District Courts of Bankruptcy at Manchester, Leeds, and Insolvency Courts at Sheffield, having had 106 insolvency cases within one year; the whole of which have received their discharge, liberation, and release from debt.

The protection protects the party against all process whatever, of every description, against either person or property.

Every description of deed, conveyance, mortgage, assignment, bill of sale, warrant of attorney, or other security, prepared with secrecy and dispatch on the lowest possible terms.

Actions at law commenced and defended in any of her Majesty's courts of law—the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer; also proceedings in Chancery undertaken, and every other branch of the profession conducted with the strictest attention on the lowest possible terms.

Mr. BULLOCK may generally be found at his office, 15, Paradise-square, Sheffield, from ten in the morning till nine at night.

The man capable of writing and publishing such a placard as this is, of course, already brazened against any censure the Profession or the public could pass upon him. We therefore abandon the hopeless task of endeavouring to shame him into a sense of the respect due to the character of his Profession, if not to his own. But we publish the advertisement here, that those who feel for this deed and the doer of it as we do, may know whom to shun.

SHAM LAWYERS.

A LETTER from the active Secretary of the Manchester Law Society will be found among the correspondence, treating of a subject to which we directed attention last week, namely, the practice prevalent in many large places, of persons not being attorneys, or even clerks to attorneys, undertaking to collect debts by means of a species of threatening letter, worded in a variety of awful forms, and which are all intended to deceive the receiver into the belief that they are legal documents, and thus to terrify him into compliance with any demand the sender may be pleased to make, whether for a real or pretended debt, or for alleged costs.

Mr. TAYLOR justly observes that it is difficult to meet this by legal process. But we would suggest to the Manchester and other Societies the propriety of keeping a watchful eye upon the perpetrators, who will assuredly not be content with recovering a debt, but will, doubtless, add a demand for costs; should these be obtained by means of such a threat and pretence as is contained in these missives, we have little doubt that a criminal prosecution might be successfully supported.

Some of these documents sent us by Mr. TAYLOR are very amusing. Here are copies of them:—

VERULAM SOCIETY.

So many objections were made by members to the intended form of double columns for the Reports, that, although the first part was in type, we have deemed it right to yield to their remonstrances, and have instructed the printer to compose it anew in single lines, a form which, by necessitating a larger type, will somewhat increase the bulk, and, consequently, the cost of the annual volume. But it was represented from so many quarters that there was a prejudice against the double column, and that the ultimate success of the Society so much depended upon the impression which even the typographical aspect of its works would give, that we could not but yield our own judgment to that of so many others equally anxious for its prosperity. The consequence of this alteration will be a delay of the publication of the first number until Thursday next. The post of that night will, we hope, transmit it to the subscribers.

In reply to numerous queries as to whether the Practical Reports will merge in a general one, should the latter be adopted, we beg to state that they will do so, of course.

It is also asked if the same cases will appear both in the LAW TIMES and in the Society's Reports. They will, precisely as now they do; that is, briefly reported for the sake of early information; in the PRACTICAL REPORTS, they will be reported at length, in the same manner, and in as authentic and citable a shape, as in the regular Reports.

It has been already stated that a complete report of all the cases in all the courts will be attempted as soon as there are orders enough to meet the cost. A list is now in progress of subscribers to such a report, and as soon as the needful numbers are obtained, it will be begun.

In like manner, a list is opened for subscribers to the Complete Digest of all the Reports, which only waits sufficient orders to be entered upon.

The first Text-Book will be a Treatise on the Law of Evidence. This, also, waits for a sufficient list of orders.

A Portfolio for preserving the Verulam Society Reports is in preparation, and will be ready in a day or two. Its price will be 5s.

The following new members have been enrolled since the publication of the list on Saturday last:—

RICKARDS v. RICKARDS.

Renewal of leaseholds—Construction of a bequest for the purpose of renewing leases.

Where a testator directed his money in the funds to be subject to such premium as should be necessary for the "renewal" of a Crown lease, which he specifically bequeathed, it was held that the legatee was entitled to the premium only, and not to any further sum in respect of an increased rent required by the Crown on renewal.

George Rickards, the testator in this cause, bequeathed to his widow the whole dividends of 3 per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities which might be standing in his name at the time of his death, during her life, or so long as she should remain his widow, and he directed as follows:—"That at her decease, or on her second marriage, one moiety of the before-mentioned stock, subject to and after deducting such premium or sum of money as should be necessary for the renewal of the Crown leasehold messuages in and about Piccadilly, which I purchased of Sir Henry Tichbourne, in case I shall not have renewed that lease in my lifetime," should go to their five children, in such shares as his wife should appoint, and in default of appointment, to the five children equally.

The testator then gave to his son George all his leasehold houses in the parish of St. James's, Westminster, which he purchased of Sir Henry Tichbourne, "or of which he should at the time of his decease have obtained a renewed lease, or renewed leases from the Crown, to hold the said leasehold premises last mentioned unto his son George, his executors, administrators, and assigns, for the then existing term or terms therein, and all benefit of renewal therein as aforesaid, for his and their own use and benefit."

The will was dated in 1825, and the testator died in 1831, possessed of a large sum of Consols, and without having renewed the Crown lease. That lease consisted of the residue of a term of thirty years, granted by the Crown from the 5th of April, 1815, at a yearly rent of 244*l.* 3s. and the lease contained a covenant on the part of the lessee to expend 1,600*l.* in repairs. The widow died in 1839, without having exercised her power of appointment.

After her death, George Rickards applied to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, who were willing to grant a new Crown lease for a reversionary term of thirty-nine years and a half for a fine of 4,980*l.* and a yearly rent of 725*l.* 16s. the lessee to expend 1,570*l.* at least in repairs. From the correspondence it appeared that the Commissioners fixed that term for the purpose of making the lease expire at the same time as other Crown leaseholds held by Rickards.

George Rickards conceived himself entitled to a renewed lease at the old rent, had the difference between the old and the new rent valued by an actuary at 8,230*l.* and filed his bill to have that sum, the fine, and the repairs paid out of the testator's stock.

The Crown was empowered by 34 Geo. 3, c. 75, to grant leases of tenements belonging to the Crown, consisting principally of buildings, for any term not exceeding 99 years; "so that the rent to be reserved should not be less than two-thirds of a reasonable rent and a fine to the amount of the remaining part of such annual sum." By a subsequent Act the management of the property was given to the Commissioners of the Woods and Forests. Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce held that the plaintiff was only entitled to be paid "such premium or sum of money as at the death of the widow was necessary for the renewal of the lease;" and referred it to the Master to ascertain the amount of such premium. By the word "renewal," the Master was to consider as intended the grant of a new reversionary lease for thirty years from the expiration of the existing lease, and under the same rent and covenants, or as near thereto as the law would allow. From that decision the plaintiff appealed.

Teed and Sel. aborn, for the plaintiff.

Russell and Rogers, for the executors, cited Price v. Ashton (Younge & Collyer' Reports, 82)

Wigram and Malins for the other children, not executors, cited Attorney-General v. Hinxman (2 Jacob and Walker' Reports, 270); Bell v. Kingston (1 Merivale's Reports, 314); Smith v. Clanton (4 Bingham's New Cases), 3 & 4 Geo. 4, c. 75; Millington v. Mulgrave (3 Maddock's Reports, 491); Martin v. Cook (2 Atkyn's Reports, 3).

Teed, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR held that if the testator had renewed the lease in his lifetime he must have paid the increased rent, and in that case his son must have taken the lease subject to the additional rent. The plaintiff was, therefore, bound to pay the increased rent; and his lordship affirmed the Vice-Chancellor's decree, with costs.

Practice in lunacy—Separate solicitors—Costs.

Upon a petition to confirm a report of the commissioner in this matter, it appeared that, upon the inquiry, six different solicitors had appeared for different persons who were the next of kin of the lunatic; when

The LORD CHANCELLOR said—Here are six solicitors concerned for the next of kin, in a matter requiring no consideration. I shall only allow one set of costs by one solicitor for the next of kin.

NEEDHAM v. NEEDHAM.

Practice—Striking out motions.

On the application of Calvert, this appeal motion was ordered to be struck out of the paper, no one appearing upon it when called on. The motion had been in the paper a year and a half, and had been postponed upon various pretexts.

The LORD CHANCELLOR observed, that in future all appeal motions upon which no one appeared would be struck out of the paper.

Re SUISSE.

Security for costs—Fund in court pending appeal.

The executors of the late Marquis of Hertford had filed a bill against, which had failed, but an appeal is now pending in the House of Lords.

Roupell, for the defendant Suisse, applied for 1,500*l.* which he had paid into court, on giving such security for refunding it, in the event of the appeal proving successful, as the Master might approve of.

Schomberg, for the executors and appellants, asked that the security should be extended to the costs of the present application, and of the reference.

Roupell, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The defendant asks to enjoy the property, and is ready to give security, which, under the circumstances, is necessary. The plaintiffs ask that they may investigate the validity of the security proposed. It is not a matter of right to have the money out of court, and the security must extend to the costs of this motion, and of the reference.

Sale of lunatic's property—Confirmation of report.

The committee of the estate had sold certain shares, the property of the lunatic, with the approbation of the Commissioner, but without first obtaining the confirmation of that report.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said the report in favour of sale must first be confirmed.

Petition ordered to stand over for that purpose.

Re SMYTHE, a Lunatic.

Lunatic—Trustee—Reference.

Daniell supported the usual petition for the appointment of another person in the place of a trustee who had become a lunatic, and as the fund was small, he asked that the order might be made without a reference.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I cannot give an opinion; there must be a reference.

Re DYCE SOMBRE, a Lunatic.

Petition to supersede commission—Jurisdiction in lunacy.

Sir Thomas Wilde, Wakefield, and Walpole proposed to open the petition of Mr. Sombre to supersede the commission of lunacy which had been issued against him, when Bethell and Calvert took the preliminary objection that he was resident in Paris, out of the jurisdiction; that the Lord Chancellor was obliged to treat him as a lunatic, and, therefore, he was bound to attend in court. They referred to Collinson on Lunacy, 325; Shelford on Lunacy, Appendix, 639; Ex parte Roberts (3 Atkyns, 6); Fonblanque's Treatise on Equity, n. p. 65.

The LORD CHANCELLOR. There is no use in citing affirmative cases. It is the usual course, that the lunatic shall attend. I know of no instance in which the commission has been superseded without the appearance of the lunatic. Why does not the gentleman appear? Why am I to go through a petition which may be useless? I can conceive a lunatic so ill that he cannot be brought before the Chancellor, but then he must be where he can be inspected.

Sir T. Wilde said the Court would admit the finding of lunacy in a foreign court, and will not the Chancellor admit such a finding of sanity? The constituted authorities in France had declared Mr. Sombre sane. He referred to 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 65.

Wakefield.—There is no general order in lunacy requiring the personal attendance of the lunatic. A great many orders in lunacy had been found in which there was no recital of the lunatic's presence.

The LORD CHANCELLOR. I do not place much reliance on that, as I know how irregularly those orders have been drawn up.

Ultimately it was arranged that Mr. Sombre should be assured that no restraint would be put upon his personal liberty except that the express sanction of the Chancellor, and that would only be necessary in the event of any acts of violence on his part. In consequence of this arrangement, the petition stood over, and Mr. Sombre afterwards came to England.

COURT OF THE VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND.

Monday, April 29.

MOSLEY v. PLATT.

Will—Construction of.

G. G. C. being seised of certain estates situate in the liberties of the city of Hereford, also of certain other estates in the county of Hereford, but which were not within the city or liberties of Hereford, by his will devised to trustees therein named as follows:—"I give, devise, and bequeath all my freehold, copyhold, and leasehold messuages, lands, and hereditaments in the city of Hereford, or the liberties thereof, in the county of Hereford, and my two houses on Ludgate hill, in the city of London." The testator, in a subsequent part of his will, empowered his trustees to sell the whole or any part of the before-mentioned premises, either by public sale or private contract, or otherwise. In a codicil bearing date the same day as his will, the testator having occasion to refer to the powers of sale contained in his will, directed in the following manner respecting the household furniture and effects belonging to a certain house called Pool-house,—"subject to the same trusts, powers, and provisions as are in my said will declared concerning the proceeds of the sale thereby authorized of Pool-house, and of my other estates in the city and county of Hereford." Held, that the testator's estates, situate in the county of Hereford, but not within the city or the liberties thereof, did not pass to the trustees.

This case, which was a family suit, came before the Court upon demurrer. It appears that the testator, Charles Gomond Cooke, was, at the date and execution of his will, and at the time of his death, possessed of considerable personal property, and was also seised of a certain freehold estate in the county of Hereford, and a freehold estate near Ocle Pitcher, in the county of Hereford, but not within the city or liberties of Hereford; another freehold estate, in the parish of Lugwardine, in the county of Hereford, and not within the city or liberties thereof, known by the description of Old Court Farm, a small portion of which was copyhold; a freehold dwelling-house, with a garden and lands, called Pool-house, within the liberties of the city of Hereford; certain copyhold cottages, lands, and tenements, and four leasehold cottages, also within the said liberties; also, a leasehold farm called Pool Farm, situate in the parish of St. Martin, within the said liberties; which farm, together with a portion of open field or common land, lying about three miles distance from it, and not within, but bordering upon the liberties of the city of Hereford, were held by the testator under a lease from the Custos Vicars of the College of Vicars, in the choir of the cathedral church of Hereford, which lease was renewable every seven years.

The testator by his will, bearing date the 30th of January, 1840, among other things, devised as follows: "I give, devise, and bequeath all my freehold, copyhold, and leasehold messuages, lands, and hereditaments, in the city of Hereford, or the liberties thereof, in the county of Hereford, and my two leasehold houses on Ludgate-hill, in the city of London, held by me under the master and fellows of Jesus College, in the University of Cambridge, with the respective appurtenances, unto and to the use of my friends, T. J. Platt, R. Moser, and W. Platt, for the respective estates and interests in the said premises, which I can hereby dispose of, upon trust during the life of my daughter Elizabeth, the wife of S. Platt, to pay the yearly rents of the several hereditaments unto her for her separate use, without the interference or control of her present or any future husband," with power of appointment by will, and in default of such appointment, to her husband, the said S. Platt, for life; the remainder to her children in equal shares and proportions. The testator then provided as follows: "That it shall be lawful for my said trustees, and the survivors and survivor of them, and his heirs, executors, and administrators respectively, during the lifetime of my said daughter, at her request, to sell all or any part of the aforesaid premises, respectively, either by public auction or private contract, or otherwise, and for such considerations as my said daughter shall approve; and the said trustees or trustee, for the time being, shall invest the purchase-moneys arising therefrom in their or his names or name, and with the consent, in writing, of my said daughter, if living, in some or one of the public stocks of Great Britain, or at interest on Government or real securities, with power from time to time, and with the like consent of my said daughter, if living, to vary the said stocks or securities; and the said stocks and securities, and the annual income thereof, shall be held and applied upon the like trusts as are hereinbefore declared concerning the said premises so to be sold." After several other bequests, the testator devised and bequeathed all the residue of the real and personal estate which should belong to him at his death unto and to the use of his daughter, Elizabeth Platt, absolutely; but, in case she should die in the testator's lifetime, then to her said husband absolutely; and he thereby appointed his said daughter and her husband to be the executors of his will. The testator afterwards, but on the same day on which the will bears date, executed a codicil, whereby, revoking the appointment of W. Platt as a trustee, and appointing the plaintiff, C. Platt, in his stead to act as a trustee with the two other trustees before named, thus proceeded: "I direct that the household furniture and effects in or belonging to my dwelling-house, called Pool-house, which I have bequeathed upon trust for the separate use of my daughter, shall not, during her present or any future marriage, be sold, except upon the condition that the net moneys which shall arise from such sale shall be paid to the trustees or trustee for the time being of my will, and this codicil to be by them or him invested and held upon, with, and subject to the same trusts, powers, and provisions as are in my said will declared concerning the proceeds of the sale thereby authorized of Pool-house, and of my other estates in the city and county of Hereford."

The testator died in Dec. 1842. Upon the death of the testator, the defendants, Samuel Platt and Elizabeth his wife, in her right, entered into possession of such of the testator's freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates as were situated within the county of Hereford, but not within the city or liberties of the city of Hereford, and continued in the enjoyment thereof up to the time of filing the bill; and they contended that, according to the true construction of the will, no part of the testator's freehold, copyhold, or leasehold estates which were situate within the county of Hereford or the liberties thereof, were by the will so devised to the plaintiffs as such trustees thereof.

The bill, which was filed by the trustees of the will and codicil, prayed that it might be declared that not only all the freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates situate within the city of Hereford and the liberties thereof, whereof or whereto the testator died seised, possessed, or entitled, but also all the other freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates situate within the the county of Hereford, though not within the city of Hereford or liberties thereof, whereof or whereto the testator died seised, possessed, or entitled, were by the said will and codicil well and effectually devised and bequeathed to the plaintiffs upon the trusts thereof declared in and by the same respectively.

The defendants, Samuel Platt and Elizabeth his wife, put in their demurrer to this bill, for want of equity; and the question to be determined by the Court was, whether those estates situate in the county of Hereford, but which were not within the city or liberties thereof, passed to the trustees, or whether they belonged to the defendant, Elizabeth Platt, as residuary deviseeunder the will of her father, the testator.

The demurrer was argued at considerable length by Hodgson and T. H. Hall, and in support of which the following cases were cited: Doe v. Greathed (8 East, Rep. 91); Doe v. Lord Lucan (9 East, 448); Doe v. Greening (3 Man. & Selw. 171); Doe v Lyford (4 Man. & Selw. 550); Pogson v. Thomas (6 Bing. N.C. 337); Doe v. Bower (3 Barn. & Adol. 453); Anony. (3 Dyer, 261, b.)

Bethel and Bacon, for the plaintiffs.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Although this is a legal question, I do not feel any reluctance in giving my opinion, because the case is clear. As I collect from the plaintiff's statement, the testator was seised of a freehold estate in the county of Hereford; he also had a freehold estate in the county of Hereford, not within the city or liberties of Hereford, and he also had a freehold estate in the parish of Lugwardine, in the county of Hereford. Two acres of this, it is said, were copyhold, twenty-four acres were held upon lease during his life, and the residue was freehold, so that he would have two acres of copyhold in the parish of Lugwardine, in the county of Hereford, not within the city or liberties. In addition to these, the testator had a freehold estate, called Pool-house, within the liberties, certain copyhold and leasehold cottages within the liberties, also a leasehold estate within the liberties; this latter was called Pool Farm, comprehending, however, a small portion of lands in a different parish, together with open lands which were not within the city or liberties of the city. Should any question arise upon that small portion, that must be the subject of further argument. I only now give my opinion upon the question whether the property described in the bill as being in the county of Hereford, but not within the city or liberties, passed by the first devise—or, in other words, whether the Ocle Pitcher estate, and that part of it which lies in the parish of Lugwardine not within the city or liberties, did pass by the first devise. The testator, after having disposed of the different properties which I have before mentioned, devises as follows:—" All my freehold, copyhold, and leasehold messuages, lands, and hereditaments in the city of Hereford, or the liberties thereof, in the county of Hereford, and my two houses on Ludgate-hill," to the uses mentioned in his will. It has been contended, that by the above devise the testator's freehold and copyhold in the county of Hereford, not within the city or liberties thereof, passed, as well as that which was situate within the city and liberties. Now the testator has in that sentence devised two sets of property, of which he has given distinct descriptions: for instance, he has given all his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold premises in the city of Hereford, or the liberties thereof, in the county of Hereford—that is one devise; and his two leasehold houses on Ludgate-hill—that forms another devise. Therefore, to arrive at a decision as to what is the meaning of the words "county of Hereford," you must not construe the passage as forming one sentence, for the testator has broken the description of the two things, the first ending with the words "county of Hereford," and has given a separate description of his leasehold houses on Ludgate-hill. Thus we are confined exclusively to the terms of the first sentence, and I am of opinion that, according to the clear meaning, you cannot construe that as if the word "and" were inserted between the words "thereof" and "in," as was contended at the bar. It must, therefore, be taken as if the words were "in the city of Hereford or the liberties thereof." The consequence of such a construction will be, that no No property in the county of Hereford passed under that devise but what was situate in the city of Hereford, or the liberties thereof. As to the authority given to the trustees to make leases, which was a mere general power, and applicable to whatever was before given, I do not think that circumstance can allow a more ample signification to the first sentence. In that part of the will which relates to the renewal of his leases, he has described the leasehold estate of Pool Farm as being situate in the parish of St. Martin, in the city of Hereford, but it is stated in the bill to be within the liberties. Upon looking at the codicil, we find the following words: "Upon, with, and subject to the same trusts, powers, and provisions as are in my said will declared concerning the proceeds of the sale thereby authorized of Pool-house, and of my other estates in the city and county of Hereford." There he takes notice of part as being in the city of Hereford, and it was reasonable to conclude that the other part was within the county of Hereford. It seems to my mind that the codicil confirms the construction of the will. Had it been a simple direction to sell his estates in the city and county of Hereford, and invest the proceeds thereof, it might then have been contended that such a direction was intended to have had a more extended meaning, but the testator has here referred to the sale authorized by his will, therefore it cannot have a more extensive operation than the sale authorized by the will itself. It appears to me to be perfectly clear that the words in question did not pass any estates in the county of Hereford to the trustees but what were also in the city or liberties thereof. They must, therefore, go to the testator's daughter as residuary devisee.

Demurrer allowed.

ROLLS COURT.

Monday and Wednesday, June 10 & 12.

HARVEY v. MOUNT.

The regular course of practice in proceedings to discredit a witness, is to exhibit articles first, and then apply for a commission to examine witnesses on the subject of those articles; but a motion to grant a commission, and for liberty to exhibit articles at the same time, will not be refused.

This was a bill to set aside a fraudulent settlement executed by Sarah Beake, one of the plaintiffs. It was filed 3rd February, 1842, and amended 17th November following; the answer was filed 13th April, 1842. The deed of settlement in question was dated the 17th November, 1841, and was in favour of Mount and wife (defendants), who were married on the 11th December following; and on the 16th of the same month of December, a conveyance was made by Sarah Beake of the property contained in the settlement to John Fagg Harvey and Richard Sladden (plaintiffs), their heirs, &c., on trusts, &c. (different from the settlement). S. Beake and Mrs. Mount were sisters. Early in January, 1842, William Sladden (solicitor for the plaintiffs) saw Charlotte Sangwell at Deal, and on the information obtained from her (she having been the servant of the two sisters) some of the charges in the bill were founded. Having heard that Mount and wife had been at Deal, and suspecting the object, Sladden went over again the day after the bill was filed, and finding Charlotte Sangwell still abided by her statement, except in one point, he proposed to embody it in an affidavit to be sworn by her, to which she assented. Accordingly, on the 8th of February, he brought another solicitor and master extraordinary, a Mr. Hulke, who administered the oath. The defendants subpœnaed Charlotte Sangwell and examined her, and the plaintiffs also subpœnaed her, but finding, on examination, that she had altered her story, lest they might make her their witness, they only cross-examined her. They did not allude to the affidavit, and gave her no opportunity of explanation. She, however, had a letter in reference to the matter produced to her, and herself referred to the affidavit at the examination. After publication passed, it was found that she had contradicted herself; and the plaintiffs now moved for a commission for the examination of witnesses on an article to be exhibited, as to the credit of Charlotte Sangwell, and as to such particular facts as are not material, &c., and also to be at liberty to exhibit an article as to the credit, &c. And the motion was opposed, on the grounds, first, that the practice of the Court required the articles to be exhibited before the commission was moved for; secondly, that the declaration was improperly obtained, as the affidavit was illegal under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 62; and, thirdly, that Charlotte Sangwell should have been cross-examined as to the document itself, and allowed an opportunity to explain.

The cases cited were, Wood v. Hammerton ([illegible] Ves. 145); Purcell v. M'Namara (8 Ves. 324); White v. Fussell (19 Ves. 127); Reg. v. Nott (7 Jur. Turner and Goodeve, for the motion.

Kindersley and M. E. F. Smith, contra.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I have no doubt that both before and subsequent to the cases of Wood v. Hammerton, and Purcell v. M'Namara, the practice of the Court was to exhibit articles first, and afterwards apply for the commission; but as Lord Eldon, after much consideration, granted both upon the same motion, I cannot, [illegible] that reason, [illegible] so also. As to the other objections I shall consider.

WEST v. HARDWICK.

A married woman being declared by a decree of the Court entitled absolutely to a sum of money, but the order being drawn up directing the payment to be made to her "during life," these latter words were ordered to be struck out. A petition being presented by the husband and wife for a transfer of the fund, the Court, upon examining the wife, ordered a settlement to be made.

William Davis (the father of Mrs. West) bequeathed a part of his residuary estate to his daughter absolutely, and afterwards gave the same to her for life, with remainder to her issue. A bill was filed by Mr. and Mrs. West, alleging the remainders over too remote, and praying a transfer, and a decree was made declaring the remainder over void. A petition was now presented for a transfer of the fund on the examination and consent of Mrs. West. A difficulty arose from the decree first ordering a transfer absolutely, and then directing the payment thereof to Mrs. West "during life." Some other obstacle also appeared to the Court after examining the lady.

Goodeve, for the petition.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said the words "during life" must be struck out of the order, and it would then be consistent. As to the transfer, he could not order it now, but directed a settlement to be made of the fund on the lady, her husband, and children; and then they might apply again.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

GALTON v. EMESS.

Specific performance—Consideration.

A and B being each desirous of purchasing an estate advertised to be sold by auction, agreed that A should be allowed to purchase without opposition by B, and that B should have the right of pre-emption upon certain terms, of that estate and another during A's life, and the offer of the two estates upon the same terms, for twelve months after A's death. A died, having devised the two estates to trustees. Held, that the contract was founded on a valuable consideration, and could be enforced.

In the year 1838, an estate at Oddingley, in the county of Worcester, being advertised for sale by auction, the plaintiff and Mr. John Nash, who were proprietors of lands adjoining the estate, and were both anxious to purchase it, entered into an agreement dated the 20th Nov. 1838, to the following effect, viz. that in consideration of the plaintiff not opposing Nash in the purchase by auction of this estate, Nash engaged that he would not sell such estate (in case he purchased) or the farm of which he was the owner at Oddingley, to any person until he had given the plaintiff the offer thereof at such price as he might purchase the same for, together with all necessary expenses to be laid out in repairs in the meantime, as far as regarded Mr. Williams's farm, and as far as regarded Nash's own farm, at the same price per acre (the timber being paid for in addition) as he might purchase Mr. Williams's for, and the timber on Mr. Williams's to be paid for or not, according as Nash might purchase Mr. Williams's estate, either by having the timber included in the price, or by paying for it at a valuation; and Nash engaged that in case he purchased Mr. Williams's estate, the plaintiff, or his heir-at-law, should in any case have the offer for twelve months of both the estates above mentioned upon the terms aforesaid, by the trustees under the will of the said John Nash, to whom he would give ample powers for that purpose. Nash became the purchaser of the estate, inclusive of the timber, for 4,900*l.* Previously to the date of the above agreement Nash had, by his will, dated the 22nd Oct. 1830, devised the farm of which he was the owner at Oddingley to trustees to uses in strict settlement. By a codicil, dated 22nd Aug. 1839, Nash devised the estate he had purchased of Williams to the same trustees, to uses in strict settlement. The object of the present suit was to obtain a specific performance of the agreement of the 20th Nov. 1838.

Russell and Amphlett, for the plaintiff.

Wigram and Hubback, for some of the defendants, opposed the relief prayed, and cited Fain v. Brown (2 Ves. 307 cited); White's case (3 Swanst. 108, n.); Twining v. Morris (2 Bro. C.C. 326); and Howell v. George (1 Madd. 1).

Gellart, G. T. White, Cameron, and Parry, for other defendants.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Two men severally desirous of buying an estate, become acquainted with each other's intentions, and agree that one of the two should retire. It is no part of the case that there was any fraud or misrepresentation used. No authority has been cited to shew that such conduct is illegal, and the defendants have not asked for an opportunity to try the case at law. In the absence, therefore, of any authority, and in the absence of an intention to try at law, I shall hold that such a bargain is not illegal; and if it is not illegal, I apprehend that such a contract may form a valuable consideration. I think no case of hardship, or otherwise, has been shewn to prevent a court of equity from enforcing this agreement.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Thursday, May 30.

REG. v. BLAKE.

Conspiracy—Evidence—Declarations of co-conspirators.

Thesiger, S. G. and W. F. Pollock shewed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the Crown, and for a new trial, which had been obtained upon the ground of the misreception of evidence.

This was an ex officio information filed by the Attorney-General against the defendant Blake, who was a landing-waiter at the Custom-house, and Chamberlain Tighe, a Custom-house agent, for conspiring together to pass certain goods through the Custom-house at a less duty than was of right payable upon them, with intent to defraud the revenue. In the course of business at the Custom-house, it appeared there is what is called the Blue-book, containing the original entry of the goods, and from which the perfect entry on which the duty is paid, is made out. Tighe had been in partnership with a person of the name of Shearer, as a Custom-house agent, and in the course of business was employed to pass certain goods for Messrs. Smith and Anderson. The amount of duty in the perfect entry was 19*l.* and that corresponded with the Blue-book; but it was shewn that the Blue-book had been fraudulently altered, and evidence was given to connect Blake with that alteration. It was then proposed to put in Tighe and Shearer's books, in which it appeared, by an entry in Tighe's handwriting, that he had charged Smith and Anderson with duty to the amount of 26*l.* 10s. 5d. leaving a difference of 7*l.* 10s. 5d. between the amount paid by Smith and Anderson and that received by the Government. It further appeared that Tighe and Shearer had an account with Messrs. Sappe and Co. the bankers, and that on the 4th of October, 1841, Tighe had drawn a certain cheque upon them for the sum of 82*l.* and two of the 10*l.* notes by which that cheque had been paid were traced to Blake's possession. It was then proposed to put in the counterfoil of the cheque, which was in Shearer's possession, bearing date the 4th day of October, 1841, with the initials D. B. (which it was suggested meant Dennis Blake, the defendant) and then several transactions, together amounting to 164*l.* (among which was one for 7*l.* 10s. 5d. with the initials S. and A. opposite, which it was suggested meant Smith and Anderson) were entered, and a cheque appeared to have been given to D. B. for 82*l.* just one-half of that amount. Tighe had absconded, and when it was proposed to give these matters in evidence, it was objected that they were inadmissible, on the ground that no proof had been given at that stage of the proceeding of the existence of any conspiracy between Blake and Tighe, and until that was done, they were no more than declarations accompanying an act of a third person, and could not be evidence against the defendant Blake. It was submitted that the conspiracy had been already proved, therefore the evidence was rightly received, not as a mere declaration accompanying an act of one of the co-conspirators for the purpose of proving the conspiracy, but as independent evidence to shew that Blake had received one-half of the proceeds of the duty of which the Government had been defrauded, and might be considered as an act necessary to be done in order to give effect to the conspiracy: citing 1 East, P. C. 96; 2 Russ. on Cr. 698, 3rd ed.; Ph. on Ev. 210, 9th ed.; 2 Stark. on Ev. 329; Rex v. Sutter (5 Esp. 125); Rex v. Stone (6 T. R. 527); Rex v. Hardy (24 St. Trials, 447, 451); Reg. v. Murphy (8 C. & P. 497); Rex v. Watson (2 Stark R. 104).

Cockburn, Humfrey, and Warren, contrà, not heard.

By the COURT.—On the first point we entertain no doubt that the evidence was clearly receivable as happening in the course of the transactions laid before the jury, and as a part of the evidence from which the conspiracy might be inferred. But, upon the second point, it was considered at the trial that the counterfoil of the cheque might be admissible as evidence of an act done which was necessary to be done in order to give effect to the conspiracy. It is clear, however, upon consideration, that that cannot be so, for full effect might have been given to the conspiracy without any statement by the party of what was done with the money. It was merely proof, therefore, of an act done after the offence was completed, and could have no connection with the conspiracy itself. Rule absolute.

REG. v. TOWN COUNCIL OF MANCHESTER.

Mandamus—Particulars of claim.

Kelly moved for a rule calling upon Mr. Harper, the clerk of the peace for the county palatine of Lancaster, to deliver particulars of his claim for compensation, and to shew cause why he should not be restrained from bringing forward, at the trial of the writ of mandamus, any other claims than those which were brought under the consideration of the Court upon the motion for the mandamus.

This was a writ of mandamus obtained by Mr. Harper, commanding the defendants to award him compensation in consequence of the establishment of the Court of Quarter Sessions at Manchester, and to which he contended he was entitled, in consequence of the fees and emoluments on all criminal business in the county palatine being payable to him by virtue of his office of clerk of the peace. The defendants had returned as an answer to the writ, that the establishment of the Court of Quarter Sessions was not such a loss as was contemplated by the Act of Parliament. This the prosecutor traversed, and it was now found that unless he was restrained by the Court, it would be open to him to bring forward on the trial claims which had never been before the Court at all.

By the COURT.—We ought not to make this a precedent for doing any thing of the kind, for the parties had it in their own hands at the time of making the return. Rule refused.

YOUNG v. HITCHENS.

Amendment of Record.

M. Smith moved for a rule nisi to amend the record on payment of costs by the plaintiff, by entering a nonsuit or discontinuance instead of a verdict for the defendant.

This was an action of trespass for seizing, taking, and driving away the fish of the plaintiff.

Plea—Not possessed.

It appeared that a shoal of mackerel having been discovered in the bay of St. Ives, the plaintiff's boat went out and cast a net, which included the shoal; the defendant's boat went out afterwards, contending that the plaintiff had not complied with the St. Ives Act of Parliament, and threw his nets within the plaintiff's net, and seized the fish in question. 600*l.* had been paid into court to abide the event of the trial. The rule for a new trial, or to enter a verdict for the defendant, was argued on the 10th Feb. (2 Law T. 420), when the Court directed the verdict to be entered for the defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff could not be said to have been possessed of the fish, as there had been no actual seizure, and there was a space through which the fish might have escaped. It was submitted that the real question had not been decided; since it was supposed that the only question to be tried was, whether, under the St. Ives Act, the fish belonged to the plaintiff or defendant; that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to a new trial, but that the record, as it at present stands, would be a bar to any future action. Rule nisi.

Tuesday, June 11.

LEWIS v. PRIMROSE.

An attorney's bill must contain the name of the court in which the business is done, otherwise it is ground for a nonsuit in an action to recover the amount.

Jervis and Hoggins shewed cause against a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the Nisi Prius record, and all proceedings subsequent to the passing of the record, should not be set aside for irregularity, or why the verdict for the plaintiff should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered. The rule was obtained upon the ground that the writ of summons was not correctly stated in the record, inasmuch as the original writ of summons had been followed up by an alias writ, and the date mentioned in the Nisi Prius record was that of the alias instead of the original writ of summons. The ground of nonsuit was as follows:— The action was upon an attorney's bill, and the bill, when produced, did not shew in what suit the business had been done, nor in what court, nor any day of the month, but only the month in which the bill was delivered. It was submitted that the irregularity, if any, had been waived, because the defendant must have received the issue and notice of trial, and ought to have taken out a summons before a judge at chambers, to have had it amended according to the fact at the plaintiff's expense. With regard to the nonsuit, the impression of the Court in Lester v. Lazarus (2 C. M. & R. 665) appeared to be, that the name of the court need not be mentioned, and that at any rate a nonsuit could not be entered, as a part of the business was correctly stated: citing Lane v. Glennie (7 A. & E. 83; R.G. H. T. 4 Wm. 4, R. 33); Cooze v. Neumegen (1 Dowl. N.S. 429).

Platt and Lush, contrà, citing Whipple v. Manby (1 M. & W. 432); Emery v. Howard (1 Q. B. 426); White v. Farrer (2 M. & W. 288); Re Lord Cardross (5 M. & W. 545).

By the COURT.—It is not necessary to give any opinion upon the first objection, because we think the second objection fatal, and that the holding this bill of costs to be sufficient, would be to repeal the statute of 2 Geo. 2, c. 23. The very object of that Act of Parliament is to enable the defendant to take the bill to another attorney, and ask him whether it is fair; but how can he do so unless you tell him in what court the business is done? The want of that information makes it no bill at all. In Lester v. Lazarus, there was no decision upon the point, because it was not before the Court, and therefore that case is not at variance with our present decision.

Rule absolute.

Reg. v. Bayley and Another.

A party who is charged with being the putative father of a bastard child under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, and declares to the justices that he is desirous that the charge shall be heard and determined at the quarter sessions of the peace, and enters into the recognizances required by the 3rd section of that statute, can only do so before the case has begun to be heard, and not afterwards, as that statute did not intend to give an appeal from the judgment of the petty sessions, but only an option of the tribunal before which the case should be heard.

Baines and Pickering shewed cause against a rule for a certiorari to bring up an order of bastardy for the purpose of being quashed.

The rule was obtained on three grounds: 1st, that the order was made after the party had declared his wish that the charge should be heard at quarter sessions, and that therefore the justices had not jurisdiction to proceed further; 2nd, that the order was for the payment of the sum of 9s. 4d. as the amount of the expense actually incurred by the parish in the support of the child before the making of the order; and that there was no jurisdiction to make that order, inasmuch as the birth of the child was stated therein to have taken place more than six months before the date of such order, whereas the Act of Parliament does not enable the justices to order maintenance for more than six months; and, thirdly, that the complaint was made by the churchwardens and overseers of the township of Ripon, whereas the township of Ripon has no churchwardens at all. It appeared that the party upon whom the order was made went before the magistrates at petty sessions; they heard the complaint, and it was not until the magistrates had decided that the prosecutors need not give any more corroborative evidence, that he stated his intention to have the case heard at the quarter sessions, and thereupon tendered the necessary bail. It was submitted, on the first point, that the intention of the Legislature was to give the party the choice of two tribunals, but not to give him the chance of both; and that he was, therefore, bound to make his election at the outset, by which tribunal he would have his case decided. With respect to the second point, it was submitted the order was good, inasmuch as, although the child was more than six months old at the time of the making of the order, it was proved before the justices that it had only been chargeable to the township of Ripon for one month before, and therefore the justices had awarded costs in reference to that month only, and, at any rate, the objection would not vitiate the whole order. With respect to the third point, it was submitted, that inasmuch as it had been decided that churchwardens are merely ecclesiastical officers, the addition of their names was a mere addition of the names of parties who were not called upon to join, and could not vitiate the order, because that might be struck out, and the names of the overseers alone would then stand, and the order would still be perfectly good; citing Reg. v. Goodhall (2 Dowl. N.S. 382); Rex v. Suffolk (6 M. & Sel. 57); Rex v. Gill (Russ. & Ry. 431); Rex v. Picton (2 East, 195); Rex v. Stockdale (5 B. & Ad. 546); Reg. v. Justices of Wiltshire (12 A. & E. 793).

Martin, contrà, contended that the intention of the legislature must have been to give the party against whom the complaint was made an appeal to the quarter sessions; and that the words of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, s. 3, directing that if "the party charged shall declare to the justices that he is desirous that the charge shall be heard at the quarter sessions, &c. that then the said justices "shall not proceed further to hear the charge," plainly shewed that the time for appealing was at any time before their delivering judgment. With respect to the second objection, it was perfectly clear, under the statute itself, that the order was bad; and, thirdly, that the order was bad, inasmuch as there were no churchwardens of Ripon, and therefore it was an order to pay a sum to non-existent persons; that if it be suggested the churchwardens of the parish of Ripon are the persons intended, still the order would be ambiguous, and being a hostile order, must be construed strictly, in the same manner as the judgment of any court, and was therefore void.

By the Court.—By the 72nd section of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, jurisdiction was given to the justices at sessions to hear and determine complaints of this kind; then it was found convenient that the party should be obliged to go to the sessions, and the Legislature, therefore, by this Act of Parliament (2 & 3 Vict. c. 85) compelled the application to be heard in the first instance at the petty sessions. But then, the parties might not altogether like that, and they, therefore, gave them the right to go to the quarter sessions, and have the case heard there instead. If the Legislature had meant to give an appeal, why do they not say so? for in cases where they do mean it, they generally say so in express terms. The object of this enactment is, that the party may have his choice of the tribunal before which his case is to be heard. If he does not choose to submit it to the jurisdiction of the magistrates at petty sessions, he has the option of going to the quarter sessions; and then the justices at petty sessions shall not proceed further to hear the charges. But that must be before there is any hearing at all; for it would be a complete mockery of justice for a man to be allowed to select his tribunal, perhaps on account of its ignorance, and then, when he has found himself mistaken, to say, I will now try the other. With respect to the 9s. 4d. we must give the ordinary sense to the words of the Act of Parliament; and here the order is drawn up as if it were a payment for the expenses of the parish from the commencement of the liability, and is therefore bad. With respect to the third point there might be some little doubt; but if there are, as suggested, no churchwardens at all, then the doctrine of utile per inutile non vitiatur applies, and the order would be good by striking out that part of it which orders payment to the churchwardens. Rule absolute to strike out the sum of 9s. 4d.

Wednesday, June 12.

Brown v. Pegg.

(Argued May 22.)

Stamp.

Erle and Ball shewed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff and to enter a nonsuit.

This was an action of covenant brought by the plaintiff to recover the sum of 165*l.* and interest, secured by an indenture, which recited, that the defendant had assigned a certain lease for the term of 1,000 years to A B, for securing the repayment of two several sums of 50*l.* and interest. It also recited that, by a subsequent deed, the lease had been charged with a further sum of 50*l.*; that the defendant had a power of appointment over the fee of the premises in question, and that the said A B had called for repayment of the 150*l.* The defendant then, by the deed in question, in consideration of 150*l.* paid by the plaintiff to A B, and of the further sum of 15*l.* paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, appointed the premises in fee to the plaintiff, to secure the sum of 165*l.* and covenanted to pay the said sum of 165*l.* and interest, and by the same deed A B assigned the lease to a trustee, in trust for the plaintiff and to attend the inheritance. The deed consisted of three skins, each of which had a 1*l.* stamp, and it was submitted it was properly stamped.

Peacock, contrà, contended that, whether or not the deed amounted to a transfer of the mortgage, it required a 35s. stamp in respect of the new covenant, and as it had merely the ad valorem duty upon it, in respect of the 15*l.* the stamp was insufficient, under 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, tit. Mortgage; and 3 Geo. 4, c. 117; citing Doe dem. Bartley v. Gray (3 A. & E. 89); Doe dem. Barnes v. Roe (4 N. C. 737; S. C. 6 Scott R. 525); Lant v. Pearce (3 N. & P. 329; S. C. 8 A. & E. 248).

By the Court.—It is clear this operated as a new security and that a deed-stamp, at least, became necessary in consequence thereof. The rule must therefore be made absolute for a nonsuit.

Rule absolute.

Reg. v. Williams.

Where a party grieved within the meaning of 5 & 6 Wm. & M. c. 11, s. 3, is also the prosecutor of an indictment for nuisance, upon which the defendant is convicted, he is entitled to the costs given by that statute as "the prosecutor and party grieved," notwithstanding he may have received assistance from other parties, who, together with himself, have subscribed to raise a fund for the purpose of conducting the prosecution.

Welsby shewed cause against a rule calling upon a gentleman of the name of Worthington to shew cause why the side-bar rule in this case should not be set aside.

This was an indictment for a nuisance, by means of certain alkali-works, and the defendant having removed the cause by certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench, upon the trial a verdict was found against him, and he was thereupon sentenced to two months' imprisonment. The usual side-bar rule to tax the costs of the prosecution had issued under the 5 & 6 Wm. & M. c. 11, s. 3, and the present rule had been obtained to set that aside, upon the ground that, although Mr. Worthington was the nominal prosecutor, he was not "the prosecutor and party grieved" within the meaning of that Act, inasmuch as he was only one of several who had subscribed together a sum of money for the purpose of conducting the prosecution, and was at any rate only entitled to so much of the costs as he had personally subscribed. It was admitted by the affidavits that Mr. Worthington was living within 800 yards of the works, and in that respect was clearly a party grieved; but it also appeared that the prosecution, although carried on in his name only, was in reality conducted at the expense of himself and three other parties, one of whom was the attorney conducting the prosecution, each of them living within reach of the nuisance. It was submitted that these facts were sufficient to shew him to be the prosecutor and party grieved within the meaning of the Act: citing Rex v. Cooke (1 Man. & Ry. 526); Rex v. Dewsnap (16 East, 194).

Cole, contrà, contended, in the first place, that the side-bar rule being entitled "The Queen on the prosecution of Wm. Worthington," was drawn up wrongly, and should have been entitled in the name of the four prosecutors instead of that of Mr. Worthington only; and, secondly, that it would be unreasonable to give the whole costs of the prosecution to a party who had apparently only agreed to contribute a fourth, and therefore at most the rule ought only to give him so much as he had actually agreed to contribute; but it was further submitted that many difficult questions would arise were the Court to give only a proportion of costs, and therefore the proper course would be to decide, that inasmuch as he did not conduct this prosecution at his own individual expense, he could not be considered as "the prosecutor and party grieved," within the meaning of the Act: citing Rex v. Dewhurst (5 B. & Ad. 405); Reg. v. Waldegrave (2 Q. B. 341); Reg. v. Taunton Saint Mary (3 M. & Sel. 465).

By the Court.—It appears to us that this party is a party grieved, and we think he must also be considered as the prosecutor within the meaning of the statute, since he makes himself liable to the attorney for the costs of the prosecution. We agree that it would be extremely inconvenient to inquire, in a case of this kind, how much each party has contributed to the costs of the prosecution, but for that very reason we come to a different conclusion, and are of opinion that where a party grieved is the prosecutor of the indictment, he is nevertheless entitled to the expenses of the prosecution, although he may have received assistance from other parties. We will only further remark, that we consider this case quite different from that of Rex v. Cooke.

Rule discharged.

Doe dem. Buttriss v. Roe.

No affidavit can be read, in the jurat of which there is any interlineation or erasure. Reg. Gen. Mich. T. 37 Geo. 3.

Hayward shewed cause against a rule to rescind two orders of a learned judge. He was about to shew cause upon two affidavits, when Platt (Horn with him) objected that he could not use them, for one was not sworn at all, and the other had an erasure in the jurat: citing R. G. M. T. 37 Geo. 3 (7 T. R. 82), whereby it is ordered, that no affidavit be read, or made use of, in any matter depending in this court, in the jurat of which there shall be any interlineation or erasure.

By the Court.—This is an erasure, certainly, one word is struck out, and another put in; the 10th is struck out, and the 16th put over it. Neither of the affidavits can be read. Rule absolute.

Reg. v. The Corporation of Birmingham.

The Court will not order the return to a mandamus to be taken off the files of the Court, notwithstanding it contains several matters, some of which, if true, would be a good answer to the writ, and which would be admitted by the prosecutors demurring under stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 67, for the purpose of objecting to the validity of the other part of the return.

Whitehurst moved for a rule, calling on the defendants to shew cause why a return made by them to a writ of mandamus should not be taken off the files of the Court, and quashed. The rule was applied for upon the ground that the corporation had returned several matters, some of which, if admitted, would be a good answer to the writ, and others not; but by the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 67, s. 1, it is provided, "that in all cases in which the person prosecuting any such writ (of mandamus) heretofore issued, or hereafter to be issued, shall wish or intend to object to the validity of any return already made, or hereafter to be made to the same, he shall do so by way of demurrer to the [illegible], in such and the like manner as is now practised and used in the courts hereinbefore mentioned respectively in personal actions." The consequence of compliance with this statute would be to defeat the prosecutor's claim altogether, because, by demurring to the whole return he must admit that part, which, if true, would be a good answer, and which, but for the statute, he would traverse. It was submitted that the statute having omitted the words "or any part thereof," only contemplated the case in which a single return was made, and did not apply where there is a return of more answers than one.

By the Court.—We do not see the difficulty so great as you do, and it would be a very strong measure to take the return off the files of the court.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

FITZGERALD v. FITZGERALD. Referred to the Master.

DAVIES v. LOWNDES.
Writ of right.

Gray shewed cause.
Talfourd, contrà. Cur. adv. vult.

JAMES v. BRAMALL.
Judgment—Irregularity—Issuable plea.

Gazelee, Serjt. shewed cause why the judgment in this cause should not be set aside for irregularity. The defendant was under terms to plead issuably, and had pleaded a non-issuable plea. The plaintiff was the indorsee of a bill of exchange, the subject of the action; the defendant, the indorser. The plea objected to set out that the defendant had had no consideration for indorsing, and that he indorsed in blank; and that it was delivered so indorsed to the plaintiff after it became due. This was not an issuable plea. (Charles v. Marsden, 1 Taunt.; Sturtevant v. Horn, 4 M. & G. 101; Waterfall v. Glode, 3 T. R. 305; Serle v. Bradshaw, 2 C. & M. 148.)

Shee, Serjt. contrà.

Rule discharged on payment of costs; to take any notice of trial the plaintiff can give for the sittings after term; judgment to be of the term.

STEAD v. CAREY.
Issuable plea—Judgment—Irregularity.

Shee, Serjt. shewed cause why judgment signed in this cause should not be set aside for irregularity. The defendant was under terms to plead issuably. There were several pleas on the record. The 8th plea stated that no company or joint stock association has been formed under the provisions of the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 91, and that by this failure the Act had become inoperative, and the letters patent void. That plea was not issuable, and was frivolous.

Manning, Serjt. contrà. Rule absolute.

BRISTOW v. NEEDHAM.
Costs—Set-off.

Shee, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule, why the taxed costs in this cause should not be set off against a sum of 22,350*l.* recovered in action brought in the Exchequer.

Dowling, Serjt. contrà.

Rule discharged without costs.

HARDY v. WATSON.
Issuable plea—Trespass.

Byles, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Dowling, why the defendant should not have liberty to put upon the record a certain plea. The defendant was under terms to plead issuably, and to an action of trespass for crim. con. with the plaintiff's wife, had pleaded, that at the time of the commission of the trespasses in the declaration mentioned, the plaintiff lived apart from his wife. There was no precedent for such a plea. This plea would amount to a plea of leave and license, and would be a plea contra bonos mores. A voluntary separation without deed is no bar. (Weedon v. Timbrell, 5 T. R. 357; Hodges v. Windham, Peakes, C. 39; Chambers v. Caulfield, 6 East, 244.) This is a case of the first impression; no such plea has been allowed since the new rules.

Dowling, Serjt.—It is not necessary to contend that this plea will stand the test of a demurrer. Unless it appear frivolous, your lordships will not set it aside. It has been decided by the Queen's Bench to be a good plea. Rule absolute.

TAYLOR v. ROBERTS.

Where there are several issues of law and of fact, and there is among the issues in fact any which are not the subject of demurrer, the Court will not interfere to order the issues of law to be tried first.

Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause why the trials of certain issues of fact should not be postponed until after the decision of the Court upon issues of law set down for argument on demurrer.

There were several counts; among them one for an assault, to which there was no demurrer; and the plaintiff could try this issue if he thought proper.

Dowling, Serjt. contra, citing Cracknell v. Trueman (9 M. & W. 684); Burdett v. Colman (13 East, 27).

TINDAL, C.J.—The last case does not apply to the present, where there is a distinct count for an assault separate from all the other counts demurred to. I cannot see what right we have to compel the plaintiff not to try that first.

Rule discharged, costs in the cause.

BENTLEY v. KEIGHTLEY.
Patent—Particulars—Effect of the word "others."

Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause why the defendant should not deliver better particulars respecting a patent for a certain improvement in the manufacture of cards:

The question was, whether the defendant was bound to give the names of all the parties and leave out the term "others." Bulnois v. Mackenzie (4 Bing. N. C. 127) decided that it is necessary to give greater particularity in the particulars than in the special plea. Jones v. Burger (Webster's Pat. Cases) differs from this case; Russell v. Ledsam (11 M. & W. 647) is in point.

Channell, Serjt.—In Bulnois v. Mackenzie the Court expressed a strong opinion that it was not necessary to give the names at all. All the cases in this court sustain this case.

TINDAL, C. J.—All you want is the word "others" to be struck out. It appears that the other courts in both instances have taken a somewhat different view of the objection than this Court has done in Jones v. Burger. On the whole, I do not think the word ought to be expunged. There is no imputation of withholding any name or of any fraud; and it may be, the names of the other people are not known. It would be going further than the fair interpretation of the statute ought to carry us.

Wednesday, June 12.

DE WOLFF and ANOTHER, Assignees, v. BEVAN and ANOTHER.
Special demurrer—Duplicity.

Demurrer to replication.

Watson, Q.C. (Denman with him), in support of demurrer.

Crompton, contrà.

Declaration in trover.—First count on the possession of the bankrupts.

Plea to so much of the first count as relates to five puncheons of brandy:—That the defendants, before the bankrupts became possessed thereof, were possessed as warehousemen to Falk, Brothers, and that the bankrupts afterwards purchased the same from Falk, Brothers, to be paid for by the acceptance of the bankrupts, at four months after date; and, from and after the said purchase, the defendants were possessed of the said puncheons as warehousemen of the said bankrupts, and afterwards, and before the bankruptcy, the said acceptance became due, and the said bankrupts being then unable to pay the same, and being threatened with proceedings by the said Falk, Brothers, in consideration of their forbearance and of their abandoning their claim on the said acceptance, and of their accepting the said puncheons in discharge thereof, it was agreed by and between Falk, Brothers, and the bankrupts, that the bankrupts should re-transfer the puncheons to Falk, Brothers; and the defendants then had notice of and assented to such re-transfer before the bankruptcy, and before the defendants or the said Falk, Brothers, had notice of any fiat or any act of bankruptcy, and the puncheons were then re-transferred to Messrs. Falk, Brothers, and were by them accepted in satisfaction and discharge of the acceptance, and that the puncheons reverted to the said Falk, Brothers, as aforesaid; and that when applied to by the assignees, the defendant refused to deliver up said puncheons for the cause aforesaid, which is the conversion in the said first count mentioned.

Verification.

Replication.—That it was not agreed between the said persons, nor were the said brandies re-transferred, &c. or accepted in satisfaction and discharge, as in the said plea mentioned.

Conclusion to the country.

Demurrer—Assigning for special causes that the traverse was too large, and that it put in issue both the agreement and the re-delivery, each of which was a distinct and single allegation, without which the plea would have been insufficient; and that by traversing both, the plaintiff threw upon the defendant an unnecessary burden of proof, and that the replication was double, and raised two distinct issues, and contained two answers to the plea, &c.

Joinder in demurrer.

On the part of the plaintiff it was contended that, although the replication traversed two facts, yet that those facts together only made one point of defence, and that the traverse was not too large.

For the defendants it was argued that the replication was informal, for the reasons specially assigned.

By the COURT.—There are several grounds of objection taken to this replication. The first is, that it is bad for duplicity, and, if decided in favour of the defendants, it will be unnecessary to consider the others. The rule laid down by Lord Coke (Co. Litt. 126(a) is, that an issue must be taken on one material point, but that point need not always consist of a single fact (Robinson v. Gray, 1 Burr. 316), but must be one matter of defence (4 P. & D. 348). We have to consider in this case whether the traverse involves one matter of defence or more, and we think it includes two. It has been said, that whenever a number of facts may be put in issue by the general traverse de injuriâ, the same thing may be effected by a cumulative traverse; but even if so, that does not apply here, as it is quite clear that the plea contains matter of title to the goods, and that de injuriâ would have been a bad traverse. The replication is bad, but the plaintiff may have leave to amend on payment of costs.

Judgment for defendant.

TURNER and OTHERS, Assignees, v. MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND BURGESSES OF KENDAL.

The Court will not on the last day of Term entertain a motion for an interpleader rule which involves a question of law arising upon the Act of Parliament. Semble—That where an action is brought by assignees for work and labour; and the son of the bankrupt also claims the amount, on the ground that the contract was with him, the Court will not interfere by interpleader.

Jervis, Q. C. for the claimant, and Cardwell, for the plaintiff, shewed cause against a rule obtained by Cowling on behalf of the defendants under the Interpleader Act.

The action was for work and labour done by the bankrupt for the defendants. The adverse claim was by the son of the bankrupt, who asserted that the work was ordered from, and done by him and his servants.

It was objected that the Act did not extend to cases where, as here, the defendants had made an express contract, and were bound to know with whom they had dealt.

By the COURT.—This rule should not have been moved on the last day of Term. It appears to involve a very nice question of the construction of the statute. There is no new state of things here. There is no dispute about property arising out of the bankruptcy. The defendants here have made a contract, and it ought to be peculiarly within their own knowledge with whom they contracted. They come to the Court to help them out of a situation of uncertainty into which they have put themselves. The point is one which we should have to consider fully before we could decide for the defendants. We cannot enter into such a discussion on the last day of Term.

Rule discharged.

SMALLCOMBE v. OLLIVIER.

An order of the Lord Chancellor annulling a fiat has not such a retrospective effect as to render false a return of nulla bona, made by the sheriff during the existence of the fiat, to a writ of fi. fa. against the bankrupt.

Action against the sheriff for a false return.

A fi. fa. had issued against a person who, before the writ came to the hands of the sheriff, became a bankrupt. The sheriff returned nulla bona, there being at the time sufficient property in the hands of the assignees to have satisfied the execution. The fiat was subsequently annulled by an order of the Lord Chancellor. It was contended at the trial that the order took a retrospective effect, and put all parties in the same position as if no fiat had ever existed; that the fiat had become a complete nullity from the first; and that the return had become false. The learned judge who tried the case took this view, and under his direction the jury found for the plaintiff, leave being reserved to the defendant to move to enter a verdict for him if the Court should be of a different opinion. A rule was accordingly obtained by Erle, Q. C. last Hilary Term.

Thesiger, Jas. Russell, and W. I. Alexander afterwards shewed cause: citing 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, s. 19; 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. [illegible]; Ex parte Brown (1 Rose, 433, S. D. & De Gex, 239).

The Court took time to consider, and now delivered judgment.

By the COURT.—This was an action for a false return of nulla bona. It appeared that the plaintiff issued a fi. fa. The debtor became bankrupt before the execution. Assignees were appointed, and the sheriff returned nulla bona. The fiat was annulled by order of the Lord Chancellor, confirming one of the Court of Review. On the part of the plaintiff it was contended that, the fiat having been annulled, the rights of the parties must be considered as if no such fiat had ever existed. On the part of the defendant it was argued, that the order of the Chancellor had no retrospective effect. The return of the sheriff was true at that time, and must be true now, unless the operation of the supersedeas under the old, or of the order under the present statute, be so entirely to nullify the proceedings in point of law that we can take no notice even of their temporary existence. It must have been rendered false by the ex post facto order of the Lord Chancellor. The point then resolves itself into the effect of a subsequent supersedeas or reversal upon a return of nulla bona made during the existence of a commission, and after the assignment of the bankrupt's goods. For the purpose of the bankrupt law, it is necessary that those who are to administer the property should take an absolute title so as to secure purchasers. Unless there were something very positive in the statute, the Court would be extremely unwilling to say that the Chancellor's order could affect that title. The proposition of the plaintiff is certainly startling. If it is well founded, a debtor of the bankrupt who had been sued by the assignees during the existence of the commission, might, after a supersedeas, be called upon to pay the debt over again to the bankrupt. There are still more startling propositions resulting from this doctrine.

If the bankrupt absconds, and does not appear before the Commissioners, he is guilty of a felony which was formerly capital, and yet, what is now contended is, that the Lord Chancellor has power to convert a felony into an innocent act. Again, there are certain powers in the Commissioners to apprehend a bankrupt, and even to take away his life, if he cannot otherwise be apprehended, and yet the present argument would go to shew that by a subsequent supersedeas, these Acts would be deprived of their justification, would amount to grave offences, and might even subject those who had obeyed the orders of the Commissioners to the penalty of murder.

There was no power before the statute of Elizabeth in the Chancellor to undo or destroy any thing done by himself or the other great officers under the statute of Henry VIII. Wherever the writ of supersedeas has issued, a writ of procedendo may issue afterwards, which would destroy the effect of the supersedeas; so that the acts above mentioned would be criminal, or not, according as one or other of those writs was in force. It is no answer to say that the Lord Chancellor will take care in his discretion not to occasion these inconveniences, for this very case is an instance of the difficulties which may occur. On all these grounds we think the sheriff ought to have the verdict entered for him. We must not conceal from ourselves, that we are acting in opposition to, not, indeed, judicial decisions, but very high dicta, delivered under circumstances which leave no room for doubt that the learned persons delivering them entertained very strong opinions upon the subject. Certainly, the opinion of Lord Eldon was, that a supersedeas puts the parties in the same position as if no commission had ever existed; and that opinion was strongly expressed in the case of Ex parte Smith, cited in argument. Lord Hardwicke and Lord Macclesfield were of the same opinion.

It may be that the sheriff would be entitled to a verdict on other grounds. Even if the supersedeas were held to destroy the effect of the fiat altogether, this might be subject to an exception in the case of a sheriff, who is a public officer and entitled to protection in the exercise of his duty, but it is unnecessary to decide this. The reasons which have led us to differ from Lord Eldon are so satisfactory to our minds that we have no hesitation in acting upon them.

Rule absolute.

OXLEY v. JAMES.

If a tenant from year to year make a lease for 34 years, and the lessee underlease for 12 years, and afterwards assign his reversion, the assignee takes a reversion which enables him to sue upon a covenant to repair.

V. Williams shewed cause against a rule obtained by Martin, Q.C. for a new trial, on the ground of improper rejection of evidence and on affidavits of surprise. Upon the first ground there was no argument, the Court intimating that they thought the learned judge's decision right. The second point arose upon the following facts. The action was by the assignee of the reversion against a lessee for twelve years, whose lease was expired, for not repairing. It appeared that many years ago A, B, and C, who were tenants of the premises in question from year to year, granted a lease of them for thirty-four years. The lessee for thirty-four years granted the present lease for twelve years, containing a covenant to repair, and afterwards assigned their reversion to the present plaintiffs.

The question was, whether there was, under these circumstances, any reversion capable of being assigned.

It was contended for the defendant that the original lessees having granted a greater interest than they themselves had, there was no reversion in them, and that their lessee took no estate out of which he could have a reversion. It was also contended that the estate of the plaintiffs, if any, was for thirty-four years, subject to be divested whenever the tenancy from year to year should terminate, and that it should have been so described in the declaration, and not as an estate for thirty-four years absolutely.

By the COURT.—This is an application for a new trial upon two grounds. Upon the first, we think the learned judge was right, and there can be no rule; on the other, if we were to grant a new trial it would be in order that substantial justice might be done to a party who we thought would otherwise be wronged. But in this case we do not think that the ground intended to be relied upon by the defendant at another trial would be sufficient. We think that where a tenant from year to year lets either to another tenant from year to year, or for a term certain, if the original tenancy continues and lasts over the term, there is a sufficient reversion. The only doubt we have had is whether the declaration as it stands is quite sufficient to enable the plaintiffs to recover; whether, in fact, the plaintiff's interest ought not to have been described as a tenancy for thirty-four years, subject to be divested on the termination of the original tenancy. But the declaration, if not quite correct, might easily be made so by amendment; and as the merits are clearly with the plaintiffs, we do not think the Court can interfere on the ground of surprise, to admit a defence not founded on substantial justice.

MELANOTTE, Executor, v. TEASDALE.

An I O U containing a promise to pay interest till paid does not require a stamp.

Crowder, Q. C. and Bramwell shewed cause against a rule obtained by Martin, Q. C. for a new trial, upon the ground that the learned judge had admitted the following document without a stamp:—"I O U 45*l.* 13*s.* which I borrowed of Mrs. M. to pay 5 per cent. interest till paid. A. B."

By the COURT.—We must consider it as settled law that a document of this sort does not require a stamp. The doctrine is older than the last Stamp Act; and as the Act does not notice such instruments more strongly than any former Act, we may infer that it was not intended to charge them. There is nothing to distinguish this document from the one which was discussed in Brooks v. Elkins (2 M. & W. 74). The statement of the manner in which the debt was contracted carries it no further. The only agreement it contains is to pay 5 per cent. interest until the debt is paid. That is not necessarily, or on the face of the document, of the value of 20*l.* and, therefore, does not make an agreement-stamp necessary. What is required is not that the contract may possibly be for something above that value, but that it shall be so in its inception.

ADMIRALTY COURT.

Friday, April 26.

THE EBENEZER.

Salvage.—The Court of Admiralty always allots a higher rate of salvage where risk of life has been incurred by the salvors.

This is a suit for salvage remuneration by eighteen boatmen (two being licensed pilots), against the schooner Ebenezer, for services rendered to her on the 29th of January, 1843.

It appeared from the protest, that "the schooner was, on the afternoon of the above-mentioned day, steering S. and by E., with the wind W.N.W., that her master judged the vessel to be full ten miles S. of Newhaven—that a deep fog prevailed at the time, and at a quarter past 5 P.M. the ship struck the ground. The helm was put hard aport, the peak halyards cut away, and the ship endeavoured to be weared round to the southward, but to no purpose." It was afterwards discovered that the vessel had struck on a rocky part of the beach, near the entrance of Newhaven harbour. The boatmen—at, as they allege, considerable risk to their own lives—put out their boats and went to render assistance to the schooner. Her master at first refused, but subsequently accepted their services. The salvors tried, by means of getting lines on board the ship, eventually to get her fastened by a hawser to a capstan, then to heave her off the rock and carry her to a place of safety. After some exertion, the schooner was got off the rocks; but when she had drifted off, the hawser broke, and the aid of the salvors was at an end—they could do no more. The schooner drifted by herself to a place of safety. The weather remained calm, the tide ebbed, and part of her cargo was taken out. The next day she was easily taken into Newhaven harbour. The value of the ship and cargo was 1,500*l.*; but in consequence of the delay in these proceedings, the value of the cargo was excluded from consideration, and the Court had to allot remuneration out of a property valued at 845*l.* The owners made a tender of 60*l.*, but it was refused, and the action entered at 200*l.*

Robinson and Rayford, for the salvors.

Addams and Robertson, for the owners.

LUSHINGTON, Dr.—Sixteen months having elapsed since the period of this occurrence, great doubt exists on points which, recenti facto, must have been perfectly clear. For instance—the state of wind, which is important as shewing the real cause of the schooner getting on shore. The owners call it W.N.W, and the salvors W.S.W. Which it was, and how the vessel got aground, I cannot decide with any certainty. If the accident is attributed to the fog alone, I do not see how she could have been run ashore where she did, supposing the wind to have been, as her owners state, W.N.W. and her course S. and by E. But either by the fog alone, or by the united operation of the fog and wind, the schooner did get on the shore near the entrance to the harbour of Newhaven, and the first question, which has been much discussed, is, what was the nature of the coast? Was it a beach, or was it a rock? The salvors, two of whom are pilots, must be well acquainted with the locality, and they positively swear that the coast at that spot is very rocky, and in this they are confirmed by the harbour-master and by other witnesses who must know. The next question, then, is, to what amount of risk were the salvors exposed by going out? It is stated that the boatmen belonging to the preventive service refused to go out in their boat, from which at least it may be safely inferred that the sea was not quite smooth; that the state of the wind and weather rendered it not a perfectly easy matter to leave the shore. So that I think there was some risk to the salvors, but it has been very much exaggerated in their affidavits. There is no doubt that the vessel was in distress, and that the master was anxious for assistance—for though he at first refused the offer of the salvors, till he had made an attempt to save the vessel, yet when that attempt failed, he gladly accepted it. As to the services actually rendered, it has been contended in the pleadings that the salvors ought to have attempted to cast anchor, but I cannot think that that imputation is well founded. It appears that after some exertions, the vessel was got off the rocks, but then the hawser broke, and the men were utterly unable to render any further assistance. The number of persons engaged in this service was eighteen—two being licensed pilots—persons of skill. The service lasted for sixteen or seventeen hours. If the case had come before me in the first instance, and I had had to adjudicate on a property of the value of 1,500*l.*, I think I should have given 100*l.*, for it has always been the rule of this Court to allot a larger rate of salvage where risk to life has been incurred; and as I have now to deal with 845*l.*, in obedience to that analogy, I shall pronounce the tender insufficient, and give the sum of 60*l.*

THE EARL OF AUCKLAND.

Jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court over dock companies in respect to deposits placed in their hands to answer claims for freight, under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 57, s. 47—Disobedience to a monition of the Court, arising from a mistaken interpretation of an Act of Parliament, will not, on the first offence, be punished by a condemnation in costs; but one decision on the subject must be considered as notice to all the world, and after the present case, a similar indulgence will not be shewn.

An action by the holders of a bottomry-bond on ship and freight against the said ship, her tackle, apparel, and furniture, and the freight due for the transportation of the cargo therein. The usual defaults having been made, the Court, on the 12th December last, pronounced for the force and validity of the bond. The vessel had discharged her cargo in the East and West India Docks, and a sum, equal in amount to the freight claimed by the owners of the vessel to be due thereon, had been deposited in the hands of the secretary of the dock company, under the provisions of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 57, s. 47, which enacts "that all goods or merchandize which shall be landed in docks, and lodged in the custody of the proprietors of the said docks, under the provisions of this Act, not being goods forfeited to his Majesty, shall, when so landed, continue to be subject or liable to such and the same claim for freight in favour of the master and owner or owners of the respective ships or vessels, or of any other person or persons interested in the freight of the same, from or out of which such goods or merchandize shall be so landed, as such goods, wares, or merchandize respectively were subject and liable to whilst the same were on board such ships or vessels, and before the landing thereof; and the directors and proprietors of any such docks at or in which any such goods or merchandize may be landed and lodged as aforesaid, or their servants or agents, or any of them, shall and may, and they are hereby authorized, empowered, and required, upon due notice in that behalf given to them by such master or masters, owner or owners, or other persons as aforesaid, to detain and keep such goods and merchandize not being seized as forfeited to his Majesty, in the warehouses belonging to the said docks, as aforesaid, until the respective freights to which the same shall be subject and liable, as aforesaid, shall be duly paid or satisfied, together with the rates and charges to which the same shall have been subject and liable, or until a deposit shall have been made by the owner or owners, or consignee or consignees, of such goods or merchandize, equal in amount to the claim or demand made by the master, owner, or owners of the respective ships or vessels, or other persons, as aforesaid, for or on account of freight upon such goods or merchandize; which deposit the said directors or proprietors of such docks, or their agents respectively, are hereby authorized and directed to receive and hold in trust until the claim or demand for freight upon such goods shall have been satisfied, upon proof of which, and demand made by the person or persons, their executors, administrators, or assigns, by whom the said deposits shall have been made, and the rates and charges due upon the said goods being first paid, the said deposit shall be returned to him or them by the said directors, or proprietors, or their agents on their behalf, with whom the said deposit shall have been made as aforesaid." A monition issued from this court, directed to the secretary of the dock company, calling on the company to bring the sum deposited in respect of freight into the registry of this court. The secretary of the company appeared, and his proctor prayed to be heard on his petition against the enforcement of this monition. Permission having been granted, the proctor for the company gave in his act on petition, stating the above-recited section of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, and further stating, that the company held the moneys deposited with their secretary as trustees or agents of the depositors, and had received no order from them to pay them over to the shipowners, and submitting that the company was not justified in parting with such moneys without such order or direction. In answer, it was submitted, by the proctor of the bondholder, that the sum deposited constituted freight, and not merely a deposit for freight; that even if the same were a deposit, it represented the freight and was liable to the jurisdiction of this court. The dock company subsequently paid the sum into court, and the petition was set down on the question of costs.

Jenner, for the dock company, stated, that the money having been paid in, he could not argue the question arising upon the construction of the statute. He submitted, that the company were the trustees or agents of the depositors, and could not, under the terms of the Act of Parliament, part with the deposit unless by their authority, as the Acts of Parliament expressly directed the depositors to retain the sum in their hands. The question was one of doubt, upon which no decision had yet been made.

Dr. LUSHINGTON.—I do not wish it to go forth that I entertain any doubt upon the question.

Jenner.—The company were advised that they could not safely part with the deposit.

Dr. LUSHINGTON.—There was no order of this court. The money would remain secured in this court.

Addams, for the bondholder, submitted that the company, in obeying the monition, acknowledged that they had no legal grounds for withholding the money in the first instance; he therefore prayed the Court to condemn them in costs.

Dr. LUSHINGTON.—I am not called upon on the present occasion to decide the important question originally raised in this act on petition, on behalf of the East and West India Dock Company; that question is this: When goods upon which freight is claimed are in their hands, are they bound to deliver them up upon payment of certain sums, in the nature of a deposit, which deposit is to bear an amount equivalent to the freight claimed to be due upon the goods? The dock company being in possession of such deposit, have declined to obey the monition of this Court, calling upon them to bring it into the registry. The question was raised in an act on petition, but subsequently the sum retained has been paid into court, to answer the demand of the legal holder of this bottomry-bond. I certainly think, that, when a question of law has been raised, but not argued, it is not prudent to enter it; I shall therefore confine my judgment to the question of costs, the only question now before me. Where freight is improperly withheld, that is without sufficient legal cause, by any party against whom a monition of this Court has issued, requiring him to bring it in to answer a legal demand, of course the Court would be inclined to condemn that party in the costs occasioned by that illegal detention; but where a question of reasonable doubt arises as to whether the party against whom the monition has issued had good and justifiable ground for withholding obedience to it, the Court would not be disposed to visit him with the penalty of costs, more especially if at the time he believed himself to be acting in obedience to an Act of Parliament. Upon the present occasion, therefore, I shall not give costs on either side; but if on any future occasion this question shall be litigated, I wish it to be distinctly understood, that I shall give costs against the party failing. Ample notice has now been given to all interested in these matters, and although proper indulgence should always be shewn to parties hesitating, for fear of disobeying an Act of Parliament, yet, after the subject has been once mooted, they must no longer expect that indulgence. I shall dismiss the party without making any order as to costs.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner STEVENSON.)

Monday, June 17.

Re RIDLER, an Insolvent, ex parte BLACKWELL.

Practice—Summoning debtors—Witnesses' expenses—Rescinding final order.

Assignees have power to summon debtors to an insolvent's estate, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, without paying their expenses as witnesses.

The Court has no power to order the assignees to pay the expenses of parties so summoned.

A Mr. Blackwell, who had been summoned to attend the Court, to be examined as to a debt entered in the insolvent's schedule as due from Blackwell to the insolvent, appeared to-day, and on being examined, proved that, instead of being a debtor, he was a creditor of the insolvent to a large amount, and that he had received no notice of the petition until after the insolvent had obtained his final order. It also appeared, that if Blackwell's real debt had been inserted, the insolvent's debts in the schedule would have amounted to more than 300*l.* and his petition would have been dismissed. Mr. Blackwell had been put to the expense of coming from Stroud, with his solicitor, to prove that he was not a debtor to the insolvent.

Homes, who appeared on behalf of Mr. Blackwell, then asked for Mr. Blackwell's expenses.

His HONOUR.—Why was he summoned?

Mr. Miller, the official assignee, stated that he had applied to Mr. Blackwell for payment of the debt entered in the schedule, and that, receiving no answer, he had sent the summons.

Paris, of Stroud, proved that, in reply to the demand, he had, as Blackwell's attorney, written to the official assignee denying the alleged debt and claiming the debt really due from the insolvent.

The official assignee said that letter was not received, but Mr. Paris should also have sent the particulars of Mr. Blackwell's claim.

Homes then strongly urged his Honour to order the witness's expenses to be paid out of the estate.

His HONOUR.—Mr. Blackwell has been brought here by the fraud of the insolvent, who inserted his name as a debtor instead of a creditor. I should be glad to give the order for Mr. Blackwell's expenses, but can it be shewn that I have any authority to do so?

Homes submitted that the commissioner had the same powers with respect to persons summoned and examined before him in insolvency cases, as he had when sitting in bankruptcy.

His HONOUR.—The same powers of commitment (see sec. 6), but not of ordering payment of the expenses of parties summoned.

Homes then gave notice of Blackwell's intention to move, under the 12th section of the Act, to rescind in part the final order.

Bills in Progress.

THE NIGHT POACHING PREVENTION BILL.

This Bill, intituled "An Act to extend an Act of the 9th year of King Geo. 4, for the more effectual Prevention of Persons going Armed by Night for the Destruction of Game," has been reprinted with the amendments made by the House of Lords. The Bill was originally prepared and brought into the House of Commons by Mr. Wallace, Mr. Henry Berkeley, and Lord Worsley. It, at present, contains only two clauses; the first, as amended by the Upper House, enacts, that, after the passing of this Act, all the pains and forfeitures imposed by the said Act (9th Geo. 4, c. 69) upon persons by night, unlawfully taking or destroying any game or rabbits in any land, open or inclosed, as therein set forth, shall be applicable to and imposed upon any person unlawfully taking or destroying any game or rabbits on any public road, highway, or path, or the sides thereof, or at the opening, outlets, or gates from any such land into any such public road, highway, or path, in the like manner as upon any such land, open or inclosed; and it shall be lawful "for the owner or occupier of any land adjoining either side of that part of such road, highway, or path where the offender shall be, and the gamekeeper or servant of such owner or occupier, and any person assisting such gamekeeper or servant, and" for all the persons authorized by the said Act to apprehend any offender against the provisions thereof, to seize and apprehend any person offending against the said Act or this Act; and the said Act, and all the powers, provisions, authorities, and jurisdictions therein, or thereby contained or given, shall be as applicable for carrying this Act into execution as if the same had been herein specially set forth. The words which we have printed between inverted commas were inserted in the clause by the committee of the House of Peers.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THE CIRCUITS.

MONDAY, JUNE 17.—The Earl of WICKLOW wished to ask the noble and learned lord on the woolsack a question as to a statement which he had seen in the public papers, namely, that the circuits throughout the country had been postponed, in consequence of the writ of error in the case of O'Connell having come before that House. He could not believe it possible that the criminal justice of the country should be postponed on that account, and above all when it was possible that numbers of persons might be then in prison waiting for trial for offences of which they were not guilty. He could not believe that the noble and learned lord would sanction such a proceeding; he hoped, therefore, that a contradiction would be given to so gross a statement.—The LORD CHANCELLOR could only say that, if such a statement had appeared in the public papers, there was no foundation whatever for it.

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

STATE TRIALS (IRELAND).—Mr. Thomas Slingsby Duncombe, the member for Finsbury, has obtained returns of all moneys paid, or due, to Mr. Hodges, or any other short-hand writer or writers, for notes taken of the proceedings in the Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin, previously to, and during, or since, the trial of The Queen v. O'Connell and Others, &c." It hence appears, that Mr. Hodges, whose stenographic services were called into requisition by the Messrs. Gurney, received up to the 7th inst. in part payment of his account for attendance in Ireland, and for the transcript of proceedings, &c. the sum of 670*l.* Messrs. Gurney's account for the attendance, up to the date of the order of the House of Commons (May 16), of the short-hand writer in the said Court of Queen's Bench, to report the proceedings previously to, during, and since, the trial of the O'Connell conspirators, and for such transcripts of those proceedings as have as yet been delivered, amounts to 873*l.* 12s. 10d. The transcript is not yet entirely completed. A charge of 142*l.* has been made for an assistant to Mr. Hodges in transcribing the proceedings in the Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin, but it has not yet been paid. Messrs. Gurney's account for the attendance of Mr. Hodges at the "Conciliation-hall," and for the transcript of proceedings there, was, up to the said 16th of May, 401*l.* 3s.

REVISING BARRISTERS.

RETURN TO AN ADDRESS OF THE HONOURABLE THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, dated March 8, 1844, for Return of Appeals from the Courts of the Revising Barristers to the Court of Common Pleas, pursuant to Act 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18.

I.—Counties.

(1.) Name of county or division of county; place where the court of revision was held; name of several appellants and respondents; decision of court of appeal, whether for appellant or respondent (the several cases to have each a number attached, for the purpose of reference).

(2.) A general statement of the point of the appeal in each case, and of the decision of the Court on each such point, the cases being classified according to their subject-matter or point (that is, if the same subject-matter or point forms the subject of appeal in several different cases, these cases are to be classed together and referred to according to the numbers they bear in the foregoing list).

II.—Cities and Boroughs.

(1) Same as I. (1), mutatis mutandis.

(2) Same as I. (2), mutatis mutandis.

III.—Returns of all orders made by the Court of Common Pleas respecting the payment of the costs of any appeals, or of any part of such costs; and the amount of the costs of any appeal, so far as the same can be made out.

I. COUNTIES.

Northern Division of the County of Warwick.	Birmingham	John Webb, Appellant, v. The Overseers of the Poor of the Parish of Aston juxta Birmingham, and the Overseers of the Poor of the Parish of Birmingham (comprising sixteen persons), Respondents. The claims of five other parties depended on the same question, and were consolidated with this case.	For the Respondents.

(2.)—General Statement as to Counties.

The question raised upon this appeal (which was the only appeal against any decision which related to the right of voting for a county), was this, whether William Hickman, the lessee of several houses, for the residue of a term originally created for a period of not less than sixty years, all which houses were locally situated within a borough, and let to [illegible], is entitled to vote for the county, notwithstanding one of those houses is of the value of 10*l.* per annum, and therefore sufficient to confer a vote for the [illegible] but the remaining houses being [illegible] annual value than 10*l.* each, but [illegible] the aggregate, of a greater annual value.

The Court of Appeal decided in favour of the respondents, and held that William Hickman's name was to be retained upon the list for the county, notwithstanding his tenant's right to vote for the borough in respect of the only house therein of the annual value of 10*l.*; upon the principle, that the right of voting for the county is expressly conferred upon the lessee in respect of such his term, by the 20th section of the statute 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, and that such right of voting in respect of his term is not taken away by the 25th section; for that he still has the same term in the other houses vested in him, which are of a sufficient annual value to confer the right of voting for the county.

(2.)—General Statement as to Cities and Boroughs.

The cases No. 1 to No. 4, both inclusive, relate to the legal construction of the word "building," in the 27th section of the statute 2 Wm. 4, c. 45.

In the case No. 1, the case of the Borough of Stockport, the question was, whether rooms let out in a factory to different tenants for the purpose of cotton-spinning, for each of which an annual rent of 10*l.* or upwards was paid, in which rooms each tenant had his own machines for spinning, the machines being worked under the contract with the occupier by a power supplied by a steam-engine belonging to the landlord, and worked at his expense, and with his main gearing to communicate the power to the machines, were buildings within the meaning of the Act, so as to confer the right of voting for the borough on each respective occupier of such rooms, every such occupier having the exclusive use of his own room. The Court of Appeal held each of these rooms to be a building within the meaning of the statute, and that the occupation was sufficiently exclusive, notwithstanding the landlord's engagement to supply the steam-power communicating with each room.

In this case, also, a further question arose, whether such occupiers were duly rated in respect of the premises they occupied; upon which question the Court of Appeal held, that although there were objections to the form of the rate, which might possibly be sustainable against it upon an appeal, yet as the name of the occupier appeared upon the rate, the premises for which he was rated, the rateable value thereof, and the amount of the rate, it was sufficiently within the intention of the legislature for the purposes of this Act.

A further question also arose in this case, namely, whether the payment of the rate by the landlord, under an agreement with the tenant for that purpose, was a payment by the tenant within the meaning of the 27th section of the Act before referred to; upon which latter point the Court determined that the question did not properly arise in this case; for that upon the face of this rate the landlords who held part of the premises in their own occupation, and all the tenants, were rated as joint occupiers, and the whole rate was paid by the landlords, two of the parties rated; and that a payment made of the whole rate by some of the parties whose names appear on the rate must be a good payment for the whole.

In No. 2, the case of the borough of Wenlock, the question was, whether a coach-house or stable, substantially built of stone, the roof of which was tiled, having a door with a lock and key, and suitable for the purpose for which it was erected and used, and convenient for the occupation of the claimant's land, was comprised within the meaning of the words "other building," in the 27th section of the same Act. The Court held it to fall within that general description, on the ground that the Act, by its enumeration of particular buildings therein described, intended at all events, to comprehend every building used for the purpose of dwelling, or trade, or business, of which agriculture formed one description.

In No. 3, the case of the borough of Ludlow, and in No. 4, the case of the borough of Bridgnorth, the questions were substantially, and almost precisely, the same as that in No. 2, and the decision of the Court was accordingly for the respective appellants.

In No. 5, the case of the borough of Bradford, the question was, whether sufficient proof was given before the revising barrister of the transmission of the notice of objections to the claimant, under the provisions of the 100th section of the statute 6 Vict. c. 18. The notice was delivered to the postmaster's managing clerk, instead of the postmaster himself, who was proved to be absent from Bradford at the time of the delivery of the notice, and the duties required by the statute were performed by the managing clerk, not by the postmaster.

The Court of Appeal, upon this state of facts, held, the requisites of the statute had been substantially complied with; considering the acts required to be done by the postmaster to be ministerial acts only, not judicial; that the difficulty thrown upon the party who gives the notice would be insurmountable, if the opposite construction were put on the Act, as he might not know the postmaster personally, nor be prepared with any evidence to meet such an objection; and, lastly, adverting to the circumstance that in populous places it would be utterly impossible to comply in due time with the directions of the statute, if the postmaster might not avail himself of the assistance of his clerks or servants at his office, acting under his orders and by his control. The Court, therefore, held the notice of objections good, and decided in favour of the respondents.

The cases, No. 6 to No. 10, both inclusive, all involved the same questions, namely, first, whether officers, occupying houses of a greater annual value than 10*l.* in the dockyards and other public establishments of the government, were entitled to vote for the boroughs within which they were situated, by reason of such occupation? And, secondly, whether the payment of the poor-rate at which they were assessed by the Government, and not by the officers themselves, disqualified them from voting?

The case, No. 6, was that of the master ropemaker in the dockyard at Chatham; No. 7, that of the lieutenant quartermaster of marines at Chatham; No. 8, that of the clerk of the works in the engine department at Chatham; No. 9, that of the barrack-master to Chatham barracks; and No. 10, that of the surgeon to Greenwich Hospital.

In all these cases the question was, whether there was an occupation by the respective parties as tenants; for unless there was an occupation under such circumstances as created the relation of landlord and tenant, the occupier had no vote conferred upon him by the 27th section of the statute 2 Wm. 4, c. 45. The claimants contended that their occupation was that of a tenant; the contention on the part of the objector in each case was, that the occupation was not that of a tenant under a landlord, but that of a servant under a master or employer; as that of a coachman in a room over a stable, that of a park-keeper in a lodge, or the like.

The Court of Appeal laid down this distinction with respect to the class of cases now under consideration, that where it appeared upon the facts brought before the revising barrister, that the officers or servants employed by the Government were permitted to occupy houses belonging to the Government, as part remuneration for the services to be performed by them, such an occupation might properly be considered as that of a tenant; but that where a particular house was appropriated to an officer or servant as his residence, not with a view to his remuneration or benefit, but for the interest of his employer, and for the more effectual performance of the services required from him—where, in other words, he was not simply permitted, but required to occupy the house, there could not be such occupation as that of a tenant.

And applying this distinction to the facts stated by the revising barrister in the respective cases, the Court held all the servants or officers at Chatham occupied as tenants, but that the surgeon in the Greenwich case did not occupy as tenant, and decided the respective appeals accordingly.

As to the second point raised in those cases, upon the effect of payment of the poor-rate by the Government, instead of by the officers themselves, the Court of Appeal held, in the first four cases, in which alone it became necessary to decide the question, that such payment did not operate as a disqualification of the voter; considering the rate as indirectly, but virtually, paid by the officers, who were severally assessed to and liable for the rate.

Upon the case No. 11, that of the city of Bristol, the point raised was, whether the party who objected to the name of a voter being retained in the list of freemen, had properly described himself in his notice of objection. He had described himself as being "on the list of voters for the parish of Clifton." His name was not upon either the householders' or freeholders' list of voters for the parish of Clifton, but was "in the alphabetical list of the freemen of the city of Bristol." The Court held this to be a misdescription, and that the notice of objection was insufficient.

In the case No. 12, that of the borough of Lewes, the question was, whether a claimant, whose qualification consisted of the occupation of two different houses within the borough, in immediate succession, was bound, under the 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, s. 27, to state in his claim the description of the two houses, or whether it was sufficient to state only the description of the house which he last occupied; and the Court held he was bound to state the description of both, as the occupation of the two houses in succession constituted his qualification to vote: and further, that this was not such a misdescription as the revising barrister could amend under 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 40.

III.—Returns of all Orders made by the Court of Common Pleas respecting the Payment of the Costs of any Appeals, or of any part of such Costs; and the Amount of the Costs of any Appeal, so far as the same can be made out.

The Court of Common Pleas have not made any orders respecting the payment of the costs of any of the appeals which have been brought before them, having acted on the principle, that where the subject-matter of the appeal presented a fair and reasonable ground of doubt as to the legal construction of the statute, and the propriety of the determination of the revising barrister, it was not in the intention of the Legislature that costs should be awarded against the unsuccessful party; and as it appeared to them that all the cases of appeal which have hitherto been brought before them fell within that description, the amount, therefore, of the costs incurred cannot be ascertained by the officers of the Court.

N. C. TINDAL,
Lord Chief Justice of Her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster.

THE MAGISTRATE.

NOTHING has occurred requiring special notice. Our usual summary of the decisions of the two last Terms is in preparation, and will shortly appear.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE issue of the new scale of costs given below is the one legal event of the week. To make room for that, and a long arrear of reports, we must abbreviate all other matters. The summary of the decisions of the two last Terms waits only for the conclusion of the judgments on the 7th July.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE NEW SCALE OF COSTS IN ACTIONS UNDER 20*l.*

Directions to the taxing officers, in lieu of the directions of Hilary vacation, 4 Wm. 4, 1834, so far as relate to the Scale of Costs in cases where the sum recovered, &c. does not exceed 20l.

That in all actions of assumpsit, debt, or covenant, where the sum recovered or paid into court and accepted by the plaintiff in satisfaction of his demand, or agreed to be paid on the settlement of the action, shall not exceed 20*l.* without costs, the costs both of the plaintiff and defendant, and as well between attorney and client as party and party, except as hereinafter excepted, shall be taxed according to the reduced scale hereunto annexed.

Provided that, in case of trial before a judge in one of the superior courts or judge of assize, if the judge shall certify on the postea that the cause was proper to be tried before him and not before a sheriff or judge of an inferior court, the costs shall be taxed upon the usual scale.

Where, in like actions, the sum indorsed on the summons shall be more than 20*l.* but the plaintiff fails to recover more than that sum, and the judge does not certify as aforesaid, the plaintiff's costs, as well between party and party, and also between attorney and client, shall be taxed as upon a writ of trial before a judge of a Court of Record, where attorneys are not allowed to act as advocates as hereinafter provided for; but the defendant's costs, if any, are to be taxed upon the usual scale.

Provided also, that in cases triable before the sheriff or judge of an inferior court, where the judge shall refuse to make an order for such trial, the judge shall, if he shall think fit, direct, at the time of such refusal, on what scale the costs of each party shall be taxed; and, in default of such direction, the costs of both parties shall be taxed on the usual scale.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

TRINITY TERM—SEVENTH VICTORIA.

JUNE 12.—This Court will, on Monday, the 24th day of June instant, and three following days, hold sittings, and will proceed in disposing of the case Reg. v. The Great Western Railway Company, in the Crown Paper, and the rules in Crown cases which have been enlarged to the first, second, and third days in this present Term, and the business in the special paper and the new trial paper, and in giving judgment in cases that may then be pending.

BY THE COURT.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

TRINITY TERM—IN THE SEVENTH YEAR OF THE REIGN OF QUEEN VICTORIA.

JUNE 12.—This Court will, in addition to the other days already appointed, on Saturday, the 6th day of July next hold sittings, and will proceed in disposing of the business then pending in the new trial and special papers.

BY THE COURT.

Read in open Court, the 12th day of June,
Samuel Dare, Master.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Charles Gresley, of the city of Lichfield, Gent. Justinian Adcock, of Cambridge, Gent. and Edwin Hinds, of Newcastle-under-Lyme, Gent. to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

EXEMPTIONS FROM SERVING ON JURIES.—In consequence of the many applications that are made by parties claiming to be exempted from serving on juries at the Central Criminal Court, at the Old Bailey, Clerkenwell, Westminster, and the Surrey Sessions, the following important notice has been issued to prevent delay to these courts:—"The grounds of exemption are as follows:—Peers, judges, clergymen, Roman Catholic priests, who shall have duly taken and subscribed the oaths and declaration required by law; ministers of any congregation of Protestant Dissenters whose place of meeting is duly registered, provided they follow no secular occupation except that of a schoolmaster, and produce a certificate of some justice of the peace of their having taken the oaths and subscribed the declaration required by law; serjeants, barristers-at-law, members of the Society of Doctors-at-Law, advocates of the civil law, if actually practising, and attorneys, solicitors, and proctors, if actually practising and having taken out their annual certificates; officers of the courts of law and equity, and of the Admiralty and ecclesiastical courts, if actually exercising the duties of their respective offices; coroners, gaolers, and keepers of houses of correction; members and licentiates of the Royal College of Surgeons in London, Edinburgh, and Dublin, and apothecaries, certified by the Court of Examiners of the Apothecaries' Company, if actually practising as physicians, surgeons, or apothecaries, respectively; officers of the navy and army on full pay; pilots licensed by the Trinity house of Deptford, Stroud, Kingston-upon-Hull, or Newcastle-upon-Tyne; masters of vessels in the buoy and light service, employed by either of these corporations; pilots licensed by the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, or under any Act of Parliament or charter for the regulation of pilots in any other port; household servants of her Majesty, officers of Customs and Excise, sheriffs' officers, high-constables, parish clerks; registrars of births, deaths, and marriages; commissioners having a certificate under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35; and also all persons exempt by virtue of any prescription, charter, grant, or writ; and all persons upwards of sixty years of age. Note.—All exemptions from serving on juries on account of age or otherwise must be claimed at the Petty Sessions, to be held for the revision of such lists."

MONTHLY STATISTICS OF INSOLVENCY.—During the past month there have appeared in the Gazette the names of 242 persons who have received vesting orders from the Court of Bankruptcy, by which, under a late Act of Parliament, a debtor who is pressed by his creditors after having given a certain notice, appears before the Commissioner, and gives an account of his debts and assets, which he renders up. His schedule is nominally examined by an official assignee, and he receives protection against all further proceedings, unless he should afterwards become possessed of any property, that is to say, property which his creditors know of, or can make to appear. This he may do any number of times, four times in the year if he find it convenient, and it is found to be a source of great comfort and accommodation to persons in difficulty. There have appeared in the Gazette, bankrupts, 93; assignments, 20; declarations of insolvency, 256—total, 369. If there be only one gazetted insolvency for nine private compositions, and if the deficiency in each case be only 200*l.* the monthly loss to the nation will be 738,000*l.* and, on the same reckoning, the yearly loss during 1843 was 12,000,000*l.* This report is an improvement as compared with May 1843, when the numbers were respectively 401, 84, 48, and 6—total, 539; but it by no means follows that the total of insolvency is less, for debtors and their friends usually consider what it is worth their while to pay rather than be exposed in the Gazette they usually offer so much in the pound, and at the same time threaten their creditors with the law if they do not accept their proposals, which the creditors generally agree to, for when the affair goes into court the assets are almost nothing—in one return that has been obtained under 4*l.* and in another no more than 35*s.* per case. The grievance arising from such a state of things is violently complained of in the city, and we understand that it is in contemplation to apply to the Lord Mayor to preside at a meeting for discussing the propriety of an immediate application to Parliament on the subject.

THE O'CONNELL WRIT OF ERROR.—In both houses of Parliament, on Friday night, several proceedings were adopted in reference to the late state trials in Ireland and the writ of error that is now pending before the Lords. They were all mere matters of form; and it may be interesting to give each, as entered officially upon the minute books of the two houses. In the Commons, just after the division on the Sugar Duties Bill, and immediately before the House adjourned at two o'clock on Saturday morning, a copy was presented (in pursuance of an address to the Crown, agreed upon on the 21st of May) of affidavits and pleadings filed in the cause of The Queen v. Daniel O'Connell and Others. It was ordered to lie on the table, but was not ordered to be printed. This was the only proceeding in the Commons on the subject; but there were two in the Lords in reference to the same renowned trial. First, there was presented, in the writ of error Gray v. The Queen, the petition of Samuel Gray, the plaintiff, a prisoner confined in Smithfield prison, in the county of the city of Dublin, "praying that the said writ of error may be heard in its proper turn, and before the writ of error O'Connell v. The Queen." This petition was read and ordered to lie on the table. Secondly, in the same cause, Gray v. The Queen (writ of error), the petition of the defendant for leave to lodge cases was read and ordered as prayed.

PUBLIC PETITIONS.—The 29th Report of the Committee on Public Petitions has just made its appearance. We find the gross total number of petitions to the House of Commons on various important public measures to be as follow, viz.:—Against the Dissenters' Chapels Bill, 2,408 petitions, signed by no less than 290,496 persons; in favour of the same Bill, 601 petitions, signed by 136,644 persons; for an alteration of the measure, 864 petitioners; legalizing marriages in Ireland by Presbyterian ministers, 412 petitions, signed by 159,245 persons; against the union of the episcopal dioceses of Bangor and St. Asaph, 274 petitions, signed by 15,613 persons; against a repeal of the Corn Laws, 1,878 petitions, signed by 128,093 persons; for a repeal of the differential duties on sugar, 4 petitions, signed by 66,434 persons; for the encouragement of art-unions, 13 petitions, signed by 704 persons; in favour of the County Courts Bill, 13 petitions, signed by 1,049 persons; for an alteration of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 70 petitions, signed by 3,218 persons; for an alteration of the Poor Law Amendment Bill, 30 petitions, signed by 10,392 persons.

WILL OF THE LATE MARQUESS OF HASTINGS.—The will of the late Marquess of Hastings has just been proved in Doctors' Commons by the Most Hon. Barbara Yelverton, Dowager Marchioness of Hastings (widow of deceased), Sir Charles A. Hastings, bart. and John Balguy, esq. three of the executors, power being reserved of proving hereafter to Lord Marcus Cecil Hill, the other executor. The deceased gives to his wife 7,500*l.* for providing her and her younger children with a suitable residence; an annuity of 1,000*l* a year, best carriage and horses, and the choice of furniture, &c. at Loudoun Castle, Scotland; or should she prefer money, 3,000*l.* instead. To his sons on attaining age, and to his daughters on attaining theirs, or day of marriage, sums varying from 4,500*l.* to 9,000*l.* The late much lamented Lady Flora Hastings is bequeathed a legacy. The residue is given to his wife, children, and other branches of his family. The following passage occurs in the will:—"If it should please Almighty God to take the whole of my children to himself, I trust my Sovereign will confer the title on my eldest sister, to perpetuate my long line of ancestors." The personal property is sworn under the large sum of 140,000*l.* The will is extremely long, and bears date in 1836.—Britannia.

WILL OF THE LATE MR. W. CROCKFORD.—Administration with the will annexed (no executor being named therein) of the late well-known William Crockford, of gambling notoriety, has been granted to Mrs. A. F. Crockford, his widow. The will is dated as late as last month, and gives the whole of his property to his wife in nearly the following words:—"I give and bequeath the whole of my property of whatever description to my dear wife, and her heirs, relying on her doing what is right." The personal property alone is sworn under the large sum of 200,000*l.* and it is rumoured that his real estate is worth 150,000*l.* more. This extraordinary man, we believe, formerly kept the fishmonger's shop adjoining Temple-bar, and by a series of successful speculations on the "Turf" was enabled to purchase the house in St. James's street, afterwards terribly famous as "Crockford's;" and it is said that there the deceased amassed the bulk of his immense property.—Britannia.

We understand, on the authority of a gentleman now in his 82nd year, and an observer of the weather, that the present season has not been equalled in dryness since the year 1785, which is a lapse of 59 years. The meteorologists have as yet assigned no cause for this unusual phenomenon.—Berkshire Chronicle.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AGREEMENT STAMPS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I agree with R. A. as to the beneficial alteration in these stamps as far as it goes; but as the late Act is confined to agreements "now chargeable with the duty of one pound," I presume it will not extend to agreements exceeding in length fifteen folios; upon which, by the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, a further duty of fifteen shillings or one pound five shillings is charged; and that the matter now stands thus:—

	£	s.	d.
Upon every agreement under fifteen folios in length, a duty is payable of	0	2	6
Exceeding fifteen, and under thirty folios	1	15	0
And for every complete number of fifteen folios over the first fifteen, a further duty of	1	5	0

As this point may be overlooked by some, I have thought it useful to mention it; if I am mistaken, I shall be happy to be corrected.

Yours obediently,

Birmingham. J. P.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

A SUBSCRIBER, dating May 9, writes thus on the subject of "Magistrates' Clerks:"—

Under the head of "Selections from Correspondence," I noticed, in your last week's TIMES, a letter from a "Clerk to Borough Justices," which,

I think, in fairness to the large majority of solicitors who have not the fortune to be clerks to justices, deserves some notice. In discussing the proposal to pay all justices' clerks by salary, your correspondent objects that county justices' clerks enjoy a "perfect monopoly of prosecutions in their own courts," whilst borough justices' clerks are forbid, by the Municipal Amendment Act, from conducting any prosecution sent for trial by their Courts. And then, to make matters square between the county clerk and the borough clerk, he proposes that the county clerk should also be forbid from prosecuting in commitments from his own Court, "or if they are to be paid by salary, let them be made public prosecutors at a salary," the latter salary to be in addition to their salary as magistrates' clerks. Now, it is this modest proposal as to a public prosecutor which I object to in your correspondent's communication, as being most selfish in itself, and most unjust to others in the same grade of the Profession.

But before further explaining my objection, I beg to assert that not one-half of the county magistrates' clerks are solicitors, and therefore would be very unfit men to be made public prosecutors. Yet, suppose that they and all the borough clerks were solicitors; is not their appointment a comfortable and well-paid one? If not, let them surrender it into other hands, and not ungenerously ask to sweep away, at "one fell swoop," all the criminal business of the country, to enrich themselves and injure the large majority of their professional brethren. And what an egregious absurdity, too, to call the professional county magistrates' clerk a "perfect monopolist," and then to propose, in the same breath, to create all magistrates' clerks public prosecutors! Certes, there would be no mistake about the "monopoly" being "perfect" then! I must say, that this, being a communication addressed to a journal devoted exclusively to the legal profession (and, I trust, advocating "the good of the many" and not of the "few"), I never saw or heard of one worse placed, or more selfish in its object. I know it is the fashion for many solicitors to decry criminal business as being both "low and little worth;" but I also know that there are very few provincial solicitors who have not, in early life, been in some degree benefited by that very business, which perhaps in later life, and under happier circumstances, they affect to despise; and I also know that there are now in the country many, very many, respectable young men, who rely upon this as one of the few means left them to employ their start in life usefully, and to assist in forming a connection. Why should your correspondent, therefore, wish to deprive them of that fair distribution of business which he himself has enjoyed, and which the present course of legislation is trying sufficiently to diminish without the movement being helped on by the Profession?

I complain, also, that your correspondent has recommended a change to the Profession, which, however much it might benefit him and other magistrates' clerks, he has not shewn by a single reason would be beneficial to the public. I presume, however, that he advocates the change chiefly on the ground of its being a saving to the public.

The salary to the public prosecutor your correspondent recommends to be an average (of the yearly cost, I presume) of prosecutions for the last two or three years. What would the public save by this average? And even if he would (as almost any one would) undertake to work the prosecutions at a cheaper rate, on condition of having the whole criminal business in his hand, what would the public benefit by this? Would the great objects of the criminal law—suppression and punishment of crime—be forwarded by it? I think not; for if the public prosecutor were to have a fixed salary for all that he may do, be it little or much, is it likely that he will shew the same activity in the prosecution of offenders as is now shewn, or as is requisite to the ends of justice? The fewer he prosecutes, and the greater his gain. And if he were to have a certain sum for each prosecution, then the more he prosecutes, the greater his gain. In the one case he would have an inducement to avoid, and in the other to create prosecutions, both of which are evils not incident to the present mode of prosecution. It is also provable that, should this change ever occur, all the appointments will be in the hands of Government, and then what clever public prosecutors may not some districts hope to possess! For any one knows that such appointees are not always selected for their peculiar fitness for an office.

In conclusion, I beg to say, that whatever be the merits or demerits of the proposed change, I think that a member of our Profession ought to the last person to recommend it; and if, under the flimsy cloak of "economy to the public," any such members lend their aid in bringing it about, they may, in time, find the "cheap system" so progress, that it will overrun all manner of professional appointments; and then we shall see the offices of magistrates' clerk, clerk of the peace, town-clerk, &c. offered every year to public competition, like railway contracts, when the cheapest ticket of proposal will get the "job!"—to the great promotion of "public economy"—to the explosion of all principles of "monopoly"—and, perhaps, to the loss of your correspondent's place as magistrates' clerk.

"A Solicitor" sends the following, on a very important subject:—

As you are ever ready to advocate the fair rights of the Profession, I wish to call your attention to a great and growing evil, and which I think calls for some interference on the part of the regularly educated members to check that which, although, perhaps, allowable in a certain degree to the talented and deserving, becomes a vice when carried to excess. I allude to the practice, frequent even in the most respectable offices, of giving clerks their articles, and thus throwing upon the Profession a superabundance of attorneys. It frequently happens that the principals make a convenience of the plan by saving a salary for a term of years. I can assure you that I should be extremely sorry to be opposed to the advancement of any person in life; but I have no doubt that your own experience can remind you that, in nine cases out of ten, they shew their gratitude by setting up in "opposition" to their former masters, and, from their previous situation as "confidential clerks," have so far identified themselves with their situation as to convey over part of the confidence to their own offices. This, of course, will only apply to a certain class, but it is nevertheless true. You must be perfectly aware that the expenses of a gentleman regularly articled are not trifling, independent of his previous education, and so long as the laws and the Law Institution have stringent rules to make the Profession respectable, I think that some protection may be fairly demanded. I do not blame the clerks, but the offices that, without discrimination, for the paltry saving of a salary, would inundate and swamp the Profession. It is not that the favoured clerks are superior as sound lawyers, for they frequently adopt "sharp practice;" but if solicitors are to be considered gentlemen, and to have such to join them, and expect confidence to be reposed in them as such, it is necessary that the Law Institution or some person should point out that there might, by possibility, be persons admitted who were not gentlemen.

To Readers and Correspondents.

We have received a number of the threatening letters of which a specimen was published last week. We shall probably return to the subject when there is more leisure.

A review of Grady and Scotland's excellent work on Crown Practice, and notices of other books received, are unavoidably postponed to make room for more pressing matters.

The 3rd part of the Appendix will, it is hoped, be published next week, and nearly, if not quite, complete the very valuable Digest of the Criminal Law.

THE CRIMINAL CODE.

We proceed now to review the provisions of the code submitted to Parliament by the commissioners, and which professes to do no more than to consolidate the existing law. Our purpose is to examine that law with a view to its amendment, nor could a better opportunity be afforded than by the publication of this laborious work, which contains the substance of many volumes of statutes and reports.

The first provision that attracts attention is Article 85, on Seditious Conspiracies, which thus lays down the law:—

"If two or more persons shall conspire to excite in the minds of the subjects of the realm hatred or contempt of the person of her Majesty, or of her Government, or of the Constitution of the United Kingdom as by law established, or of both Houses, or of either House of Parliament, or to excite her Majesty's subjects to attempt the alteration of any matter in church or state, as by law established, otherwise than by lawful means, every person so offending shall incur the penalties of the twentieth class."

This is the law under which the Irish state prisoners were convicted, and we turned with interest to the proposed code, expecting to find some definition of it which would help the judgment upon the points mooted in the trials. But the code leaves the real question as doubtful as ever. It does not define what shall, or, rather, what does, constitute a conspiracy, nor what are the means "other than lawful." Yet it is obvious that, upon every trial, both of these questions must arise in the application of the code. The definition of such general terms was the primary purpose of the proposed law. Why, then, is it omitted here?

Doubtless because the commissioners were unable to find such a definition of conspiracy as would indicate the evidence necessary to prove it. But does not this inability shew that the crime is rather an ideal than a real one? And so experience declares. As the law stands, it is impossible for any man to be sure whether or not he is transgressing it. It will vary with the whims or prejudices of judges and juries, and consequently may always be used for purposes of oppression. If it be indefinable, the presumption should be, that it is not a crime at all. And so reason dictates; for the law punishes, or ought to punish, acts only, not mere intents—ideas fleeting through a [illegible] mind. Now, conspiracy is either a mere talking about doing or projecting something illegal, or the doing of it. If it do not proceed beyond the former, no harm can come of it, and it is properly out of the cognizance of the law; but the moment a movement is made towards the act, each conspirator is guilty of the illegal act, and can be punished for it individually.

If it be alleged that the conspiracy is in itself a crime, apart from the illegal object for which it is formed, still it ought to be distinctly defined, and a distinct punishment should be inflicted, not for conspiracy in its present shadowy shape, but for the combination of any two or more men to do an illegal act.

But two objects can possibly be gained by the existing law—first, that of making a crime to suit the occasion; and secondly, to enable the prosecutor to put in evidence against one man the acts and sayings of other men, upon the allegation that, having agreed to do an act, each is answerable for all that the others do in furtherance of that act—a principle so revolting to justice and common sense, that we hope the opportunity will be taken of this revision of the criminal code to sweep away entirely the law of conspiracy, and the monstrous rules of evidence and loose constructions to which its unavoidable vagueness has given birth.

CRIME IN ENGLAND AND WALES.

The very interesting and important report of Mr. REDGRAVE, which has been published entire in the first part of our APPENDIX, exhibits some other singular results, which we now proceed to bring under the notice of our readers.

There has been an extraordinary increase in the number of death sentences, notwithstanding the extensive abolition of capital punishments by the Acts of 1 Vict. During the last year ninety-seven were sentenced to death, but in the preceding year only fifty-seven. This, however, may be in part accounted for by the addition made by the Winter Assize.

Of the capital crimes, murder maintains its usual numbers. Unnatural offences exhibit a great increase; and so do crimes of violence.

A most interesting portion of these returns is their bearing upon the question of capital punishment. They exhibit some remarkable results.

A period of six years is taken, three of them preceding and three succeeding the abolition of death punishment for seven primary offences. But it should be observed that, although the punishment had been nominally retained, it had practically ceased to be enforced.

Bearing this in mind, mark the results. Some of the offences have decreased, others have increased. Housebreaking, for instance, has diminished, but sheep-stealing and forgery have considerably increased. Altogether there has been an increase of 20 per cent. upon the seven crimes.

But then, during the same interval commitments generally (all crimes included) have increased 51 per cent.; so that, as compared with other offences, those previously punishable with death have, upon the whole, decreased considerably. It is a fact somewhat opposed to the theory, that the proportion of convictions to acquittals has continued very nearly the same, notwithstanding the change of punishment.

Again, viewing the four crimes for which death punishment used sometimes to be inflicted, but is now abolished, the increase has been immense, amounting to no less than 109 per cent.

The average of the various ages of criminals in each of the two last years scarcely varies. Thus, in both years 5 per cent. of the whole were under 15 years of age, 22 per cent. under 20, 24 per cent. under 25, and so forth. Although the proportion of criminals is greater in the agricultural than in the manufacturing counties, yet, in the latter, crime commences at an earlier age, as might, indeed, have been expected.

It is gratifying to find a steady decrease for the last seven years in the numbers of criminals returned as unable to read or write, proving that education is making progress in the community.

Many other interesting facts are exhibited in this report, to which the reader, desirous of larger information upon the subject, is referred. Altogether, the results are not cheering to the philanthropist, though they are not so bad as they appear, for, before we draw too unfavourable conclusions from the figures, it must be remembered that population is increasing as well as the total number of criminals, and that, having a more efficient police, crime is punished now which formerly escaped with impunity. So the matter is not so bad as it looks.

COSTS IN ACTIONS UNDER 20*l*.

WE present to our readers to-day the new scale of costs arranged by the judges for actions under 20*l*. It is a document of so great importance to the Profession, that we omit much of our usual intelligence that it may reach them at the earliest moment. It illustrates in a striking manner the utility of the LAW TIMES. This scale of costs cannot be provided elsewhere under eighteen-pence; the country attorney having in addition to pay its postage or carriage. The LAW TIMES supplies it to them for one shilling only, with a mass of reports and other interesting and useful legal intelligence besides!

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

THE following disgraceful advertisement appears in the Times of June 19th. If the author can be traced, we shall be glad to expose him to the reprobation he deserves.

"To the PUBLIC.—Debts recovered free of cost.—A Solicitor of respectable practice (who can give unexceptionable references) undertakes the RECOVERY OF DEBTS free of costs to client, save a commission of 10 per cent. on the amount recovered. Conveyances prepared on the following low terms, viz.:—Leases, 2*l*. 10s.; Assignments, 2*l*.; Bills of Sale, 1*l*. 10s.; Wills, Agreements, and Deeds in general on equally moderate terms.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

THE first part of the PRACTICAL REPORTS was duly issued on Thursday. It will be observed that a bold type has been adopted, and double columns avoided, these being deemed by many of the members to be objectionable, and it was desired that the reports of the society should have, as much as possible, the aspect of the regular reports. We trust that this first step will give satisfaction. The two next parts will be issued in a few days, comprising the remainder of the Magistrates' Cases of Easter Term, and those of Trinity Term, and the Registration Appeal Cases.

The Reports of the Society will be cited as "THE VERULAM REPORTS," and the subscribers are requested to be particular in so calling them. It is necessary that they should be known by some definite and uniform designation.

Among the works proposed for the approval of the members of the Verulam Society is a Digest of all the Reports. Numerous improvements might be made upon those already existing, and their usefulness increased, while the expense might be greatly diminished. Suffice it at present to point out one which in itself would set a digest in which it was adopted above every other—a chronological arrangement of the cases. The current of decisions is often more important to be observed than the particular decisions themselves; whereas, now, the student who is not perfectly conversant with the periods which the different reports include is confused and puzzled beyond measure by the chaotic arrangement adopted in the Digests. Without regard to the present validity of the decisions, the cases from East or Wilson are intermingled with those from Barnewall and Cresswell, or Adolphus and Ellis, and cases clearly overruled or much qualified are postponed to those which qualified or overruled them. This is particularly observable in the last edition of Harrison's Digest. Even those who know the dates of the different reports most accurately find the trouble and loss of time thus imposed upon them very great. It has, however, been suggested that a commencement should be made with an Annual Digest, for the purpose of shewing more plainly the various improvements which might be also applied to the larger digest, and of carrying out the great object of lessening the labour necessary to keep pace with the course of judicial decisions, which we have always had in view. Among the improvements which we should propose to adopt in this Annual Digest are the following:—

1. A table of all cases distinctly overruled, and the cases by which they are overruled.
2. A similar table of cases before considered doubtful, but expressly confirmed.
3. A table of all the cases upon the statutes during the year.
4. A table of all the cases upon Rules of Court.
5. In the index of cases and these tables the subjects of the cases would be appended in brackets to the names.
6. A table of the New Rules issued during the year.

The advantages of such alterations will, we think, be palpable to every one. We should propose to publish this Digest about Christmas, and the first volume would contain the cases reported subsequent to the last edition of Harrison up to the commencement of Michaelmas Term of this year. As a work of this kind must be some time in preparation, we should be glad of the earliest communications of approval from the subscribers to the Verulam Society, or others who might wish to purchase this volume only of the publications of the Society.

Again, we have been informed that many fear to join lest they should incur responsibilities. We assure such that, according to the present arrangements, risk on their parts is entirely avoided. That was the objection started to the first plan, and it was so overwhelming that the scheme now in operation was framed, after much deliberation, purposely to escape the difficulty, and it is effected by making the members merely subscribers to specific publications, contributing a small sum, by way of entrance-fee, towards the preliminary expenses. They do not subscribe to any common fund; they merely agree to pay the publisher a certain sum per annum, which he undertakes to repay to them in books. Is it now sufficiently understood? If not, we will endeavour to make it more intelligible.

The following new members have been enrolled since our last publication:—

PRACTICAL NOTES ON STATUTES.

No. XIII.

6 & 7 Vict. c. 73.

ATTORNEYS AND SOLICITORS ACT.

We present to our readers as early as possible a view of the cases upon this Act, although many others will doubtless arise, on account of their immediate interest to that branch of the Profession which is principally affected by them.

Repeal of former statutes.—The first section repeals the Acts mentioned in the schedule, "save and except so far as relates to any matters or things done at any time before the passing of this Act." By virtue of this exception, it has been held that a motion might be made after the passing of this statute, as to the costs of taxation, which had been obtained before it had passed, and the Court will, in such cases, exercise their discretion in depriving the attorney of costs, although one-sixth of the bill has not been taken off, if they think that the client was fairly warranted in having the bill taxed. (Hodge v. Bird, 13 L. J. 87, C. P.) But where a rule nisi for taxation had been obtained before the Act, Patteson, J. decided that the exception did not enable him to dispose of the rule according to the law in force at the time it was obtained, but only served to bring the matter before the Court, and that the provisions of the new statute were to be followed in disposing of the rule. (Binns v. Hey, 13 L. J. 28, Q. B.)

Examination and admission, annual certificate.—The rules which have been issued in pursuance of the enactments upon these subjects are to be found in 2 Law T. 42, 62, 339, 340, 341, and a few cases have already occurred upon them. It is clear that an attorney who has been admitted in one of the superior courts at Westminster may be admitted into any of the other superior courts upon production of the certificate of this admission to the Master, without motion. (Ex parte Roberts, 13 L. J. 151, Q. B.)

Under sec. 45, however, an application to admit and enrol an attorney of the county palatine of Durham as an attorney of the superior courts at Westminster may be made in court as well as at chambers, and, if the affidavit state that he has been admitted in the county palatine, a copy of the roll need not be produced. (Ex parte Patrick, 13 L. J. 90, Q. B.) The words "such duty as by law required" appear to mean nothing more than the fees of admission. (Ib.) The words "practising attorney or solicitor in England or Wales," in sec. 3, include a person admitted as an attorney of the Court of Great Sessions in Wales prior to the passing of the statute abolishing the separate jurisdiction of the principality of Wales (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 70), and who has had his name entered on the roll in one of the superior courts at Westminster under section 16 of that Act, and such person may, therefore, take a clerk, and can make the affidavit required by sec. 8. (Ex parte Davies, 13 Law J. 146, Q. B.; 2 Law T. 346, and see pp. 154 & 175.)

The Court have intimated, that in future they will not relax the rules relating to the admission and re-admission. (2 Law T. 341.) In Ex parte Holland (5 D. P. C. 681), a clerk was allowed to send in his answers to the questions propounded by the examiners after the time appointed, when the delay had arisen from the negligence of his agent. But in the case of Re Luke (3 Law T. 138), the Court refused to re-admit an attorney earlier than the rules authorized, although the omission sought to be remedied had been entirely owing to the neglect of the town agent.

Admission to inferior courts.—It has at least in one instance been decided by Mr. Commissioner Pollock (see 2 Law T. 279), that sect. 27 does not entitle an attorney duly admitted in a superior court to practise in an insolvent court without express admission under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 114. On this point we would refer our readers to a letter by Mr. Symons, in 2 Law T. 297. The real extent of sect. 27 will probably be determined in the next Term in the case of Reg. v. The Mayor and Corporation of London. (3 Law T. 80, 106, 202.) A mandamus has there been granted for the purpose of determining the important question, whether that section has had the effect of throwing open the Lord Mayor's Court. The continuance of all other close courts of a similar kind will probably depend upon the result of this case.

What bills are taxable.—Our readers are aware that the distinctions between business done in the courts of law and equity and other business has ceased to exist, and that now bills for "any business done by an attorney or solicitor" are liable to taxation. (Sect. 37.) These words are to be taken with the qualification that the business must have been connected with the profession of an attorney or solicitor, i. e. business in which the attorney or solicitor was employed because he happened to be such, or in which he would not have been employed if the relation of attorney or solicitor and client had not subsisted between him and his client. Accordingly, the bill of fees and charges of a steward of a manor, who happens to be a solicitor, but is employed only in his character as steward, for the purpose of preparing a surrender, admittance, &c. of a purchaser to lands holden of the manor, is not taxable. (Allen v. Aldridge, 2 Law T. 438; 13 L. J. 155, Ch.)

This decision is of the greater importance, as, by a subsequent proviso in the same section, the power to compel the delivery of bills, and the delivery up of deeds, documents, or papers, in the possession, custody, or power of an attorney or solicitor, is only made co-extensive with the power to tax; and under the same proviso it may be well questioned whether the Courts could now order a bill to be delivered which would not be taxed when it was delivered, on account of twelve months having elapsed since it was paid; in other words, whether the statute has not deprived them of that power to order a bill to be delivered, which by virtue of their general authority over their officers, they formerly asserted and exercised, independently of their right to tax. (Clarkson v. Palmer, 8 D. P. C. 87.)

When Taxable.—The only absolute bar to the taxation of a bill delivered or paid subsequent to the statute, is the expiration of twelve months after payment thereof, but special circumstances are necessary to obtain taxation after payment, verdict, or writ of inquiry, or the lapse of twelve months after delivery. But in cases of payment before the statute came into operation, there is a distinction between bills then taxable and bills not then taxable. In the former case, taxation may be obtained within twelve months of the payment, but in the latter no taxation can be obtained. The reason is that, before the statute, payment of a non-taxable bill would have precluded the client from contesting the amount of the charges, and the statute gives him no new power in this respect, whereas in a proper case a taxable bill might have been re-opened for taxation long after payment (Horlock v. Smith, 2 Myl. & Cr. 495); and, therefore, it may still be so, subject to the limitation under sect. 41. (Re Lees, 5 Beav. 410; 13 L. J. 151, Ch.; 2 Law T. 457.)

It may now be considered as settled, that a bill is not paid under this statute, by the mere delivery to the creditor of a negotiable instrument for the amount payable at a future day, on which it is duly honoured; but the twelve months begin to run only from the date of its being honoured. Left doubtful in Ross v. Wilton (2 Law T. 155; 13 L. J. 17, Q. B.); decided in Sayer v. Wagstaff, by the Master of the Rolls (2 Law T. 418; 13 L. J. 161, Ch.; 5 Beav. 115), and affirmed by the Lord Chancellor (3 Law T. 197) also held in Ex parte Hutchings (3 Law T. 165, in Q. B.) (a.)

There might, indeed, be special circumstances to make the delivery equivalent to payment, as if the creditor had agreed to take it as payment, or to take upon himself the risk of the note being paid, or facts from which such an agreement might be implied. (Sayer v. Wagstaff.) Perhaps the test might be, could the creditor, after the dishonour of the bill, sue upon the original consideration?

Special circumstances.—There have been some interesting decisions upon the construction of these words. The first was Re Wilton (2 Law T. 155; 13 L. J. 17, Q. B.). Patteson, J. considered that neither a charge for the expense of sending a man to Herne Bay to subpœna a witness, whose attendance it was necessary to obtain on a sudden, nor for a journey to Oxford to serve a writ, where all the other parties had been served, and there was great difficulty in getting at the defendant; nor the mere non-payment of fees due to a barrister or special pleader, were special circumstances to justify a reference for taxation after the bill had been delivered twelve months. In Binns v. Hey (2 Law T. 155; 13 L. J. 28, Q. B.), the same learned judge held certain circumstances which seemed to require explanation sufficiently "special," although he carefully avoided throwing any imputation of fraud or misconduct upon the attorney. In Sayer v. Wagstaff (2 Law T. 515; on appeal, 3, 197; 13 L. J. 161, Ch.), the question of special circumstances was considered at some length by the Master of the Rolls. He laid down that, after a settlement satisfactory at the time to each party, and payment, a bill should not be re-opened, unless some gross fraud upon the party paying should come to light; and he did not consider that charges beyond the fixed fees, shewn to be bonâ fide charges for business done—expenses fairly incurred for the benefit of the client—were per se "special circumstances" to justify a reference for taxation after payment; nor yet the mere fact of the pendency of the suit at the time of settlement. On this last point, however, Lord Lyndhurst expressed a contrary opinion, and on that ground affirmed the order of the Master of the Rolls, although he doubted if any of the charges, except that of two guineas for a clerk's attendance, were overcharges constituting special circumstances.

Who may Tax.—A mortgagor may obtain taxation of a bill of costs of his mortgagee's solicitor in relation to the mortgage and the sale of the mortgaged estate. (Re Lees, 2 Law T. 438, 457; 5 Beav. 410; 13 L. J. 151, Ch.) The application of a cestui que trust to refer a bill for taxation must be determined, save as to such special directions as may be thought necessary, according to the rules pointed out in sec. 37, if there has been no payment, and according to sec. 41, if there has been payment. (Re Downes, 2 Law T. 438; 13 L. J. 159, Ch.; 5 Beav. 425.) And the twelve months will run from the time of payment by the trustee, not from the time when the cestui que trust became acquainted with the fact. He may, however, obtain taxation as against his trustee, after twelve months have expired from the payment of the bill by the trustee, for there is nothing in the Act to deprive the Court of the power which they possessed before. (Grove v. Sanson, 1 Beav. 297.)

In Re Downes, the Master of the Rolls gave his opinion thus:—"It is supposed that there may be some hardship on third parties who are enabled to tax the bills within a limited time only, and may have had no notice of the payment till too late. Such cases may arise, and in them the statute does not give so much benefit as might perhaps be desired; but the case stands thus:—Before the Act came into operation, the cestui que trust, out of whose estate a solicitor's bill was to be paid, could not procure the bill to be taxed as against the solicitor directly, but he might impeach any improper or extravagant payment made by his trustee in discharge of the solicitor's bill, and might, as against the trustee, cause the solicitor's bill to be taxed. Under the Act, every remedy which the cestui que trust had against the trustee remains to him, and, besides that, he is entitled to ask for taxation against the solicitor directly, at any time before payment of the bill, or within twelve calendar months after payment."

The power given to third parties to obtain taxation does not, it seems, extend to a mere volunteer, who, under no previous liability, pays an attorney's or solicitor's bill. (Re Becke and Flower, 5 Beav. 406; 13 L. J. 157, Ch.)

Points of Practice.—An application to tax a solicitor's bill by petition is held to be made, if not at the time of the petition being presented, yet, at the latest, at the time when the order appointing the time for hearing the petition is signed, either by the judge to whom the petition is addressed, or by his officer, acting under his directions. (Sayer v. Wagstaff, 2 Law T. 418; 3, 197; 5 Beav. 415.) If a petition has been presented within a few days of the end of the year after payment, it will not be allowed to stand over, with liberty to amend, to a day after the expiration of the year, when it does not already shew a substantial case to justify the interference of the Court. (Barwell v. Brooks, 3 Law T. 121.)

After payment of a bill, an order for taxation is not to be obtained as of course even by a party liable to pay for the same. Under the Act, any party entitled to the order may obtain it as of course, and without special directions, within one month after delivery, and with such special directions as the Court may order to be imposed after the expiration of one month from the delivery, but not after verdict, writ of inquiry, or payment. In those cases a special order, made upon special cir- [illegible]

(a) We believe it was also decided in this case, that if, after payment on account of one bill, a second bill is delivered with an item of "balance due on former account," this is, in effect, a delivery of the first bill, and renders the whole liable to taxation, notwithstanding twelve months may have elapsed since the payments. (See 3 Law T. 198.)

cumstances, to be proved to the satisfaction of the Court, is required. (Re Becke and Flower, 5 Beav. 499; 13 L. J. 157, Ch.)

Upon a motion to tax an attorney's bill, the Court will not take notice of its contents unless they are verified by affidavit or the rule has been drawn up on reading the bill. (Re Wilton, 13 L. J. 17, Q. B.)

Costs.—In one important point the statute has altered the practice as to costs. Formerly, the client who applied for taxation a month after the delivery of a bill, and after action brought upon it, was held not entitled to costs of taxation, although more than one-sixth was taken off (Harbin v. Miles, 9 B. & C. 755); but now the costs must abide the event of taxation. Re Woollett (2 Law T. 331; 1 Dowl. & Lowndes, 593), it seems, however, that the officer may certify any special grounds for departing from this general rule, and the judges may order accordingly. (Ibid.)

THE CRITIC.

[New Publications will receive early and impartial criticism in this department of the LAW TIMES, if forwarded to the Office, 29, Essex-street, addressed to the Editor.]

New Books.

A Treatise upon the Law, Privileges, Proceedings, and Usage of Parliament. By THOMAS ERSKINE MAY, Esq. Barrister-at-Law, Assistant Librarian of the House of Commons. London, 1844. C. Knight and Co.

THE latest work upon this subject was the learned one of Mr. HATSELL, the last edition of which appeared so long since as the year 1818. But the subsequent period has been fruitful in debate and precedent, orders and resolutions, which not only justify the publication of a new treatise on the Law of Parliament, but have for a long time made it one of the desiderata of the library of the lawyer and the politician.

And Mr. MAY appears to have well performed the onerous task he had imposed upon himself. He is less verbose and less tediously minute than his predecessor; but he is no less accurate in research, and doubtless will become a standing authority upon the subject of which he treats.

His plan is to separate the various classes of proceedings, and then, to set forth of each one in succession, first, the rules or principles; secondly, the authorities, if any be applicable; thirdly, the particular precedents in illustration of the practice. These precedents have, for the most part, been taken from the Journals of the last twenty-five years in the House of Commons. But as those of the House of Lords have not been before collected in any work, no limitation of time has been observed in their collection.

Resolved to begin with the beginning, Mr. MAY opens with a review of the constitution, powers, and privileges of Parliament, to the investigation of which the first book is devoted. In successive chapters, he discourses of the constituent parts of Parliament, with incidental reference to their ancient history and constitution; of the power and jurisdiction of the collective Parliament, and of each of its constituent parts; then of its privileges, and the different punishments inflicted by the two Houses for breaches of them; then of the privileges of freedom of speech, freedom from arrest or molestation; and, lastly, of the jurisdiction of the courts of law in matters of privilege. The second book exhibits the Practice and Proceedings of Parliament, from its assembling to its prorogation or dissolution, describing such matters as rules of debate, divisions, committees, witnesses, conferences, petitions, accounts, supplies, controverted elections, impeachment, and so forth, which may be read with advantage by others than lawyers or M.P.'s. The third book will be most interesting to the Profession, for the subject of that is The Manner of passing Private Bills. The utility of this portion of the volume will appear from a brief analysis of its contents.

Mr. MAY first defines the distinctive character of Private Bills, and takes a preliminary view of the proceedings of Parliament in passing them. Thence he reviews the conditions to be observed by parties before they are introduced; the notices and deposit of plans, &c. the estimates, and subscription contracts. Next come the proceedings to be observed when they are introduced, with the rules, orders, and practice applicable to each stage of such Bills in succession, and to particular classes of Bills. Then, the course of proceedings in the Lords upon Private Bills sent from the Commons; the rules, orders, and course of proceedings there when the Bill is first brought into that House, and the proceedings of the Commons upon such Bills brought from the Lords. And, finally, he treats in a distinct chapter of the fees payable by the parties promoting or opposing Private Bills, with the costs of parliamentary agents and others. An extensive index affords easy reference to any portion of the multifarious contents it may be desired to consult.

Such is an outline of this valuable treatise; and, as is our wont, we must now gather some passages to shew the author's treatment of his subject. By way of variety, we will take from the historical portion of the work an instructive sketch of the constitution of

THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

"1. Lords Spiritual.—II. The lords spiritual and temporal sit together and jointly constitute the House of Lords, which is the second branch of the legislature in rank and dignity. The lords spiritual are the archbishops and bishops of the Protestant Established Church of England and four representative bishops of the Church of Ireland. Before the Conquest the lords spiritual held a prominent place in the great Saxon councils, which they retained in the councils of the Norman kings; but the right by which they have always held a place in Parliament has not been agreed upon by the constitutional writers. In the Saxon times there is no doubt that they sat, as bishops, by virtue of their ecclesiastical office; but according to Selden, William the Conqueror, in the fourth year of his reign, first brought the bishops and abbots under the tenure by barony; (a) and Blackstone, adopting the same view, states that 'William the Conqueror thought proper to change the spiritual tenure of frank-almoign, or free alms, under which the bishops held their lands under the Saxon government, into the feudal or Norman tenure by barony; and in right of succession to those baronies, which were unalienable from their respective dignities, the bishops and abbots were allowed their seats in the House of Lords.' (b) Lord Hale was of opinion that the bishops sit by usage; and Mr. Hallam maintains that the bishops of William the Conqueror were entitled to sit in his councils by the general custom of Europe, which invited the superior ecclesiastics to such offices, and by the common law of England, which the Conquest did not overturn (c) Another view of the question is, that before the dissolution of the monasteries, the mitred abbots had a seat in Parliament solely by virtue of their tenures as barons; but that the bishops sat in a double capacity, as bishops and as barons. (d) Their presence in Parliament, however, has been uninterrupted, whatever changes may have been effected in the nature of their tenure.

"There are two archbishops (of York and Canterbury) and twenty-four bishops of the Church of England, who have seats in Parliament. (e) To these were added four bishops of the Church of Ireland, on the union of that country with Great Britain, who sit by rotation of sessions, and represent the whole episcopal body of Ireland in Parliament. (f) Of these four lords spiritual, an archbishop of the Church of Ireland is always one.

"2. Lords Temporal. Dukes.—The lords temporal are divided into dukes, marquesses, earls, viscounts and barons, whose titles are of different degrees of antiquity and honour. The title of duke, though first in rank, is by no means the most ancient in this country. It was a feudal title of high dignity in all parts of Europe, in very early times, and among the Saxons, duces (or leaders) are frequently mentioned; but the title was first conferred after the Conquest by Edward III. upon his son Edward the Black Prince, whom he created Duke of Cornwall. (g) Before that time the title had often been used as synonymous with that of count.

"Marquesses.—Marquesses were originally lords of the marches or borders, and derived their title from the offices held by them. In the German empire, the counts or graves of those provinces which were on the frontiers had the titles of marchio and marggravius in Latin; of markgraf in German, and marchese in Italian. In England similar offices and titles were anciently enjoyed without being attached to any distinct dignity in the peerage. The noblemen who governed the provinces on the borders of Wales and Scotland were called marchiones, and claimed certain privileges by virtue of their office; but the earliest creation of marquess as a title of honour, was in the ninth year of Richard II. Robert De Vere, Earl of Oxford, was then created Marquess of Dublin, for life, and the rank assigned to him in Parliament by right of this new dignity, was immediately after the dukes, and before the earls. (h) In the same reign John Earl of Somerset was created Marquess of Dorset, but was deprived of the title by Henry IV. In the fourth year of the latter reign the Parliament prayed the king to restore this dignity, but the Earl begged to decline its acceptance, because the name was so strange in this kingdom. (i)

"Earls.—The title of Earl in England is equivalent to that of comes or count in other countries of Europe. Amongst the Saxons there were ealdormen to whom the government of provinces was committed, but whose titles were official and not hereditary. (k) That title was often used by writers indifferently with comes, on account of the similarity of character and dignity denoted by those names. When the Danes had gained ascendancy in England, the ancient Danish title of eorle, which indicated a similar dignity, was gradually substituted for that of ealdorman. At the Norman Conquest the title of eorle or earl was in universal use, and was so high a dignity that in the earliest charters of William the Conqueror he styles himself in Latin, 'Princeps Normannorum,' and in Saxon, Eorle or Earl of Normandy. (l) After the Conquest the Norman name of count distinguished the noblemen who enjoyed this dignity; from whence the shires committed to their charge have ever since been called counties. (m) In the course of time the original title of earl was revived, but their wives and peeresses of that rank in their own right, have always retained the French name of countesses.

"Viscounts.—Between the dignities of earl and baron no rank intervened, in England, until the reign of Henry VI.; but in France the title of viscount, as subordinate to that of count, was very ancient. The great counts of that kingdom holding large territories in feudal sovereignty, appointed governors of parts of their possessions, who were called viscounts, or vicecomites. These, either by feudal gift, or by usurpation, often obtained an inheritance in the districts confided to them, and transmitted the lands and dignity to their posterity. (n) In England, the title of viscount was first conferred upon John Beaumont, Viscount Beaumont, by Henry VI. in the eighteenth year of his reign; and a place was assigned to him in Parliament, the council, and other assemblies, above all the barons. (o) The French origin of this dignity was exemplified immediately afterwards by the grant of the viscounty of Beaumont, in France, to the same person, by King Henry, who then styled himself king of France and England. The rank and precedence of a viscount were more distinctly defined by patent, in the 23rd of Henry VI. to be above the heirs and sons of earls, and immediately after the earls themselves.

"Barons.—Barons are often mentioned in the councils of the Saxon kings, and in the laws of Edward the Confessor were classed with the archbishops, bishops, and earls; but the name bore different significations, and no distinct dignity was annexed to it, as in later times. After the Conquest every dignity was attached to the possession of lands, which were held immediately of the king, subject to feudal services. The lands which were granted by William the Conqueror to his followers descended to their posterity, who, by virtue of the baronies held by them, were ennobled by the dignity of baron. By the feudal system, every tenant was bound to attend the court of his immediate superior, and hence the barons, being tenants in capite of the king, were entitled to attend the king's court or council; but, although their presence at the king's council was part of the conditions of their tenure, they received writs of summons from the king, when their attendance was required. At length, when the lands became subdivided, and the king's tenants were consequently more numerous and poor, they were separated into greater and lesser barons; of whom the former continued to receive particular writs of summons from the king, and the latter only a general summons through the sheriffs. The feudal tenure of the baronies afterwards became unnecessary to create the dignity of a baron, and the king's writ or patent alone conferred the dignity and the seat in Parliament. The condition of the lesser barons, after their separation from their more powerful brethren, will be presently explained.

"Representative peers of Scotland.—On the union of Scotland, in 1707, the Scottish peers were not admitted, as a class, to seats in the British Parliament; but they elect, for each Parliament, sixteen representatives from their own body; who must be descended from ancestors who were peers at the time of the union.

"Representative peers of Ireland.—Under the Act for the legislative union with Ireland, which came into operation in 1801, the Irish peers elect twenty-eight representatives for life from the peerage of Ireland. The power of the Queen to add to the number of Irish peers is subject to limitation: she may make promotions in the peerage at all times; but she can only create a new Irish peer whenever three of the peerages of Ireland, which were in existence, at the time of the union, have become extinct. But if it should happen that the number of Irish peers—exclusive of those holding any peerage of the United Kingdom, which entitles them to an hereditary seat in the House of Lords—should be reduced to one hundred; then one new Irish peerage may be created as often as one becomes extinct, or whenever an Irish peer becomes entitled, by descent or creation, to an hereditary seat in the Imperial Parliament; the true intent and meaning of that article of union being to keep up the Irish peerage to the number of one hundred. (p)

"These, then, are the component parts of the House of Lords, of whom all peers and lords of Parliament, whatever may be their title, have equal voice in Parliament; but none are permitted to sit in the house until they are twenty-one years of age. (q)

"Lords Spiritual and Temporal form one body.—The two estates of lords spiritual and lords temporal, thus constituted, may originally have had an equal voice in all matters deliberated upon, and had separate places for their discussion; but at a very early period they are found to constitute one assembly; and, for many centuries past, though retaining their distinct character and denominations, they have been, practically, but one estate of the realm. Thus the Act of Uniformity, 1 Eliz. c. 2, was passed by the Queen, the lords temporal, and the commons; for all the lords spiritual dissented, and their names were omitted from the Act. The lords temporal are the hereditary peers of the realm, but the bishops are only lords of Parliament. (r) Their votes are intermixed, and the joint majority of the members of both estates determine every question; but they sit apart, on separate benches, the place assigned to the lords spiritual being the upper part of the house, on the right hand of the throne.

"The House of Lords, in the aggregate, is now composed of 429 members, who are distributed in their different classes, in the following manner:—

"Lords Spiritual:
2 archbishops (Canterbury and York).
24 English bishops.
4 Irish representative bishops.

Total 30

"Lords Temporal:
2 dukes of the blood royal.
20 dukes.
20 marquesses.
115 earls.
21 viscounts.
207 barons.
16 representative peers of Scotland.

DEFINITION OF PRIVATE BILLS.

"Every Bill for the particular interest or benefit of any person or persons is treated, in Parliament, as a private Bill. Whether it be for the interest of an individual, a public company or corporation, a parish, a city, a county, or other locality;(s) it is equally distinguished from a measure of national import, in which the whole community are interested. This distinction is the better defined by the solicitation of the parties themselves · Bills in which their interests are concerned; as, by the standing orders of both Houses, all private Bills are required to be brought in upon petition;(t) and the payment of fees is an indispensable condition to their progress."

And then, from the next chapter, on the conditions to be observed by parties before Private Bills are introduced, these instructions relating to the

PRELIMINARY CONDITIONS TO PRIVATE BILLS.

"Preliminary Conditions required by both Houses.—In order to give due notice to the public generally, and to all parties who may be interested in private Bills of a local or general character and operation, Parliament has ordered certain public and personal notices to be given of intended applications for leave to introduce such Bills, and has rendered compulsory the compliance with other preliminary conditions, which must be separately proved in either House. The standing orders of the Lords and Commons in reference to these preliminaries are now so much assimilated, that it will be most convenient to bring them together in this chapter, by which much needless repetion will be avoided; the slight variations which still exist in the standing orders of the two Houses will be more distinctly pointed out, and the attention of parties directed to them at the proper time.

"Notices.—The Bills concerning which notices are required, have been divided into the three following classes by the standing orders of both Houses:—

1st Class.—Burial ground, making, maintaining, or altering.
Church or chapel, building, enlarging, repairing, or maintaining.

2nd Class.—Making, maintaining, varying, extending, or enlarging any 3rd Class.—Continuing or amending an Act passed for any of the purposes included in this or the two preceding classes, where no further work than such as was authorized by a former Act is proposed to be made.

Gaol or house of correction.
Letters patent, confirming, prolonging, or transferring the term of.
Powers to sue and be sued, conferring.
Stipendiary magistrate, or any public officer, payment of, if out of county rate.

"In reference to all these Bills, the standing orders of both Houses require,—

"Notices, how and when published. Receipt of Printer.—'That notices be published in three successive weeks in the months of October and November, or either of them, immediately preceding the session of Parliament in which application for the Bill shall be made, in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, as the case may be, and in some one and the same newspaper of the county in which the city, town, or lands to which such Bill relates shall be situate; or if there be no newspaper published therein, then in the newspaper of some county adjoining or near there to; or if such Bill do not relate to any particular city, town, or lands, in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette only, as the case may be.' The Commons also order, 'That all notices required to be inserted in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, be delivered at the office of the Gazette in which the insertion is required to be made, during the usual office hours, at least two clear days previous to the publication of the Gazette, and that the receipt of the printer for such notice shall be proof of its due delivery.'

"It is also ordered by both Houses,—

"Intention to take Lands or levy or alter Tolls to be stated.—'That if it be the intention of the parties applying for leave to bring in a Bill to obtain powers for the compulsory purchase of lands or houses, or to levy any tolls, rates, or duties, or to alter any existing tolls, rates, or duties, or to confer, vary, or extinguish any exemptions from payment of tolls, rates, or duties, or any other rights or privileges, the notices shall specify such intention.'

"Application to Owners, &c.—'That on or before the 31st day of December immediately preceding the application for a Bill by which any lands or houses are intended to be taken, or an extension of the time granted by any former Act for that purpose is sought, application in writing(u) be made to the owners or reputed owners, lessees or reputed lessees, and occupiers, either by delivering the same personally, or by leaving the same at their usual place of abode, or in their absence from the United Kingdom, with their agents respectively, of which application having been duly made, the production of a written acknowledgment by the party applied to of the receipt of such application, shall be sufficient evidence, in the absence of other proof, of the same having been duly delivered or left as aforesaid; and that separate lists be made of the names of such owners, lessees, and occupiers, distinguishing which of them have assented, dissented, or are neuter in respect thereto.'

"In addition to these notices applicable to Bills of all the classes, there are other orders specially relating to Bills of each separate class, and to particular Bills included in each class."

(r) See Lords' S. O. No. 44. "It would be resolved what privilege noblemen and peers have, betwixt which this difference is to be observed, that bishops are only lords of Parliament, but not peers, for they are not of trial by nobility."

(s) See 2 Hats. 281—288. A Bill for the benefit of three counties has been held to be a private Bill.

The Arithmetic of Annuities and Life Assurance, or Compound Interest Simplified, &c. &c. By Edward Baylis, Actuary to the Anchor Life Assurance Company. London, Longman and Co. 1844.

This is a very useful volume. It is not so abstruse as the profoundly scientific Treatises on Probabilities, by Price, Morgan, Bailey, Milne, Gomperts, and De Morgan, nor is it so superficial as the multitude that profess to instruct in the calculation of uncertain interest, but from which nothing practical can be gleaned. Mr. Baylis's volume may be deemed rather as an introduction to the more elaborate treatises, and it is composed with a view to enabling those who are not very learned mathematicians to make such calculations for themselves.

But he adds to his instructions how to work the problems, many elaborate tables of the results, which will enable almost all the ordinary questions as to the values of annuities, insurances, and contingent interests, to be ascertained without the tedious process of calculation.

This is not a book from which an extract can be made; but Mr. Baylis throws out a hint for the abolition of pauperism, which has at least the merit of ingenuity. He suggests, that if every parent were compelled to pay to the state 14s. 3d. per annum for each child from its birth, and afterwards, on attaining maturity, from his own labour, a competency could be secured for his old age.

We can recommend this volume to all who feel an interest in its subject.

Re CHAMBERS.

Solicitor and client—Gifts to solicitor by client—Lien.

This was a petition to confirm the Master's report, finding that the sum of 111*l.* was still due from Chambers to Wilton, his attorney, for costs incurred in proceedings undertaken with a view to set aside Chambers's bankruptcy. The petition also sought a reference back to the Master to tax the further costs incurred by the present petition; and that, on the taxed costs being paid, Wilton and (he having become an insolvent debtor) his provisional assignee, Sturgis, might be ordered to deliver up to Chambers all bonds and bills of exchange held by them, and to enter satisfaction upon all judgments against Chambers at the suit of Wilton. The case of Chambers is a hard one; he is now nearly eighty years of age, and, after having been in prison for twenty years, and having obtained his discharge by a compromise, he was now again in confinement in respect of certain liabilities incurred after the date of the bankruptcy. Chambers was found bankrupt in 1825, but he contested the commission, and in so doing employed Mr. Wilton as his attorney. Chambers seems to have entertained a high opinion of the value of Wilton's exertions in his business, gave him various bonds and bills of exchange, as securities for his costs, and also a bond to secure to Wilton the sum of 5,000*l.* as a gratuity. Mr. Green, who had been Wilton's agent, and Mr. Williams, were subsequently employed in succession as Chambers's solicitors. By a compromise between Chambers and his assignees, 23,000*l.* had been paid into court for the benefit of Chambers's family and for costs, of which all the costs of Green and Williams, and most of those of Wilton, having been paid, about 9,250*l.* remained, subject to the balance of 111*l.* now reported due to Wilton for costs.

Bethell, Ogle, and Craig, in support of the petition

Wilton appeared in person, and objected to the mode in which the taxation of his bills had been conducted.

Bethell.—Lord Cottenham decided that Wilton had no right to be a party to the taxation of the bills.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Then I must consider all questions as to the bill of costs disposed of. Why were not the securities given up?

Wilton then stated that he claimed the bond securing 5,000*l.* as a gratuity; that such bond had been given after the relation of solicitor and client had ceased; and that the Master reported to that effect.

It appeared that the promise of a gratuity had been made by Chambers during his employment of Wilton, but the bond was given one day after Green had been formally appointed to be the solicitor. Green had prepared the bond.

Wakefield, for Green, claimed to be paid a sum due to him from Wilton, whilst acting as his agent in Chambers's affairs, to secure which, this bond, with other securities given for costs, had been assigned by Wilton, with the knowledge and assent of Chambers. At all events, he was entitled to the balance found due.

Follett, for Wilton's assignee, claimed to be paid the balance due.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It appears that all Wilton's bills of costs have been taxed and paid, with the exception of the sum of 111*l.* now found due; and that no exception has been taken to the Master's report. So far as Wilton had any control over securities given for costs, he was bound to give them up on payment of the 111*l.* found to be due, and satisfaction must be entered upon the judgment. With respect to Wilton's claim on the bond, that instrument was mere waste paper. It could not be allowed that a solicitor should obtain the promise of a gratuity from his client, and then, after transferring his connection with that client to his own agent, go the next day to the client, and get a security in performance of that promise. Such a security could not be valid, and Wilton and those who claimed through him must deliver up all the securities they held. With respect to Green, there is no distinction between the claim of Green, as assignee of Wilton, and that of Wilton himself. By the assignment of the securities Green took no more than Wilton had, and when the costs for which the securities had been given were paid, the securities must be delivered up. My impression is, that Green is entitled to the 111*l.* the securities for the costs having been pledged to him; but the provisional assignee might be able to shew a title to that sum; and to afford him the opportunity of so doing, the money must be paid to the credit of both of those parties. Order thus modified granted.

Re ——, a supposed Lunatic.

Practice—Substituted service—Notice.

Calvert moved for leave to serve a petition, which prayed that the above party might be visited and examined by physicians, to ascertain his sanity or lunacy, on his solicitor. This gentleman, who had been for many years confined in a lunatic asylum in Paris, had recently escaped, and come to this country, where he had filed a bill in Chancery against the petitioner. The circumstances which shew that he is keeping out of the way are, that he is not to be found at the hotel which is described as his residence, and his solicitor has stated that he does not know where he is, that he cannot find his present abode, and that he has left the hotel. He has been in England about a fortnight.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Will his solicitor make an affidavit? It is proper, under the circumstances, that he should make such an affidavit. Let him be applied to, and informed that it is his duty to make such an affidavit, and then this application may be renewed. You may apply to me at any time, or anywhere.

Re PALMER, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Payment without a reference.

In this case, the property being small, the Lord Chancellor reluctantly made an order for payment of a sum of money out of court for the benefit of the lunatic without reference.

Re HAWKINS, a Lunatic.

Committee of the person—Practice.

Green supported a petition to confirm the commissioners' report approving of the medical man in whose care the lunatic had been as committee of the person. His relations would not proceed in the matter, having taken no step since the inquisition in July 1843.

Ordered.

Re HARDCASTLE, a Lunatic, deceased.

Validity of probate of a person dying lunatic—Committee's accounts—Alternative order.

This petition, which was for the transfer of a fund in court to the executors of the late lunatic, stood over for production of the proceedings in the Prerogative Court of York.

Stinton produced the proceedings.

The LORD CHANCELLOR (after reading the proceedings).—The question appears to have been distinctly raised, and evidence given in support of the testator's sanity at the date of the will, the point having been raised before the competent tribunal, and decided, the probate is conclusive. Order made for taking the accounts of the committee of the estate; and it having been suggested that the estate was indebted to the committee, the order was made in the alternative, that the committee should pay any balance which might be found due from him, or might be paid any balance found due to him.

Re BRIGNALL, a Lunatic.

Committee's accounts—Costs.

F. Bayley supported a petition by the executors of a deceased committee, to whom and from whom nothing was due, that they might be allowed the costs of passing the accounts. Ordered.

MINCHIN v. NANCE, re BOWYER.

Lunatic trustee—Imbecility from age of a party against whom a decree in equity had been made.

In this cause, which was for the specific performance of an agreement, Mrs. Bowyer had been directed by the decree to execute a conveyance; but from her age and infirmities she had become incapable of doing so. The deed by which she was to convey was approved by the Master, and a suit was then instituted against Mrs. Bowyer, for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that she was a trustee for the purchaser, and a decree was made accordingly. In the second cause, her son was examined as a witness, and he deposed to her incapacity to do any legal act.

The purchaser now presented a petition under 1 Wm. 4, c. 60 (Lunatic Trustee Act), praying that the son might be ordered to convey in the place of Mrs. Bowyer.

Tennant supported the petition, and produced the decree declaring Mrs. Bowyer a trustee, and the son's deposition in the cause as to her incapacity.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Must it not be referred to the Master to inquire whether Mrs. Bowyer is a trustee within the Act?

Tennant cited Re Rogers (Law T. No. 53, April 6, 1844); Re Palmer (MSS.).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The deposition is evidence in the cause, but there is no evidence in the matter of the lunacy; there would be no record in the lunacy office. There must be an affidavit in the lunacy that she is incapable, which must incorporate the declaration of the Master of the Rolls; on the production of which the order may be made without a reference.

Re BETTS, a Lunatic.

Appointment of a receiver with a salary where no one is willing to become the committee of the estate.

Roll asked the confirmation of the commissioners' report, approving of the appointment of —— Betts, jun. as receiver of the lunatic's estate, at the salary of 20*l.* a year, no one being willing to become committee of the estate. Ordered.

Ex parte VAN SANDAU, re MARTIN.

Appeal to the Lord Chancellor from the Court of Review.

In this matter, which involved a committal for contempt of Court on the part of a solicitor,

Bagshaw obtained leave to give notice of a petition to appeal from the decision of the Court of Review, when the whole matter might be brought before the Lord Chancellor.

Ex parte VAN SANDAU, re MARTIN.

Practice in bankruptcy—Appeal from the Court of Review—Reviewing the exercise of a judicial discretion.

Swanston moved to discharge an order made by the Chancellor a few days previously, that the petitioner might give notice of a petition of appeal from the decision of the Court of Review. The usual way in which appeals come from the Court of Review is, on a special case settled by that Court. Here Sir George Rose, had sat for the chief judge, Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce. The petitioner had been committed for a contempt of the Court of Review, in writing a letter containing severe animadversions on the judgment of the chief judge in this bankruptcy, and he had been ordered to pay certain costs, charges, and expenses incident to and arising out of that contempt. He had also been stayed by injunction in the prosecution of an action at law which he had commenced against other parties, out of disputes with whom the transaction originated. From that order the petitioner desired to appeal, but Sir George Rose would not make a special case, and suggested a direct petition of appeal to the Chancellor. The petitioner had demurred, and his counsel were told by the Chief Judge to argue three only out of forty grounds of demurrer.

Bagshaw and Rolt, for the petitioner.—It was hopeless to attempt to appeal upon a special case, as the Court of Review would not permit the judgment of Chief Judge, comments on which formed the subject of the petitioner's contempt, or the letter of the 27th of February, the act of contempt, or a subsequent letter, explaining the former one, to be inserted in the case.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Cannot the objection in form to the order be made a part of the special case?

Rolt.—The Act directs either a special case or a petition of appeal, and Sir George Rose intimated that this case was fitted for a petition of appeal. The petition had been framed so as to be a petition of appeal from the order of Sir George Rose only, in the first instance, that if the point of form be decided in the petitioner's favour, the whole case might then be gone into.

Swanston, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is difficult to consider whether the letter was a fair criticism on the judgment, without setting out the judgment. Suppose there had been a misrepresentation of the judgment, turning the judgment into ridicule; could I decide on that without seeing the judgment? The difficulty I feel is, whether a committal for contempt is the subject of appeal at all? Both agree on the terms of the judgment; but I have not heard it argued whether it comes within the terms of the Act of Parliament. I may, however, hear the whole question argued on this petition, and the application now is to discharge the order. Sir George Rose doubts whether it is within the Act of Parliament, and I think I ought not to discharge the order. The petition should be presented, and argued on the jurisdiction, and afterwards on the merits; or it may then be open for the Court to order the merits to be stated on a special case, as to, first, the construction of the Act of Parliament; secondly, whether there can be an appeal on the merits in a case of contempt. The Court can at last deal in any way it thinks fit.

Motion to discharge the order refused.

COURT OF THE VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND.

Friday, May 24.

GARDNER v. SMITH.

Marriage Settlement—Construction &c.—Trust for issue of a child or children of the marriage dying in the lifetime of the tenant for life, the parent.

By a settlement made upon the intended marriage of C. G. and J. W. certain stock was transferred into the joint names of two trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends thereof to J. W. the intended wife, during her life, for her sole and separate use, and, after her decease, in trust for the said C. G. during his life, if he should survive her. And after the decease of the survivor of them, in trust to pay the principal sum of money among the child and children of the marriage, in such a manner as J. W. should direct or appoint; and, in default thereof, then upon trust for all and every the children of the marriage, if more than one, who should be living at the decease of the said C. G. and J. W. and the lawful issue then also living of such of the said children as should be then dead. And if there should be but one child of the said intended marriage living at the decease of them, the said C. G. and J. W. and no lawful issue of any other child, then to transfer the whole of the Bank Annuities to such only child; and if there should be no children of the said intended marriage living at the decease of the survivor of them, the said C. G. and J. W. but only lawful issue of some one of the said children, then to transfer the whole to such issue at twenty-one. There was afterwards a proviso that if the said C. G. should survive the said J. W. and without leaving any child or issue of any child or children, that the whole fund should be transferred to the said C. G. absolutely.

The marriage took place, and J. W. the wife, died without making any appointment, leaving C. G. and one son, the only issue of the marriage, who attained his age of twenty-one years, her surviving. C. G. being willing to give up his life interest, together with his contingency in the absolute fund, over to his son, at once, for the son's benefit, in order that the son might have the whole absolute fund in himself, application was made to the Court for that purpose. Held, that the trusts were not exhausted, nor had C. G. and C. J. G. together power to deal with the corpus of the fund, they not having in themselves the whole title thereto, but that there was a contingent interest in favour of such issue; and that, therefore, C. G. the tenant for life, being still living, the trustee must continue to retain the stock in his own name and pay the dividends to C. G. until his decease.

By a settlement, bearing date the 30th June, 1817, and made on the marriage of the defendant, Christopher Gardner, and Jane Warneford, the sum of 776*l.* 0s. 5d. 4 per Cent. Bank Annuities was transferred by the said J. Warneford to the defendants, James Smith and T. Hart. She also assigned other property to them, upon trust to invest the same in the purchase of 4*l.* per Cent. Bank Annuities, and to stand possessed thereof upon trust for the said J. Warneford until the solemnization of the marriage; and immediately after the said marriage upon trust to pay the dividends to her during her life for her sole and separate use, and after her decease, in case the said Christopher Gardner should survive her, upon trust to pay the dividends arising out of the fund unto the said Christopher Gardner during his life; and from and immediately after the decease of the survivor of them, the said Christopher Gardner and Jane Warneford, upon trust to pay the principal stock and dividends thereof to all and every the child or children of the said intended marriage, in such parts, shares, and proportions as she should direct or appoint, and in default thereof, upon trust for all the children of the intended marriage, if more than one, who should be living at the decease of them, the said Christopher Gardner and Jane Warneford, and the lawful issue then also living of such of the said children as should be then dead, leaving such lawful issue in equal proportions; and if there should be but one child only of the said intended marriage living at the decease of them, the said Christopher Gardner and Jane Warneford, and no lawful issue of any other child, then to transfer the whole of the Bank Annuities to such only child. And if there should be no child of the said intended marriage living at the decease of the survivor of them, the said C. Gardner and Jane Warneford, but only lawful issue of some one of the said children, then upon trust to transfer the whole of the said Bank Annuities to such issue at the age of twenty-one years. * * * * And it was provided, that if the said C. Gardner should happen to die in the lifetime of the said J. Warneford, without leaving any child or children of the said intended marriage, then, upon trust, to transfer the whole of the Bank Annuities to the said J. Warneford, her executors, administrators, and assigns. Provided also, that if the said J. Warneford should happen to die in the lifetime of the said C. Gardner, and without leaving any child or children of the intended marriage, or any lawful issue of any child or children of such intended marriage, then upon trust, immediately after the decease of the said J. Warneford, to transfer the whole of the Bank Annuities, and the other moneys thenceforth to be invested, in the said C. Gardner, his executors, administrators, and assigns.

Shortly after the date and execution of this settlement, the marriage between the said C. Gardner and J. Warneford took place.

Jane Gardner died in May, 1819, having had one child only, the plaintiff, Christopher John Gardner, and without having made any appointment whatever under the power reserved to her by the said indenture of settlement, who (subject to his father's life-interest in the dividends) became, on his attaining his age of 21 years, entitled to the absolute interests in the said trust-moneys. Thomas Hart died some years ago, leaving the defendant, J. Smith, his co-trustee, him surviving; and Christopher Gardner took out letters of administration to his said deceased wife's effects, and became her sole legal personal representative.

An arrangement was lately entered into between the plaintiff and his father, whereby the latter consented to give up his life interest in the whole of the trust-funds, and to permit the same to be immediately transferred to the plaintiff, as if he, the father, were already dead; and under those circumstances they applied to the defendant, J. Smith, the surviving trustee, to transfer to the plaintiff, as he should direct, the sum of 1,696*l.* 9s. 6d. Three and a Half per Cent. Reduced Annuities, to which the former stock had been changed, with all interest due thereon. This the trustee refused to do without the sanction of the Court. The plaintiff thereupon filed his bill, praying that the above fund, with all accruing dividends, might be transferred to him, or as he should direct, the plaintiff offering, on having such transfer, to pay the costs of the application.

Glass, for the plaintiff, contended that the defendant, C. Gardner, having administered to his deceased wife, J. Gardner, and being also tenant for life of the fund, that he and his son, the only issue of the marriage, have together in them the whole interest; and that having regard to the object of the settlement, the surviving trustee might with safety enable the parties to deal with the fund.

Goodeve, for the surviving trustee.

Fooks, for the surviving tenant for life.

His Honour the VICE-CHANCELLOR thought that the deed of settlement was not the most luminously-drawn instrument he had seen; but there was sufficient appearing therein to prevent his granting the present application; for although the father, under an event which has not happened, would be entitled to the whole fund, yet at the present moment it could not be said that the whole of the trusts were exhausted, for there was a provision for the issue of such of the children or child of the marriage dying in the lifetime of the tenant for life. Such an event, said his Honour, may even now take place; for suppose the son have issue and die, and then the father leaving that issue surviving, there would, under those circumstances, be a trust in the fund for them by the express terms of the settlement. The father and son have not, therefore, the whole interest in them; and, consequently, I cannot grant the present application.

Declare that the father is entitled for life to the dividends arising from the funds; the tenant to retain the fund till the death of the trustee for life, the costs of all parties to be paid out of the fund as between solicitor and client.

SQUIRE v. WHITTON.

May 24, 25, and 29.

Bond—Misrepresentation—Advance by one trustee to another of trust fund—Bond void at law in what manner available in equity—Release of surety where conditions have not been complied with.

M. being suddenly called upon to pay a sum of money, applies to W. an aged female, by letter, to join him in a bond to secure that amount, promising to save her harmless. A few days afterwards, M. with his son, C. M. called upon W. and prevailed upon her to execute a bond for 10,000l. leaving blanks for the obligee's name and rate of interest; which was done without the knowledge of her solicitor.

M. and one S. were trustees of the marriage settlement of B. and his wife, and it was proposed by S. to B. that a sufficient quantity of stock standing in the names of M. and S. forming part of the settled property, should be sold out to meet the demand; B. consented, on condition that S. should secure the amount by obtaining a mortgage in the names of S. and M.

The stock was sold out with the consent of B. and wife, and the blanks of the bond were then filled up by inserting the name of B. as obligee, and the rate of interest, but no mortgage was taken by S.

B. died in 1841, having appointed S. with two others, his executors, who proved his will, and conceiving B.'s estate bound to M. and S. as trustees of the settlement, paid the debt which they supposed due, and then filed their bill against W. as surety to the bond, and M. as the principal.

Held, that as there was no evidence of any debt from W. to B. (the trust fund having made the advance to M.), and she having been induced to sign under the promise of being held harmless, the executors could not claim as against her.

Held also, that the trustees had committed a breach of trust in advancing the money to one of themselves without taking proper security, and therefore, as executors, could not claim to be indemnified when they did not take that precaution.

As a general proposition, a bond void at law may be good in equity as an agreement; and even a bond good at law may under a definite form be brought into a court of equity to prove more than what is stated in the condition.

The defendant, W. Morgan, a stock-broker, being a joint-trustee with the plaintiff, John Squire (one of the partners in the house of Ransom and Co. Pall-mall East, bankers), under the marriage settlement of Mr. Beauchamp, deceased, and Mrs. Beauchamp, and being also a co-executor with the defendant, M. P. Whitton, under the will of her late husband, Mr. Whitton, formerly an eminent attorney in London, some time in the month of August 1838, under a sudden pressure for money, through the indiscretion of a son, with whom he was engaged in partnership, induced his co-executor, the defendant, Mrs. Whitton, then about 70 years of age, to join him as surety in a bond for 10,000*l.* This instrument was prepared by Mr. Charles Morgan, son of the defendant Morgan, and then a clerk in the office of Messrs. Gregson and Co. of Bedford-row; the bond was signed by Mrs. Whitton in blank, in the presence of her butler. Mr. Gregson was formerly a partner with Mr. Whitton, deceased, and has been the confidential legal adviser of Mrs. Whitton, from the time of her late husband's death. The transaction of the bond took place without the knowledge of Mr. Gregson, who knew nothing of the affair until some time in 1837, when he was casually informed of the existence of such an instrument then in the possession of the late Mr. Beauchamp, but heard nothing further about it until the month of November 1841, when he was consulted professionally by Mrs. Whitton, in consequence of her being called upon to pay the 10,000*l.* expressed to be secured by the bond in a question. This instrument had been executed by Mrs. Whitton without the name of any obligee or the rate of interest being inserted. The money advanced to Morgan was raised by a sale of part of the trust funds of the settlement. The plaintiffs now filed their bill, as executors of Mr. Beauchamp, to establish the liability of Mrs. Whitton and Morgan to pay them, as such executors, the sum so secured upon the bond, with interest at the rate of 4½ per cent. and that it might be enforced against them in equity.

The defendant, Mrs. Whitton, resisted this demand, on the ground that the money was in reality the trust fund, and advanced to Morgan by the trustees themselves, and that, therefore, the executors of Beauchamp could have no claim against her in respect of the money so advanced, and that not only was the bond void at law as against her, it being an imperfect instrument, but also in equity, as not containing any agreement by her to advance the money, and that her signature had been obtained under the promise that she should be saved harmless.

Steuart, Walker, and Toller, for the plaintiffs, cited the following cases: Ball v. Storie (1 Sim. & S. 212); Crossby v. Middleton (Prec. in Chanc. 309); Masterr v. Gillespie (11 Ves. 621); Davis v. Earl of Strathmore (16 Ves. 419); Spearing v. Lynn (2 Vern. 376); East India Company v. Boddam (9 Ves. 464); Rawston v. Parr (3 Russ. 424); ——— v. Aldridge (1 Ryan & Mood. 348 N. P.); Eastwood v. Kenyon (11 Adol. & Ell. 438); Thompson v. Maddick (1 Taunt.); Brooksbank v. Smith (2 You. & Coll.).

Bethel, Bailey, and Jackson, for the defendant Mrs. Whitton, mentioned the following cases: Sheffield v. Lord Castleton (2 Vern. 392); Simpson v. Field (2 Ca. Cas. 322); Radcliffe v. Graves (1 Vern. 196); Brooks v. Steuart (1 Beav.); M'Iror v. Richardson (1 Man. & Selw.); Moseley v. ——— (5 Phil. 416).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I may be wrong in my opinion, but I have considered the facts of the case with great attention, and it appears much to be lamented that the transaction with Mrs. Whitton had taken place without her solicitor, Mr. Gregson, which would have prevented the occurrence of all these calamitous proceedings. It is a hard thing for Mrs. Whitton, and I cannot think that lady has been fairly dealt with. I wish to regard the affair with every modification, viz. that the parties did not understand what they were about. I do not proceed upon the proposition whether if a bond void at law might not be good in equity as an agreement. The proposition is too general to be disputed; and even a bond good at law, I can have no doubt may, under a definite form, be brought into a court of equity to prove more than what is stated in the condition. Mr. Morgan, as it appears, had, in the year 1833, met with misfortunes, through the imprudence of his son, which induced him to write a letter on the 7th August in that year to Mrs. Whitton, which is the most important part of the transaction. "To make short of a long story," he says, "William, in my absence, entered into a speculation, most unwarrantable, which I have to make good in seven days from the present; and, in order to give me time to realize other securities, may I ask the favour of you to join me in a bond for 10,000*l*. which will give me time to make arrangements? You may depend upon it I will hold you harmless; but your answer must be by return of post, or it would be too late for my purpose. I shall take the first opportunity of seeing you, to state particulars." In this letter there is a distinct statement made by him that he would save her harm less if she would join him in the bond. We do not know what reply she made to this; probably she answered it by return of post. Beauchamp then writes to Squire, on the 11th, referring to the settlement of Mr. and Mrs. Beauchamp, in which there was a power of sale given to the trustees, with the written leave of Mr. and Mrs. Beauchamp. In this letter there is an allusion to the contents of Mrs. Whitton's answer; he says, moreover: "You say that his friend, Mrs. Whitton, will join in a bond; or there should be real security given for the 10,000*l*. advanced out of the sale of stock." It is quite plain from this letter that the security was to be given out of the stock in question; and it is also manifest that Mr. Beauchamp intended that a mortgage security should be taken. Now it is scarcely likely that, during the short interval, the contents of this letter could have been communicated to Morgan. What passed on the 10th, in the interview between Morgan and Mrs. Whitton, it is impossible to say; probably it was of not a very satisfactory nature. Mr. C. Morgan says, that, to the best of his recollection, nothing was said about the bond; but he afterwards states that Mrs. Whitton was made acquainted with the nature of the bond. There is here a slight inconsistency; therefore the only evidence of what Morgan did state to Mrs. Whitton was in his letter to her of the 7th, saying that he would save her harmless; and Mrs. Whitton, in her answer, says that she never consulted with Mr. Gregson, her solicitor, upon the subject. On the next day, being Sunday, a further conversation took place between Morgan and Mrs. Whitton, when Mr. C. Morgan was called in, as he says, to explain the intended transaction. Now very little explanation of a satisfactory nature could have been given; nor does it appear that she was told, as she ought to have been, that the instrument as it stood was not good as a bond. She denies that C. Morgan told her, that if the bond was not paid by the father she would have to pay it: thus we have the answer of one defendant contradicting the statement of a witness. The bond passed from Morgan to Squire, who filled up the blanks; part of the stock was also sold and advanced to Morgan, but it does not appear that it was paid by or with the personal intervention of Beauchamp. The stock was standing in the names of Squire and Morgan; and a sufficient quantity was sold and transferred to Morgan as so much cash; but when the bond was filled up, or when Mr. Beauchamp obtained possession of it, does not appear. Morgan paid the interest to Beauchamp from time to time, who died in 1841; and the plaintiffs as his executors, proved his will; and conceiving that his (Beauchamp's) estate, bound to the trustees, discharged the debt which they thought was due, by purchasing, in their names, a sum of stock equal to what had been sold out; they then filed their bill. Now it is very important, before filing a bill, as before going to war, that these gentlemen should have made themselves acquainted with the facts of the case. They have in their bill thought fit to state that the money was advanced by the trustees to Beauchamp, and from Beauchamp to Morgan. Now it certainly occurred to me, that it was the duty of Squire and Morgan to follow the authority given them in respect of the security upon the advance of the money, and, in addition to the bond, to have taken a mortgage. The letter signed by Mr. and Mrs. Beauchamp, it is true, did authorize them to sell out; in this there was no breach of trust; the breach of trust consisted in not doing what Beauchamp required Squire to do, viz. to take real security, and see that the property was unencumbered. The question is, whether the executors, in applying the assets of Beauchamp in discharge of the debt to the trustees, have not endeavoured to shelter themselves against the breach of trust. There is no evidence of any debt from Mrs. Whitton to Beauchamp, for the trust-fund was to make the advance to Morgan, and that was to be secured by the mortgage Squire was to obtain. Now, as the claim is by means of equity, which equity was obtained by means of the blanks having been filled up by Squire, which shewed the agreement, such as it was; those who take the agreement must do so accompanied with all its equitable conditions under which it was made; and one of these conditions, to induce Mrs. Whitton to sign the bond, was, that Morgan would see her indemnified, and Mrs. Whitton, relying upon the representations made to her by Morgan, the executors must be considered as being fixed with sufficient notice in equity of the promise to give the security under the conditions of which the advance was made. These gentlemen cannot as executors claim a right to be indemnified, when they have not followed the instructions of Beauchamp. The question is, whether they ought, therefore, to make such a demand, and give the matter a turn which was never contemplated. Mrs. Whitton was not told, as she ought to have been, that the bond as it then stood was mere waste paper. She all along acted without her solicitor, and she was left quite in the dark as to the real nature of the transaction. The case has been one of mistake. The parties acted in ignorance of the law, in ignorance of their duty as trustees, and in ignorance of their duty as to informing an aged lady of all her liabilities and the position in which she was placed with respect to the transaction. The affair was conducted in a hurry, and thus these unfortunate proceedings have arisen.

Dismiss the bill, with costs, as against Mrs. Whitton; costs to be paid by Morgan.

ROLLS COURT.

Saturday, June 22.

WIMBOURNE AND CRAMBOURN UNION v. MASSON.

Demurrer for want of equity and for want of parties overruled, though the bill charged generally that there were parties other than the defendants interested in the subject-matter of the suit, and did not deny that their names were known to the plaintiffs.

The object of this suit was to enforce against the defendant Masson the specific performance of a contract of sale of a strip of ground contiguous to the union; and for a discovery. It appeared that, in pursuance of a resolution of the board of guardians of the union, a committee of members thereof, on the 2nd May, 1842, entered into a written agreement with Masson for the purchase of the land in question at the price of 1,000*l*.; the contract to be completed at Michaelmas then next, subject, however, to the approval and confirmation of the board of guardians and the Poor Law Commissioners. On the 12th May, 1842, the board met to confirm the agreement, and would have confirmed it but for the opposition of one of their number, Edward Castleman, the other defendant, who wished to obtain the subject of the purchase for himself. On the following day (13th) the board confirmed the contract, and several communications afterwards passed between them and the Poor-Law Commissioners. On the 12th of August, Castleman (who was the solicitor of Masson) wrote to the board to repudiate Masson's contract, and the present bill was filed in consequence. It charged that a purchase, which Castleman alleged he had made of the property, was, if any such existed, void, as being after the contract of the board, of which Castleman was cognizant; and that the said purchase had been rescinded, and that a pretended transfer of the property had been made to a purchaser under a power of sale contained in a mortgage thereof to Castleman; and that these parties should be before the Court, but there was no suggestion that the plaintiffs did not know who they were. It was to be collected also that Castleman's dealings with the property, whatever they might be, were previous to Michaelmas, and it was alleged that the Poor-Law Commissioners did not confirm the contract till after the time for its performance. Under these circumstances, Castleman demurred to the bill for want of equity and want of parties.

Kindersley and Wilcock, for the demurrer.

Turner and Lewin, contra.

The MASTER of the ROLLS stopped the argument as it regarded the validity or invalidity of the conditional contract, on the ground of the consent of the Poor-Law Commissioners not being given in time. His lordship observed, that it was charged generally that Castleman had fraudulently endeavoured to deprive the plaintiffs of the benefit of their contract by entering into one himself, and also by the contrivance of a mortgage, with a power of sale, which he had exercised. The bill does not state when the contract between Castleman and Masson had been made, but from other circumstances it must be concluded that it was in the middle of September; and therefore the frauds which the demurrer admits took place before Michaelmas. Whether the delay of the Poor-Law Commissioners defeats the agreement, cannot be considered; but enough is stated here to shew Castleman claims an interest. Proper caution, perhaps, has not been used to make all the allegations consistent; but it is not necessary to examine into that; enough is alleged to entitle the plaintiffs to a discovery. As to the defect of parties, it is admitted on the argument and on the bill that there is a purchaser; but the gist of the bill is, that there is secrecy, that the plaintiffs do not know, and wish to know, the facts of the case. The demurrer must be overruled.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. JOHNSON.

Charity estates—Non-improving leases.

A demise of charity property for a long term of years is of itself (unless on good ground shewn) a sufficient proof of improvidence in the management thereof, and the lease will be set aside. The present improved value or permanent benefit to the premises is the measure of remuneration for expenditure.

By a decree of this Court in the year 1609, in a cause of Arnold v. Barker, it was ordered that certain charity lands in the parish of St. Benedict, in the city of Norwich, should, according to the will of the donor, and in manner therein mentioned, be held by trustees in trust: that the profits should be disposed of for the relief of poor people in the said parish, and divers other charitable uses therein; and that the churchwardens of the parish should be appointed receivers of the rents. In the parish chest was found a regular series of conveyances to new trustees extending from 1676 to 1810, when Thomas Starling Day and others were appointed; but the decree itself cannot be found. In 1694, a demise of part of the lands was made by the then trustees to one George Bayfield, for a term of 2,000 years, at 4*l*. per annum; and in 1762 the residue thereof was demised to William Mack for 99 years, at 20*l*. per annum. The first lease was made by the trustees, with the consent of the major part of the parishioners, and, in consideration of the rent, and a covenant therein to build houses to the value of 200*l*. at least, which has been more than performed. The second lease being made on the 25th of June, 1762, was, in consideration of only 5*l*. assigned by Mack, on the 5th of August following, to Starling Day, sen. and Starling Day, jun. who were two of the trustees of the charity; and it was alleged, therefore, in argument, that Mack was only agent for the Days. Both of these leases ultimately became vested in Thomas Starling Day, the one absolutely, and the other for life, with remainders over to persons, some of whom were infants, and, upon his becoming bankrupt, were put up to sale, but have not been sold. T. S. Day expended upwards of 3,000*l*. upon the premises, and they now produce from 150*l*. to 170*l*. per annum. The bill prayed that the leases might be set aside, and that there should be a reference to the Master to appoint new trustees, &c. Cases cited: Attorney-General v. South Sea Company (4 Beav. 453); Shelford on Mortmain, 703.

Twiss and Blunt, for the Attorney-General.

Kindersley, Heathfield, Rolt, Williams, and Lewin, for other parties.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The leases must be set aside. As to the expenditure of Thomas Starling Day, the permanent benefit accruing to the charity from such expenditure must be considered. It is said the whole transaction is founded on fraud, and that there should be no compensation. This Court, however, does not fix a penalty on fraud, but he who will have equity must do it; and, therefore, the defendant Day must have an allowance for his expenditure to the extent of the permanent advantage derived. The measure of remuneration will be what is now the improved value of or benefit derived to the charity from the expenditure.

RIPPINGTON v. SPIERS.

An executor, who does not admit assets will be held to have done so by delivering up household goods to legatees, paying legacies, consenting to a transfer of a mortgage, &c.

This was a suit instituted by the plaintiff against the defendants, for the purpose of making Thomas Spiers, one of them, personally liable to him for a debt of Thomas Rippington, who died in 1810, having appointed John Rippington and Thomas Spiers executors, and which Thomas Spiers survived his co-executor, and died in 1831, leaving the said defendant, Thomas Spiers, his executor, who thereby became the executor of the original testator. The defendant had not admitted assets, but he had consented to the delivery over of household goods to legatees, had paid legacies to the amount of 390*l.* and had also consented to the transfer of a mortgage for securing 1,700*l.* to a specific legatee.

Teed and Shadwell, for the plaintiff.

Sheffield, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS was of opinion that the defendant must by his acts be held to have admitted assets; and ordered the sum due to be paid into court, and declared that the defendant was personally bound to pay it, and that the plaintiff should have his costs of the suit.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Wednesday, June 12.

YORK v. BROWN.

Practice—Costs—Solicitor—Trustee.

Where costs in a suit have been awarded to a defendant, a trustee, who is a solicitor, the practice of the Court is to direct them to be taxed as between solicitor and client.

In this suit, one of the defendants, a trustee, was a solicitor, and, upon the hearing of the cause, costs had been awarded to him. In drawing up the minutes of the decree, the registrar had stated these costs as to be taxed as between solicitor and client. A motion was now made to vary the minutes, on the ground of the defendant's being a solicitor, and therefore, as trustee, entitled only to the costs, charges, and expenses actually incurred by him.

Russell, for the plaintiff, cited Collins v. Carey (2 Bea. 128); Moore v. Froud (3 M. & Cr. 45); and New v. Jones (reported in Bythewood's Conveyancing, vol. 8, p. 330).

Simpkinson and Wood, for the defendant.

The VICE CHANCELLOR said, that it did not appear that the costs in Moore v. Froud were costs of litigation. He would say nothing directly or indirectly against the cases cited, but they did not appear to be applicable to costs of litigation. He was of opinion, that where there was a solicitor a trustee and defendant, and costs had been awarded to be paid to him, the course of the Court was to direct his costs to be taxed as between solicitor and client. How that language was to be construed by the taxing officer was another question.

CURRANT v. JAGO.

Investment in the name of an infant—Advancement—Trust.

The bill in this case was filed against the trustees of a savings bank in Cornwall, and other persons, who were the proprietors of the Cornish Bank, and sought a declaration that certain sums deposited in the name of Wm. Currant Jago were to be held in trust for the plaintiff, Julia Currant, who was the widow and executrix of William Currant. William Currant Jago was the child of the plaintiff's sister, and resided with the plaintiff and her husband. On the 17th of Dec. 1825 the plaintiff deposited in the Cornwall Bank 300*l.* and took from the bankers a promissory note for that amount, payable thirty days after sight to Willian Currant Jago, or order, with interest, at 3 per cent. This interest was from time to time received by the plaintiff. On the 23rd of June, 1831, the plaintiff took the promissory note to the bank, and exchanged it for a new note in similar terms to the former, but made in favour of William Currant and herself. On the 16th of April, 1835, William Currant being ill, and his wife being anxious to prevent any disagreement with his relations as to the property, was advised to put the money again into the name of W. C. Jago, which was accordingly done, but without the knowledge of W. Currant; and the note of the 23rd June, 1831 was given up, and another taken in the name of W. C. Jago. On the same day W. Currant made his will, bequeathing all his property to his wife, and appointing her executrix. On the 3rd of March, 1824, a sum of 50*l.* was deposited in the savings bank in the name of W. C. Jago. In 1825 a sum of 2*l.* was drawn out, and in Dec. 1825 another sum of 30*l.* was paid in. At the death of W. Currant the sum of 112*l.* 8s. 6½d. was standing in the name of W. C. Jago. In March 1836 W. C. Jago died an infant, and in March 1843 his father took out letters of administration of his effects, and claimed these two sums. On the 17th of April, 1843, the present bill was filed, and it was contended by the plaintiff that though it was the intention of both herself and her husband that W. C. Jago should, if he survived them, have these sums, yet that it was not an absolute gift to him.

Russell and Welford, for the plaintiff, cited Loyd v. Read (1 P. Wms. 606); Morless v. Franklin (1 Swanston, 13); and Ebrand v. Dancer (2 Ch. C. 26).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (without hearing the other side).—Mr. and Mrs. Currant, being married and childless, appear to have taken an interest in the son of her sister. Although both his parents were alive, it is admitted that he was educated and maintained by Mr. and Mrs. Currant, and that they intended to provide for his advancement in life. In this state of things, Mrs. Currant, who appears to have been the acting party, makes from time to time payments into the savings bank in the name of the infant. The interest she herself received, and one of the witnesses states that, upon applying at the bank for the interest, she said that she wanted it for the use of the boy. Considering, then, that statement—considering what a savings bank is, the mode of investment, and the admitted facts of the case as to the connection between Mr. and Mrs. Currant and the boy, there can be no doubt that the money was intended to be for the boy, and was legally vested in the boy, giving him a legal interest; and that if there ought to be a presumption in favour of the parties whose money it originally was, there is little or no doubt that there is a case of trust of this savings bank money. As to the other sum, Mrs. Currant being possessed of negotiable securities to the amount of 300*l.* delivers them up, and takes in exchange for them a note in the name of the boy. Some time afterwards, for what reason does not appear, the note is taken, with the name of the boy and of the husband indorsed, and is exchanged for a note in the names of Mr. and Mrs. Currant. Some time after this, the note is carried back to have another exchange, in consequence of the husband's illness. The note then taken in the name of the infant does not, however, restore the legal right, as I think that was never displaced. The receipt of the interest by Mrs. Currant is nothing, considering that she had acted as the boy's mother. The intention to benefit the infant is clear. It is probable that the circumstances which afterwards occurred never presented themselves to the parties.—Looking, then, at what was done at the savings bank, and looking, also, at the transactions with regard to the promissory notes, I think that the presumption is against the existence of a trust for the original owners of the money, and I must therefore hold that these sums were intended as an advancement for the infant.

Re PATER.

Attorneys' bill of costs—Reference to taxation, upon the application of the party chargeable, after the expiration of a month from the delivery thereof, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, ss. 37-43.

Wordsworth shewed cause against a rule calling upon Messrs. Becke and Flower, attorneys of this court, to pay certain sums of money, pursuant to a judge's order, and the Master's allocatur thereon.

It appeared that Mr. Pater, who is also an attorney of this court, had transacted certain business for Messrs. Becke and Flower, for which he had sent in his bill of costs.

On the 23rd March, 1844, Messrs. Becke and Flower obtained a judge's order in the following terms:—"Upon hearing Mr. John Pater, and Messrs. Becke and Flower, I do order that Mr. John Pater's bill of fees, charges, and disbursements delivered to Messrs. Becke and Flower be referred to the Master to be taxed, and that the said Mr. Pater give credit for all sums of money by him received from or on account of the said Messrs. Becke and Flower, and that the said Mr. Pater do refund what, if any thing, may, on such taxation, appear to have been overpaid. And I further order that the Master do tax the costs of such reference, and certify what shall be found due to or from either party in respect of such bill and demand, and of the costs of such reference, to be paid according to the event of such taxation, pursuant to the statute. And that the said Mr. Pater be restrained from commencing or prosecuting any action or suit touching such demand, pending such reference. And I do further order that upon payment by the said Messrs. Becke and Flower of what, if any thing, may appear to be due to the said Mr. Pater, the said Mr. Pater do deliver to the said Messrs. Becke and Flower all deeds, books, papers, and writings in his possession, custody, or power belonging to them." On the 30th April, 1844, this order was made a rule of court, which also provided "that it be referred to one of the masters to tax the costs of making the said order a rule of Court, which costs, when taxed, shall be paid by the said Messrs. Becke and Flower to the said John Pater." Upon taxation, the following appeared to be the state of accounts between the parties, viz. on the judge's order of the 23rd March:—

Amount of bill of costs . .	9	11	0
Taxed off	3	1	6
Deduct cost of taxation . .	1	6	0
Balance to Mr. Pater . .	5	3	6

James Bunce,

2nd, On the rule of Court of the 30th April, 1844:
Allowed for costs of rule . . £2 12 0.

R. Goodrich,
May 4, 1844.

On the 7th May, 1844, Mr. Pater obtained a rule calling on Messrs. Becke and Flower to shew cause before a judge at chambers, "why they should not pay to Mr. Pater the two several sums of 5*l.* 3s. 6d. and 2*l.* 12s. pursuant to the rule of the 30th of April, and the allocatur of James Bunce, esq. and Richard Goodrich, esq. made thereon." On the same day Messrs. Becke and Flower obtained a cross-rule, calling on Mr. Pater to shew cause before a judge at chambers, why the rule of the 30th of April, 1844, "or so much of the said rule as directs the taxation and payment of costs, and the allocatur of Richard Goodrich, esq. made thereon, should not be discharged for irregularity, with costs:" that rule, and the rule obtained on the same day by Mr. Pater, to come on for argument together. Messrs. Becke and Flower's rule was obtained upon a joint affidavit of Mr. Flower and his clerk, which stated that as to 4*l.* part of the said sum of 5*l.* 3s. 6d. Mr. Flower, upon the taxation, had objected to its being allowed, upon the ground of the want of retainer or liability to pay the same, but that the Master had decided that he could not enter into the question of retainer; it then set forth a tender to Mr. Pater, on the 15th of April, of the sum of 1*l.* 1s. as and for the amount due from the said Messrs. Becke and Flower to the said J. Pater, and Mr. Pater's refusal to accept it, and a protest by Mr. Flower's clerk against the taxation of the 4th of May, on the ground of irregularity.

It was submitted that, inasmuch as the 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, was entirely repealed by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, upon referring an attorney's bill to be taxed, there is now neither submission nor undertaking to pay, therefore, unless the learned judge's order was a direction to pay, there was no order to pay any thing, and there could have been no default; consequently, the learned judge's order ought not have been made a rule of Court, and it would follow there could be no right to costs in respect of so making it a rule of Court. The retainer having been disputed, it was submitted that the Master's certificate had no effect beyond that of ascertaining the exact amount due for costs, leaving the party to bring his action for the amount; because the Master could not direct what amount should be paid, but only the judge; and, in the present instance, there was no such direction, but only a direction that the costs of the reference be paid according to the event of such taxation, pursuant to the statute: citing 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, ss. 38, 43.

Bramwell, contrà, contended that the learned judge's order did contain a direction to pay, for the order was made, upon Messrs. Becke and Flower's application, after the expiration of the month within which they could insist upon it as a matter of right; it was therefore made with such directions, and subject to such conditions, as the learned judge, under the 37th section, thought fit to impose; and one of those conditions was, that they should pay what should be found due from them in respect of such bill and demand, and of the costs of such reference, for the words "to be paid" apply not only to the costs of the reference, but also to the sum found due in respect of the bill and demand; that the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, had not repealed the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; in order to give effect to which statute, the practice had been introduced, that where an award, or any thing in the nature of one, had been brought before the Court, and appeared in the form of a final adjudication, the Court would presume an order for payment, and thus the Court would make the same presumption in the present case.

By the COURT.—The 43rd section directs that payment should be enforced according to the course of the Court, but does not render an express direction necessary. The words of the section are, "to make such order thereon as to such Court or judge shall seem proper." "Thereon!" On what? On the certificate. There is enough to bring it through.

Rule absolute without costs; cross-rule discharged without costs.

REG. v. GUARDIANS OF POOR OF SNARDLOW UNION.

The Court will not take notice that the guardians of a union have power to make an order for the payment of money upon a particular parish, pursuant to the orders of the Poor Law Commissioners, unless those orders are brought before them upon affidavit.

W. J. Alexander shewed cause against a rule calling on the defendants to shew cause why a certiorari should not issue to bring up a certain order for the purpose of being quashed.

It appeared that an order of affiliation had been made by the defendants upon a certain party, who was chargeable to the parish of Stanley, in the said union, in respect of a bastard child; that he had resisted it; and that certain proceedings had been taken upon that order, in which he had been successful; and that he recovered against the defendants the sum of 58*l.* 1s. 4d. for the costs of those proceedings; and that an order, signed by the defendants, had been made "for payment of the sum of 85*l.* from the poor-rate of the parish of Stanley, for relief of the poor thereof, and towards the contribution of the parish to the common fund of the union."

It was submitted that the order was good, inasmuch as it was in the attempt to reimburse the parish for the costs of the child that these costs had been incurred, and inasmuch as the guardians had authority, under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, to charge a party with being the putative father of a bastard child; they also had power to make an order upon the particular parish on whose behalf the charge had been made, to reimburse them the costs incurred in an unsuccessful attempt, and that that was according to the orders of the Poor-Law Commissioners.

Whitehurst objected that the orders of the Poor-Law Commissioners could not be cited, as they were not mentioned in the affidavits, and therefore not before the Court.

By the COURT.—That was decided by Reg. v. Fordham (11 A. & E. 73).

Alexander.—The guardians, then, are put in the room of the parish; the parish would have had to pay the costs in this case if they had prosecuted, and therefore they ought to do so now, notwithstanding the guardians of the poor of the union are enabled to do as well; and the more so, as there are no funds applicable by the guardians for such purposes.

Whitehurst, contrà, admitted that the order was good for the difference between the sum of 85*l.* and 54*l.* 1s. 4d. and that had been paid; but contended that the guardians had no power whatever to make the order as to the remainder, which was not for the relief of the poor, but to reimburse themselves against the costs of their improperly proceeding against a party whom it was shewn by the result ought not to have been charged at all.

By the COURT.—It is unfortunate there is no general provision enabling us to take notice of the orders of the Poor Law Commissioners; but as there is none, we do not see how we can judicially take notice that the board of guardians have any power whatever to make an order for the payment of a sum of money, unless we have those orders before us upon affidavit.

Rule absolute.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF MERIONETHSHIRE.

Although the non-repair of a county bridge is not within the meaning of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, s. 98, and a judge cannot grant a certificate for costs under that section, he still may do so under 43 Geo. 3, c. 56, which incorporates 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, and that notwithstanding the latter Act is expressly repealed by 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50.

Welsby shewed cause against a rule to set aside a certificate of Gurney, B. for costs in this indictment, and the side-bar rule obtained thereon. This was an indictment against the inhabitants of Merionethshire for the non-repair of a county bridge, upon the trial of which a verdict had been found for the Crown. Subsequently to the trial, Gurney, B. before whom it took place, granted a certificate for the prosecutor's costs under 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, s. 98 (the General Highway Act), on the ground that the defence was frivolous and vexatious. A side-bar rule was afterwards obtained, requiring the defendants to attend the taxation of costs. And the present rule was obtained upon the ground that, under the above clause, a judge at chambers has no power to interfere; and, moreover, that the Act does not apply to county bridges, inasmuch as such bridges are expressly exempted from the operation of the Act by the interpretation given in the 5th section.

It was submitted that it was not shewn that the indictment had not been removed by the defendants by certiorari, in which case the side-bar rule would be perfectly correct, without any certificate from the judge.

With respect to the certificate, it was admitted that the case did not fall within the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 50, and therefore the certificate could not be supported under the 98th section; but it was submitted that, inasmuch as, by 13 Geo. 2, c. 78, s. 28, there was a provision directly applicable to county bridges, and enabling the judge to grant such certificate as the above, and although that Act was expressly repealed by the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, yet inasmuch as it was enacted by the 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, that the several penalties, forfeitures, matters, and things in the said Act (13 Geo. 2, c. 78) contained, relating to highways, shall be and the same are hereby extended and applied, as far as the same are applicable to such county bridges, and the roads at the ends thereof as aforesaid, as fully and effectually as if the same and every part thereof were herein repeated and re-enacted, and that Act must be considered as incorporated in and re-enacted by 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, and therefore the certificate could be granted under such last-mentioned Act: citing Reg. v. Pembridge (3 G. & D. 5).

Godson and Hodges, contrà, contended that although the certificate might have been granted under 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, previous to the passing of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, yet, that since that statute expressly repealed 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, it could no longer be considered incorporated in 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, but must only be considered to have been incorporated in that statute so long and no longer than it remained as a substantive enactment upon the statute book: citing 1 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 30.

By the COURT.—The 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, s. 98, does not apply to this case, because that Act only applies to highways, and county bridges are not highways in that sense of the word, because the interpretation clause expressly says so. But then comes the 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, which has a section giving power in the case of highways to grant such certificate; and then we have the 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, which says that "the several penalties and forfeitures, matters and things in the said Act contained, relating to highways, shall be the same, and are hereby intended and applied, as far as the same are applicable, to such bridges, and the roads at the ends thereof, as aforesaid, as fully and effectually as if the same and every part thereof were repeated and re enacted." Therefore we must read the Act of Parliament in the same way as if the whole of the 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, had been re-enacted in the 43 Geo. 3, c. 59. But it is said that the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, repeals the 13 Geo. 3, and that you must only apply that Act so long as it remains in the Statute Book; but we think we ought to read the Act of Parliament just as if it really did contain the very words of the 13 Geo. 3; and therefore, inasmuch as 43 Geo. 3 is not repealed by 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, we think the certificate may be granted under it. We, however, arrive at this conclusion with considerable difficulty; but, upon the whole, it appears to us the more reasonable conclusion.

Rule discharged without costs.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Friday, June 7.

WHITMORE and OTHERS, Assignees, v. GREEN and COTTAM.

Trover by assignees of a bankrupt.—An execution against the goods of the bankrupt after the act of bankruptcy, but before the fiat, and where notice of the act of bankruptcy has been given between the seizure and sale, is protected by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29.

Watson, Q.C. and Bovill, shewed cause against two several rules obtained by the two defendants to enter a verdict for them or a nonsuit. It was an action of trover brought by the plaintiffs as assignees of one Lawton, a bankrupt, against the defendant Green, who was sheriff of Cambridge, and Cottam, who was the judgment creditor of the bankrupt, and who had sued out the fi. fa. against Lawton, under which the sheriff had entered and seized the goods in question. The fi. fa. was issued on the 26th May, 1843, upon a judgment on a warrant of attorney not in a hostile action. The act of bankruptcy was on the same day, but before the seizure, which did not take place for several days afterwards. Notice of the act of bankruptcy was given to the execution creditor before the sale, which was before the fiat. On the part of the defendants it was submitted that the execution having been perfected by sale before the fiat, was protected by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29; citing Godson v. Sanctuary (4 B. & Ad.); Whitmore v. Robertson (8 M. & W.); Ramsay v. Eaton (10 M. & W.); Skey v. Carter (11 M. & W.); Wymer v. Smith (6 B. & C.); Wilson v. Tammond (12 L. J. C. P. 357); Rush v. Baker (2 Stra. 995); Ledham v. Edmondson (1 B. & B. 371); Bulme v. Hutton (2 C. & J. 21); 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, ss. 81, 108.

Peacock, for the execution creditor, also contended that against him trover was not the right form of action. On this point he was stopped by the Court.

Byles, Serjt. and Cleasby, contrà, citing Ex parte Botcherley (2 Gl. & J. 367); 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 81.

The Court, after taking time to consider, now delivered judgment.

By the COURT.—The rule ought to be made absolute as to Cottam the creditor. He is clearly not liable in trover, at all events. He did not interfere in the proceedings, but merely received the money from the sheriff. If he were liable in this action, it would be charging him with sheriff's poundage, or any other deductions which the sheriff may have made. If he is liable at all, it must be in another shape. The case of the sheriff is different. After the case of Chesten

v. Gibbs (19 L. J. Exch. 13). It cannot be disputed that where he has rendered himself liable at all, trover is the proper form of action. He would, therefore, be liable, unless protected by some statute. The question then is whether, the sale having in this case been completed before the fiat, the notice of the act of bankruptcy given after the seizure distinguishes it from similar cases, which have been held to come within the statute 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29. That statute was passed to protect creditors in certain cases who should complete their executions before the fiat actually issued. To exclude this from that class of cases would be to substitute other words for those in the statute. Considering the grounds upon which courts of law acted in Skey v. Carter, we think the argument of the plaintiffs cannot be supported. Rules absolute.

LISTER v. CUNDIIL.

Demurrer—Insolvent Act—Contract made by the insolvent between petition and final discharge.

Hoggins, for plaintiff.

Watson, Q. C. for defendant.

Declaration in debt—Money paid and an account stated.

Plea—That before the accruing, &c. the plaintiff, being a prisoner in York Castle, under a ca. sa. filed his petition under the Insolvent Act, and that by the vesting order, made and bearing date before the accruing, &c. it was ordered that all the estate, &c. and all the future estate, right, title, interest and trust of the plaintiff to any estate whatsoever, and all debts due, or growing due to the plaintiff before his discharge, should vest in Samuel Sturgis, the provisional assignee; that due notice was given, and that after making the order, and before the final discharge the said debts, &c. became due, and the said vesting order did thereby vest all such estate as aforesaid and amongst other things the said debts, in the said S. Sturgis. And that afterwards, and after the accruing, &c. the plaintiff was brought, at York Castle aforesaid, before the Commissioner, and upon his examination, it was ordered that he should be discharged from custody, and entitled to the benefit of the said Act, &c. and that the said order and discharge remain in full force, and the said debts and causes of action still remain and are vested in the said S. Sturgis.—Verification.

Special demurrer.—Assigning for cause that it is consistent with all the allegations in the plea, that the said debt, &c. did not vest in S. Sturgis, and that it ought to have stated facts shewing that they did vest, and not merely asserted as conclusions of law that they did so vest, and that the allegations in the plea as to the effect of the vesting order are mere allegations of matter of law, and cannot be traversed, &c. Joinder in demurrer.

For the plaintiff, it was contended that the plea ought to have shewn that Sturgis had in some way interfered and claimed the debts, and that it might be that the debts accrued to the plaintiff en autre droit, when they would not have vested, and that the plea did not shew with sufficient certainty that they ever did vest, and that it did not sufficiently confess the causes of action.

For the defendant, it was contended that the setting out the vesting order was a sufficient statement of the matters of fact by which the debts became vested, &c.; citing Young v. Rushworth (8 A. & E.), and Herbert v. Sayer (not yet reported).

By the COURT.—Herbert v. Sayer has been reversed by the Exchequer Chamber, and Young v. Rishworth has been overrruled. Mr. Watson had better amend.

Judgment for plaintiff, unless defendant amend on the usual terms.

Ecclesiastical Courts.

ARCHES COURT.

Friday, May 31.

The office of the Judge promoted by BURDER v. HODGSON.

In a proceeding against a clergyman, the object of which is to suspend him from, or deprive him of, all ecclesiastical preferment, and not merely to punish him pro salute animæ et reformatione morum, the Ecclesiastical Court has jurisdiction over an offence indictable at common law, though no conviction in a court of common law is pleaded.

This is a proceeding under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86 (the Church Discipline Act), brought by letters of request from the Bishop of Salisbury.

On the 9th of December, 1843, a decree issued from this court, directed to the Rev. Mr. Hodgson, formerly chaplain of Salisbury gaol, and still rector of a parish in the said city, citing him to appear and answer to certain articles, &c. touching and concerning his deprivation or suspension from all his ecclesiastical preferments, by reason of his immoralities, incontinence, unnatural practices, habits, and propensities, causing great scandal to the Church. The party cited appeared and prayed articles. These articles were brought, and their admission was opposed. [illegible]

See Law T. R. vol. ii. p. 355.

The arguments on either side will sufficiently appear from the judgment, which was now (May 31) pronounced.

Sir H. JENNER FUST.—This is a cause of office, under the Act of her present Majesty, generally known as the Church Discipline Act, and it is brought into this court by letters of request from the court of the Bishop of Salisbury. By the decree which was issued in pursuance of these letters the rev. defendant is called on to answer certain articles. The purport of the proceeding it is unnecessary to state; the object sought is not pro salute animæ or reformatione morum, but a sentence of suspension or deprivation of his clerical functions against this gentleman. The articles were given in and stood for admission, when the party cited undertook to shew cause why he should not be suspended or deprived from the exercise of those ecclesiastical functions. These articles, in the first place, set forth that by the general laws ecclesiastical, all clerks and ministers in holy orders are enjoined to abstain from all immorality, obscenity, and indecency whatever. The second pleads that the party cited was and is a priest or minister in holy orders. The concluding articles set forth the charges brought against him, and detail the particular facts and circumstances, which are, when proved, to subject the party to deprivation or suspension. These articles are objected to, and the principal ground of objection is, that they contain charges for which the party is liable to be proceeded against at common law, and if proved guilty to be convicted and punished in the temporal or criminal courts of this country, and therefore, it is argued, the party is not liable to be proceeded against for such offences in a court exclusively ecclesiastical. In support of this objection the Court has been referred to several cases in which it has been held that this Court is not at liberty to proceed to the punishment of offenders for offences for which they are liable to be proceeded against and convicted in criminal courts, several of these being cases against persons holding ecclesiastical offices. As a general proposition, this doctrine is and must be admitted, but here the question is, whether, for the purpose for which this suit is brought, this Court has not jurisdiction over a clergyman. As against laymen, whatever may be the nature of the charge, undoubtedly the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a criminal suit, but it is not so clear that, for the purpose of suspension from clerical offices, the Court cannot proceed against clergymen. The distinction arises from the different object of the proceeding against laymen and against clergymen, and admitting the general rule that the Ecclesiastical Court cannot proceed against either a layman or a clerk in orders for the purpose of punishment, the question is, whether, as against the latter person, it may not proceed to try the charge for the purpose of suspension or deprivation from clerical duties and preferments. Now, as I have before said, several cases have been adverted to in support of the objection, and amongst others, that which is usually denominated Searle's case, which is found in a note appended to the judgment in the case of Nash v. Nash (1 Cons. R. 140). Nash v. Nash was a proceeding by a husband against his wife, in a cause of divorce by reason of adultery. The libel charged the woman with an adulterous intercourse, it pleaded a marriage with the adulterer, and exhibited a copy of the entry of the marriage. It was objected that this marriage, being bigamy, was a felonious act, and could not be pleaded in an ecclesiastical court. Lord Stowell said, "Certainly this Court cannot inquire into a felony directly, even where a clergyman is sued for the purpose of deprivation." Now any opinion of Lord Stowell is entitled to the greatest deference, but the present question was not the case before him. The question there was not whether a suit for deprivation could be maintained against a clergyman; it occurred simply as an argument against the admission of a plea setting forth the second marriage, which was a felonious act. Searle's case, given in the note, occurred in the 12th year of the reign of James I. "Searle had been tried at common law, and found guilty of manslaughter; whereupon he was questioned to deprivation before Dr. Bird, judge of the Court of Audience, when he desired to be admitted to his defence, that he was not guilty, contrary to the verdict." This is from Hobart (p. 121), who says: "Dr. Bird came to me for direction, and we agreed that felony or other capital crimes were not examinable in the ecclesiastical courts—no, not for purposes that were examinable there, as in this case of deprivation; and therefore they may not originally examine such a crime to prove a man criminous, much less, when he is so proved in the proper court, impeach the sentence." Clearly they cannot; but this does not appear to me to have been a decision upon the present point. Dr. Bird and C. J. Hobart seem to have consulted together, and they came to the conclusion that the Ecclesiastical Court could not examine into a capital crime, even for the purpose of deprivation; but that, if the party had been convicted in the proper court, they might build a sentence of deprivation upon the conviction; therefore they thought that Searle could not be allowed to give evidence to shew that the verdict had been improperly obtained. Bromley v. Bromley was also cited. That was a proceeding for divorce by reason of improper practices in the husband. In that case there had been a verdict at law, and the conviction was pleaded and admitted. So also in Mogg v. Mogg there had been a conviction, and it was pleaded. I have certainly understood it to be a settled point, that no proceedings in this court can be taken for the purpose of punishing a party for an offence such as that imputed to the party cited, or such as felony or one triable at common law. A distinction, and an important distinction, was taken in the case of Free v. Burgoyne, although, perhaps, that case is not quite similar to the present—namely, whether proceedings against a clergyman by his bishop or ordinary, for the purpose of suspending or deposing him from his ecclesiastical offices, may not stand on a different footing from a proceeding for the purpose of punishing him; and, whether for the purpose of suspension or deprivation, this Court is not at liberty to entertain a suit of this description. If there has been a conviction at common law, that may be pleaded, and then the Court need not, nay could not, enter into any inquiry, but would proceed upon the conviction; but where there have been no proceedings at law, and none said to be in progress, the question is, is not the case within the principle of Burgoyne v. Free, and is not the bishop at liberty to proceed for the purpose of suspension or deprivation? That was a proceeding against a beneficed clergyman, and no doubt the Ecclesiastical Court had cognizance of the particular crime charged against the party. The only question was, whether the statute 27 Geo. 3, c. 44, did apply to a proceeding by the bishop against a clergyman of his diocese, the statute having introduced a limitation of the time within which such a suit might be brought. The title of the Act is, "An Act to prevent frivolous and vexatious Suits in the Ecclesiastical Courts," and it enacts "that no suit shall be commenced in any Ecclesiastical Court for incontinence after the expiration of eight calendar months from the time when such offence shall have been committed, nor shall any prosecution be commenced or carried on for fornication at any time after the parties offending shall have lawfully intermarried." Lord Chief Justice Tenterden (then Lord Chief Justice Abbott) thus puts the case (5 B. & C. 404):—"It has been contended before us that this statute extends to the clergy as well as to the laity, and we think it does, as far as they and laymen are on the same footing, that is, where the object of the suit is reformation of manners or the soul's health, but that it was not intended to limit the time for proceeding against a clerk, as such, for deprivation." Here, then, is a clear distinction between a suit for punishment and a suit for deprivation. "Such a suit is not frivolous or vexatious, it is not within the mischief or object of the statute. Reformation of manners is not the object or, at any rate, not the only object of this suit. The articles shew that one at least of the objects of the suit was to procure the deprivation or suspension of the plaintiff—a species of jurisdiction which the Ecclesiastical Court has no opportunity of exercising over laymen. Now, in other temporal matters, such as forgery of orders, there cannot be any proceeding against a layman as such, but if he has obtained a benefice, he may be sued in the Ecclesiastical Court, in order to his deprivation, according to Slader v. Smallbrooke (1 Lev. 138, 1 Sid. 217). We think, therefore, that as to the charge of incontinence, the Ecclesiastical Court may proceed for the purpose of deprivation; and our judgment will be, that the prohibition stand, as to proceeding upon the charge of fornication, with a view to reformation, or the soul's health, but that there must be a consultation as to proceeding upon that charge for deprivation or any other punishment. This course was adopted in the case of Townsend v. Thorpe (2 Lord Raym. 1507), which was a proceeding against a parish clerk, who was charged with several offences punishable in the temporal and not the spiritual courts; yet it was held that there might be proceedings against him in the spiritual court in order to deprive him of his office, and as to that, a consultation was granted. Objection has since been made to that case, upon the ground that the Ecclesiastical Court had no authority to suspend or deprive a parish clerk. Perhaps that objection is well founded, but the rest of the case has never been questioned, and is an authority for our present decision." Therefore the Court of King's Bench held that whether the Spiritual Court had or had not power to deprive the parish clerk, still it was a decision governing the case before them. The case of Free v. Burgoyne was afterwards appealed to the House of Lords, and the present Lord Chancellor, holding then the same high office, gave the decision in the case, affirming the judgment of the Court of King's Bench. The case is set forth at length in 1 Dow. & Clark, p. 115, and 2 Bligh, N. S. p. 65. Lord Lyndhurst gave judgment to the following effect:—"This was originally a suit in the Spiritual Court, against the Rev. Dr. Free, upon various charges of fornication and other offences. In looking at the articles, I think it was perfectly competent to the Spiritual Court to proceed in the ordinary way, both pro salute animæ and for deprivation. In the Spiritual Court, it was contended for Dr. Free that the stat. 27 Geo. 3 was a bar to the proceeding, but the objection was overruled; and then he applied to the Court of King's Bench for a writ of prohibition, and was ordered by that Court to declare in prohibition. The Court of King's Bench was of opinion that the proceeding, so far as it was pro salute animæ and reformation of manners, was barred by the Act, even in the case of a clergyman, after the expiration of the eight months. But a much more important question arose, and that was whether the statute applied to a proceeding in the Spiritual Court for the purpose of deprivation; and, looking at the title, the preamble, and the provisions and enactments of the statute, I concur with the judgment of the Court of King's Bench, that the limitation of eight months does not apply to the proceeding in the Ecclesiastical Court for the purpose of deprivation." In this case, therefore, Abbott, C. J. and Lyndhurst, L. C. both thought that the ecclesiastical tribunals could not inquire into the case for the purpose of punishing the party, but might do so with a view to his deprivation. Lord Lyndhurst proceeds, after stating the effect of the judgment of the Court of King's Bench:—"I think the Court was warranted in this judgment, both on principle and on authority. The case of Slader v. Smallbrooke was one in which proceedings were instituted against a clergyman who had forged his orders; and on application for a prohibition, the Court of King's Bench held that the Spiritual Court had no power to proceed against the accused with any view to a judgment against him for the crime of forgery, but that the Spiritual Court might inquire into the charge of forgery with a view to deprivation. So, although the Ecclesiastical Court cannot punish for forgery, it may inquire into the question of forgery with a view to deprivation only. That case applies directly to the present. The Spiritual Court cannot proceed against Dr. Free pro salute animæ et reformationе morum, yet it may inquire into the question of incontinence, with a view to a sentence of deprivation." Then the Lord Chancellor refers to the case of Townsend v. Thorpe, and thus concludes:—"Both cases are similar in principle to the present. The Spiritual Court may proceed for deprivation only, and for that purpose it may proceed in the manner, and with the forms and ceremony necessary to a sentence of deprivation. I think, therefore, that the judgment ought to be affirmed." This case of Free v. Burgoyne, both in the King's Bench and the House of Lords, proceeded on this ground, that the Spiritual Court has no cognizance of a crime punishable in the temporal courts, except for the purpose of deprivation from ecclesiastical offices. I confess, it appears to me to go a great length in support of the proceedings in the present case, which are instituted against this gentleman, not to punish him for a temporal offence, but to prevent him from retaining possession of the ecclesiastical preferments which he now holds. I was referred, in the course of the argument, to the case of the Bishop of Clogher. I have not a copy of the proceedings in that case, nor have I been able to obtain them. The Bishop, certainly, was outlawed; but still it was held that, as bishop, he was liable to be proceeded against and deprived of his see for the offence imputed to him. The outlawry might have been equivalent to a conviction, and so far this would be a different case. Reference was also made to another case; it was not described by any title, but as a case before the Judicial Committee, on appeal from the island of Jersey. (The Dean of Jersey v. The Rector of the parish of ——, since reported 3 Moore, P. C. C. 229.) A writ, in the nature of a writ of prohibition, issued from the Royal Court in that island to the Ecclesiastical Court, whereby it annulled certain proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court, and ordered that all the Acts which referred thereto should be erased from the records of that court. From this last sentence there was an appeal to her Majesty in Council; and I may here say that the Royal Court in Jersey corresponds, to some extent, with the Court of Queen's Bench in this country. The Judicial Committee came to the conclusion that the writ had issued wrongfully, and they reversed it. In the result, it was held that the Ecclesiastical Court in Jersey was at liberty to institute that particular proceeding. When that case was before the Judicial Committee I sat as one of the judges, and I delivered the judgment of their lordships. The case turned upon the canons by which the Ecclesiastical Court in Jersey is governed, and on one canon in particular, the 17th. That canon provides, "that every one of the ministers shall be careful to observe that decency and gravity of apparel which becomes his profession, and may preserve due respect of his person; and they shall be very circumspect in the whole course of their lives, to keep themselves from such company, actions, and haunts as may bring any blame or blemish upon them. Nor shall they dishonour their calling by games, taverns, usuries, trades or occupations not befitting their functions, but shall study to excel all others in purity of life, gravity, and virtue." The 22nd canon is directed against particular offences, and amongst them, fornication; and it applies equally to the clergy and the laity. It was held by the Court Royal that, under this general canon, the Ecclesiastical Court had no power to try offences triable in the temporal courts; but the Judicial Committee was of opinion that, under the 17th, and also under the 46th canon, the Ecclesiastical Court had power to proceed against members of the church, and clerks in holy orders for the purpose of restraining them in such habits of life. The result of the judgment of the Privy Council was, to relax the prohibition, and to allow the Ecclesiastical Court in Jersey to proceed. That case is somewhat of a similar description to the present, for there it was alleged, that "Rumours of a most serious nature had for some time past been publicly circulated touching the conduct of ———, accusing him of leading a most scandalous life, and of having committed indecent as well as criminal acts, to the great scandal of religion, and especially of the Established Church, of which he is a minister." That case does seem to me to go the length of deciding that the Ecclesiastical Court has jurisdiction over clerks in holy orders, for the purpose of suspension or deprivation, although, to a certain extent, that may be punishment; but still, punishment is not the object of the proceeding; the object is to remove the party from the office in which he has so misconducted himself. I am, of course, now considering that the facts charged in these articles may be established in proof; and I do not mean to travel through these articles in detail. I do not understand them to charge an actual offence, but a series of acts obscene and indecent in themselves. This person was the chaplain of a gaol; in the course of that duty a person was committed to his care and superintendence; and the charge is that of the existence of vicious propensities, to be proved by overt acts. In the case from Jersey, it was argued that, as the offence was laid, evidence of actual guilt might be given; but that objection was disallowed, and, it was said, it was a proceeding to remove a scandal, and that the possibility of such evidence being given was no ground for issuing the prohibition. Surely no clergyman can be allowed to remain in possession of an ecclesiastical benefice whilst labouring under such an imputation as this. It may be mere report, but still it is a scandalous report arising out of conduct. I should like to know how parishioners can receive the communion, or receive consolation in their dying moments, from a person labouring under such imputations as these. If the Ecclesiastical Court has no jurisdiction to interfere in such a case, will not the effect be, that the parishioners, from actual disgust, will abstain from all communion with the party? I am therefore of opinion, both upon principle and authority, that there is no ground for concluding the jurisdiction of this Court—that this Court has jurisdiction to try the case, for the purpose of suspension or deprivation; and not only to entertain the suit, but to pronounce a sentence either of suspension or deprivation, as may seem proper, according to the magnitude of the offence, to be shewn by the evidence which will be produced against this gentleman. I am of opinion that these articles are admissible, and, with a single exception, I admit them to proof.

[The Court rejected the 17th article, which referred to an inquiry made privately by the visiting justices of the gaol in which the rev. defendant was chaplain, and stated that they had suspended him from his office. The conduct or opinion of these magistrates could not be evidence against the party cited, and accordingly the article pleading it must be rejected.]

JUNE SESSIONS.

REG. v. NORVAL and ANOTHER.

Larceny—Constructive possession of goods by master, to support larceny instead of embezzlement against servant.

The prisoners were indicted for feloniously stealing certain deer-horns, the property of one Kirkman.

It appeared in evidence, that the prisoner Norval was in the employ of Kirkman, who was a carman. The goods in question were lying in the docks, and the owner delivered to Kirkman the dock warrants in order that he might receive them and cart them up to town. Kirkman accordingly gave the warrants to the prisoner Norval, with the necessary instructions, and he (Norval) went with a cart to the docks, the deer-horns were put into it, and on the passage back to London several of them were abstracted; Norval colluding with the other prisoner for that purpose.

Ballantine, for the prisoner Norval, contended, that upon this state of facts the charge should have been one of embezzlement as against him, and not one of felony. The goods had never been in the master's possession. The prisoner obtained them lawfully in the first instance, so that there could be no tortious taking, which was an essential ingredient in the proof of felony.

Mr. Commissioner BULLOCK consented to reserve the point, and the prisoner was convicted.

The learned commissioner subsequently stated, that he had consulted Mr. Baron Gurney on the subject, who was of opinion that the conviction was proper. True it is, that the making away by a servant with goods that have never been in the possession of the Master, is embezzlement; but here there is a constructive possession, and that accrued at the moment when the goods were placed in the master's cart.

Note.—The indictment might probably have been sustained on another ground, namely, that the possession by the master, of the dock warrants, was a possession of the goods themselves for this purpose.—REPORTER.

REG. v. DALMAS.

Murder — Conversations between the deceased and others, immediately preceding her death, admissible in order to shew the condition she was in at the time of making a particular statement—A dying declaration cannot be received without direct, and not merely inferential proof, that the deceased was then aware of her danger—Conversations between deceased and another person previous to the murder, admissible on reasonable evidence being given that such person and the prisoner were identical.

The prisoner was indicted for the wilful murder of one —— M'Farlane, by cutting her throat with a razor; and a question arose as to whether a certain statement made by the deceased a short time previous to her death was admissible in evidence. The circumstances under which it was uttered were thus detailed by the witnesses. One of them exclaimed, on seeing her,—"My God! the woman will bleed to death before assistance comes!" She heard him say that. He observed, "She is dying." She heard that also. She was lying on her back, bleeding profusely. A policeman whispered something in her ear. She lived about five minutes afterwards. She appeared to him to be sensible. He thought so from her answers. This witness admitted, on cross-examination, that he might have said, "If you do not send for assistance, she will bleed to death." The policeman stated, that when the exclamations respecting her danger were used by the last witness and other bystanders, the woman looked in his (the policeman's) face, as though she wanted to say something. He stooped down, and put four questions to her, and she answered them. She talked distinctly, but low, as if she was faint. The last answer was fainter than the first.

Wilkins (with whom was Allen), for the prisoner, had objected, in the first instance, that this evidence was inadmissible, inasmuch as it consisted of conversations at which the prisoner was not present; but the objection was overruled by

GURNEY, B. who observed, that although it could not be received under ordinary circumstances, it was admissible here, for the purpose of shewing the condition the deceased was in at the time of making the declaration.

Wilkins and Allen then objected to the reception of the statement, on the ground that there was not sufficient proof of her being aware of her approaching dissolution. The words, If you do not send for assistance, &c. were calculated to excite in her mind a hope of recovery. It implied, that if assistance were sent for, she would live. The mere fact of her dying five minutes afterwards is insufficient. It might be that she thought she would survive, and was mistaken. There must be distinct and affirmative evidence, that she was aware of her danger, and if ever this can be dispensed with, it can only be where the circumstances that surround the case are such as to leave no doubt that the deceased really was so. Here there is no ground for such presumption. There would be no violent pain. The witnesses speak of faintness, but this almost precludes the existence of great pain, and it has been a matter of general observation and belief that a death caused by a gradual loss of blood is the easiest and least painful of all others. R. v. Spilsbury (7 C. & P. 190) was quoted.

[In addition to the arguments used by the counsel for the prisoner to induce the Court to reject the declaration of the deceased, it would have been urged, if necessary, that the questions put to her by the policeman were leading ones, and that her answers would have been inadmissible on that ground. It appeared by the depositions, that the policeman had put his questions in this form:—"Was Dalmas the man who did it?" To which she replied, "Yes." The learned judges, however, gave their decision upon the points above stated, and before this ground of objection was mentioned.]

Gurney, B. after a consultation with Williams, J. said:—We are of opinion that the question is too doubtful a one to justify us in deciding it in the affirmative. There must not only be actual nearness of death, but an absolute conviction of it in the mind of the individual. We believe that no case has gone the length of saying that the latter can be dispensed with. The decision of points of this kind must always rest upon the circumstances of each individual case, but here there is nothing but a mere inference that the deceased was probably aware she could not recover. We think it a safer course to reject the evidence.

Conversations between the deceased and a person with whom she was seen in company a short time before the murder, and which person was stated by several witnesses to have been, to the best of their belief, the prisoner, were sought to be given in evidence and were objected to on behalf of the prisoner. It was not yet clear that the individuals were identical, and unless they were so, these would be statements made by parties in the prisoner's absence, and consequently would be inadmissible.

Gurney, B.—There seems to be reasonable evidence that the person with whom the conversations were had and the prisoner, are the same. The witnesses speak to a correspondence in dress and in general appearance, and we think, therefore, there is sufficient proof of identity to warrant the admission of this testimony.

Reg. v. Williamson.

Manslaughter—Coroner's inquisition—Proof of a boat being unlicensed—Sufficiency of evidence of gross negligence and want of skill.

The prisoner was indicted upon the coroner's inquisition, which charged that he, within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, and within the limits of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 75 (private Act), feloniously, wilfully and unlawfully did allow a certain boat called a skiff, belonging to one John Williamson, then being a freeman of the Watermen's Company, to ply for hire at a certain public stairs and plying-place, that is to say at London-bridge-stairs, in the parish, &c. aforesaid, for the carrying of persons and passengers for hire, within the limits of the said Act, without a license having been granted, according, &c.; and that he, the said prisoner, being in and on board the said boat, without such license as aforesaid, at the public stairs aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and unlawfully did use and work the said boat without such license as aforesaid, and that he then and there feloniously, wilfully, and unlawfully did embark in and on board of the said boat then and there being, without such license as aforesaid, him, the said deceased, and divers, to wit, ten other persons, as passengers, for gain and hire, and the said prisoner and the said deceased, and the said ten other persons so being then and there in and on board the said boat, without such license as aforesaid, he, the said prisoner did then and there feloniously, wilfully, and unlawfully use, navigate, and work the said boat, without such license as aforesaid, in and on the waters of the said river Thames, the said boat being then and there overloaded, and unfit, from its frame, dimensions, and construction, for the conveyance of more than four persons as passengers therein, and that the said boat so being without such license as aforesaid, and the said deceased and the said several other persons then and there being therein as aforesaid, and the said prisoner then and there also being therein, and having the control, conduct, and management thereof, was, then and there, by the force and violence of the said waters, and through the negligence, recklessness, want of skill, and proper caution of him, the said prisoner, and by the overloading of the said boat as aforesaid, upset and turned over in the said waters of the said river Thames, by which said upsetting and turning over of the said boat, he, the said deceased, was then and there precipitated into and immersed, suffocated and drowned in the waters of the said river Thames, of which said suffocation and drowning the said deceased then and there died, &c.

To prove that the boat was not licensed, the beadle of the Watermen's Company was called. He stated that in regular course the boats licensed by the company bore a number upon them; that there was no number painted on the boat in question, and that he had examined the books of the company, and found that no license for the said boat had been granted. He had not the books with him in court.

Wilde (for the prisoner) objected that on this evidence, and the books not being produced, there was no proof that the boat was unlicensed; but

Gurney, B. held, that the fact of no number being painted on the boat furnished sufficient primâ facie evidence of the fact, and that it was for the prisoner to shew that a license was issued by the company, if such was the case.

The evidence adduced was to the effect that thirteen individuals, children and grown persons, embarked in the boat, besides two watermen, of whom the prisoner was one. Two of the witnesses deposed, that by the swell of a steamer in motion the boat was carried against the bows of another steamer lying alongside the landing-place; that as soon as it struck, the prisoner called out to the passengers to sit still; but instead of doing so, they all jumped up and tried to lay hold of the steamer, and in consequence the boat was overset. Had the passengers remained quiet, the witnesses believed the accident would not have happened.

Another witness gave it as his opinion that the fault lay in the prisoner's pushing off the boat from the stairs with one of the oars, he standing upright at the time, instead of being seated, and having the command of the sculls. He ought to have known the danger, under such circumstances, of crossing the strong tide that rushed through the arch of the bridge. But for his pushing off as he did, the boat would have cleared the steamer. He thought the same thing might have happened to the boat if there had been only three persons in it, or even one.

Ballantine and Wilde objected that on this evidence the prisoner could not be found guilty. If, as was stated, the mere pushing off the boat, he being then standing, was the cause of the accident, it was not so gross a want of skill as could be cognizable in a criminal court. Again the inquisition states that the death resulted from the overloading of the boat, but there is no evidence whatever of this being the immediate cause of its sinking. One witness asserts that it would have been in all probability driven against the steamer had only two or three persons been on board, and the others declare that if it had not been for the sudden rising of the passengers and their attempting to catch at the steamer, the casualty would not have taken place at all.

Williams, J.—The words of the inquisition are, that the prisoner, "through his negligence, recklessness, and want of skill and proper caution, and by the overloading of the said boat, &c. committed the injury." If any one of these causes is proved it will be sufficient. If the circumstance of the passengers jumping up really caused the accident, the overloading of the boat was immediately productive of such a result, and thus the prisoner is answerable, for he should have contemplated the danger of such a thing happening. If the fact of the defendant standing up in the boat was the cause of the catastrophe, then it may be gross negligence on his part to have done so, because he is supposed to be acquainted with the force and velocity of the tide, and the danger of crossing it under the circumstances. On the whole, it is a question for the jury whether the deceased met his death either by the gross carelessness of the prisoner in the management of the boat, or in taking on board, in the first instance, a greater number of passengers than it was safely capable of carrying.

The jury, after a short deliberation, acquitted the prisoner.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

Lord Brougham has succeeded in burking, for this session at least, the admirable Debtors and Creditors Bill of Lord Cottenham. The motive of the eccentric nobleman was, it is to be feared, the most paltry jealousy of any other person reaping laurels in a field which he desires to keep exclusively to himself. His manner of effecting the object was sagacious. He set up a rival bill to that of Lord Cottenham, and then succeeded in procuring the transmission of both of them to a select committee, upon the pretence of comparing and amalgamating the two measures, but really to destroy both. The conduct of the Lord Chancellor on this occasion was most inexplicable. After having energetically declared his approval of Lord Cottenham's Bill, in a former stage, and given it his support, he now, at the beck of Lord Brougham, turned round, and voted against it. No other subject of legal interest has engaged the attention of either House.

Bills in Progress.

THE NEW RAILWAYS BILL.

One of the most important acts of the present session appears to be the new measure recently introduced on the part of the Ministry by Mr. Gladstone, the President of the Board of Trade and Plantations, in the shape of "A Bill to attach certain conditions to the construction of future Railways, authorized, or to be authorized, by any Act of the present or succeeding sessions of Parliament, and for other purposes in relation to railways."

The Bill contains 48 clauses.

The first enacts, that if at any time after the end of fifteen years from the 1st day of January next after the passing of any Act for the construction of a new line of railroad (whether it be a trunk, branch, or junction line), the clear annual profits divisible upon the subscribed and paid-up capital stock of the said railway, upon the average of the three preceding years, shall equal or exceed the rate of 10*l.* for every 100*l.* of such paid-up capital stock, it shall be lawful for the Board of Trade, upon a month's notice, to revise the scale of tolls, fares, and charges, limited by the Act relating to the said railway, and to fix such new scales of tolls, fares, and charges [illegible] to such different classes of [illegible] goods as, in the judgment of the said Board—assuming the same quantities and kinds of traffic to continue—shall be likely to reduce the said divisible profits to the said 10*l.* in the hundred; with a provision that Parliament shall require and enable the said Board to give the company a guarantee that the said divisible profits, in case of any deficiency therein, shall be made good to the aforesaid rate of 10*l.* for every 100*l.* of paid-up capital stock. A further provision, empowering the Board of Trade to deduct for losses incurred by bad management on the part of the railway company, is also enacted.

The revised scale is to take effect on being published in the London Gazette.

The revised scale of charges may be afterwards raised by the Board of Trade (so that the fares be not higher, of course, than those fixed by the company's Act of Parliament), but they cannot be lowered for a period of seven years after the establishment of the new scale without the consent of the company.

No such company, whilst its scales of charges are under revision, must increase its capital stock.

The 6th clause authorizes the Board of Trade to make from time to time such regulations respecting the traffic of any railway of which the scale of charges has been revised, as may appear to the said Board expedient and desirable.

The 7th clause enacts, that whatever may be the rate of divisible profits in any future railway, it shall be lawful for the Board of Trade, at any time after the expiration of the aforesaid term of fifteen years, to purchase any such railway, with all its stock and hereditaments, in the name and on behalf of the Queen, upon giving the usual month's notice, and upon payment of a sum equal to twenty-five years' purchase of the annual divisible profits, estimated on the average of the three next preceding years. The average rate of profit for the said three years is not to be taken at more than 10*l.* in the hundred. The Board is not authorized to buy any such railway, without the proprietors' consent, whilst any revised scale of tolls, as aforesaid, shall be in force.

When the profits of a railway proposed to be purchased have been reduced by a revision of the scale of charges, the amount of purchase-money is to be estimated on the basis of an average rate of annual divisible profit equal to 10*l.* in the hundred of paid-up capital. This provision is to operate in the event of the proposal being made within three years after the time when the revised scale shall have ceased to be in force.

The company must deliver up any such purchased railway in a state of sufficient repair, and with a sufficient working stock, under penalty of a deduction from the purchase-money by the Board of Trade. Any depreciation in stock is to be also deducted. The interest upon debts is to be deducted in estimating the profits of the concern.

When any such railway as aforesaid shall be under lease, the annual divisible profits shall be estimated in the same manner as if the said railway were not under lease.

The accounts of the railways coming within the provisions of this Act will be open to the inspection of the Board of Trade, which must be furnished with half-yearly abstracts of the receipts and expenditure, &c. The Board may appoint persons to be auditors of the said half-yearly accounts.

The purchase-money of a railway is to be paid over to the directors, and distributed by them amongst the proprietors pro ratâ according to their respective interests therein. A receipt under the company's seal is to be deemed a good and sufficient discharge. Upon the payment of the purchase-money the railway and the works thereof are to vest in the Crown.

The contracts, &c. made by such railway companies before the sale of the concern are still to remain in force, and actions, &c. are not to abate.

All differences that may arise between the Board of Trade and the railway companies respecting the amount of profits, or the state of repair or value of the railway proposed to be bought in, are to be settled by arbitration. The arbitrators are to be appointed within fourteen days after the dispute shall have arisen. Each party is to appoint one arbitrator. An umpire may be appointed to decide the case, if the two arbitrators are at loggerheads, and cannot come to any agreement. The umpire's decision to be final.

The members of the Board of Trade are not to be personally liable in respect of actions or suits affecting the said railway.

The [illegible]th clause partially supplies a desideratum of the utmost importance; that is to say, it enacts that, for the purpose of securing to poor persons the means of travelling by railway at moderate fares, and in carriages duly protected from the weather, all future railway companies shall provide at least one third-class, or cheap train, each way, daily. The said train is to start at a seasonable hour, to travel at a rate of speed not less than twelve miles an hour, including stoppages, and to stop at every station on the line; the carriages are to be furnished with seats, and protected from the weather in a manner satisfactory to the Board of Trade. The fare of each passenger by this cheap train is not to exceed one penny per mile, and half a cwt. of luggage may be carried without any extra charge; children under three years of age to be carried gratis. With respect to all railways subject to these obligations which shall be open on or before the 1st of October next, this clause will come into force on the said 1st day of October.

The Board of Trade is to have a discretionary control over these cheap trains, and to make orders respecting them, which the company must obey, under a penalty of 20*l.* for every day during which the refusal or neglect to obey the order shall continue. The Board will also have a discretionary power of allowing alternative arrangements. The tax upon the receipts from passengers carried at a penny per mile is not to exceed one-half of the amount of the tax on general receipts.

Provision is made for the conveyance of military and police forces at certain charges; viz. 1d. per mile for each private, and 2d. per mile for each officer.

The railway companies in question are required to afford additional facilities for the transmission of the mails, and to allow lines of electrical telegraph to be established, if requested to do so by the Board of Trade; such electrical telegraphs as shall be established by private parties will be open to the public, subject to certain reasonable regulations and charges.

The Board is empowered to appoint inspectors.

By clause 40, the issue of "loan notes" and other illegal securities by railway companies is expressly prohibited, without any exception, under penalty of the offending railway company forfeiting to the Queen a sum equal to the value represented by every such illegally issued loan note.

Loan notes, however, which may have been issued previously to the 24th of May, 1844, are to be paid, when due, together with the interest agreed upon, &c.

The Board of Trade is authorized to determine what lines, or portions of lines, are to be deemed "new railways," for the purposes of this Act, a list thereof to be published in the Gazette.

Such are the most important provisions of the new Government measure.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

DEBTORS AND CREDITORS BILL.

MONDAY, June 24.—Their lordships were occupied several hours in discussing the comparative merits of the respective Bills of Lord Cottenham and Lord Brougham, for the amendment of the laws relating to bankruptcy and insolvency.—The LORD CHANCELLOR proposed to terminate the controversy by referring both Bills to a select committee, in order that the best of the two might be selected, or a better measure compounded out of both.—Lord COTTENHAM, whose Bill stood for third reading, pressed his measure, on the ground that reference to a committee would prevent its passing during the present session; but, on a division, was opposed by 28 to 4, and his Bill, along with Lord Brougham's, was referred to a select committee.

CAP. XII.

An Act to Amend the Law relating to International Copyright.—(May 10, 1844.)

The preamble reciting 1 & 2 Vict. c. 59; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45; 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 15; 8 Geo. 2, c. 13; 7 Geo. 3, c. 38; 17 Geo. 3, c. 57; 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 59; 38 Geo. 3, c. 71; 54 Geo. 3, c. 56; and that the powers thereby vested in her Majesty were not sufficient to enable her Majesty to confer upon authors of books first published in foreign countries copyright of the like duration, and with the like remedies for the infringement thereof which are conferred and provided by the said Copyright Amendment Act, and that it is expedient to repeal the said International Copyright Act, and to make further provisions in lieu thereof.

Sec. 1 repeals the International Copyright Act.

2. Her Majesty, by order in council, may direct that authors, &c. of works first published in foreign countries shall have copyright therein within her Majesty's dominions.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for her Majesty, by any order of her Majesty in council, to direct that, as respects all or any particular class or classes of the following works, (namely,) books, prints, articles of sculpture, and other works of art, to be defined in such order, which shall after a future time, to be specified in such order, be first published in any foreign country to be named in such order, the authors, inventors, designers, engravers, and makers thereof respectively, their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, shall have the privilege of copyright therein during such period or respective periods as shall be defined in such order, not exceeding, however, as to any of the above-mentioned works, the term of copyright which authors, inventors, designers, engravers, and makers of the like works respectively first published in the United Kingdom may be then entitled to under the hereinbefore recited Acts respectively, or under any Acts which may hereafter be passed in that behalf.

3. If the order applies to books, the copyright law as to books first published in this country shall apply to the books to which the order relates, with certain exceptions.—And be it enacted, That in case any such order shall apply to books, all and singular the enactments of the said Copyright Amendment Act, and of any other Act for the time being in force with relation to the copyright in books first published in this country, shall, from and after the time so to be specified in that behalf in such order, and subject to such limitation as to the duration of the copyright as shall be therein contained, apply to and be in force in respect of the books to which such order shall extend, and which shall have been registered as hereinafter is provided, in such and the same manner as if such books were first published in the United Kingdom, save and except such of the said enactments, or such parts thereof, as shall be excepted in such order, and save and except such of the said enactments as relate to the delivery of copies of books at the British Museum, and to or for the use of the other libraries mentioned in the said Copyright Amendment Act.

4. If the order applies to prints, sculptures, &c., the copyright law as to prints or sculptures first published in this country shall apply to the prints, sculptures, &c. to which such order relates.—And be it enacted, That in case any such order shall apply to prints, articles of sculpture, or to any such other works of art as aforesaid, all and singular the enactments of the said engraving copyright Acts and the said sculpture copyright Acts, or of any other Act for the time being in force with relation to the copyright in prints or articles of sculpture first published in this country, and of any Act for the time being in force with relation to the copyright in any similar works of art first published in this country, shall, from and after the time so to be specified in that behalf in such order, and subject to such limitation as to the duration of the copyright as shall be therein contained respectively, apply to and be in force in respect of the prints, articles of sculpture, and other works of art to which such order shall extend, and which shall have been registered as hereinafter is provided, in such and the same manner as if such articles and other works of art were first published in the United Kingdom, save and except such of the said enactments or such parts thereof as shall be excepted in such order.

5. Her Majesty may, by order in council, direct that authors and composers of dramatic pieces and musical compositions first publicly represented and performed in foreign countries shall have similar rights in the British dominions.—And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for her Majesty, by an order of her Majesty in council, to direct that the authors of dramatic pieces and musical compositions which shall, after a future time, to be specified in such order, be first publicly represented or performed in any foreign country to be named in such order, shall have the sole liberty of representing or performing in any part of the British dominions such dramatic pieces or musical compositions during such period as shall be defined in such order, not exceeding the period during which authors of dramatic pieces and musical compositions first publicly represented or performed in the United Kingdom may for the time be entitled by law to the sole liberty of representing and performing the same; and from and after the time so specified in any such last mentioned order, the enactments of the said Dramatic Literary Property Act, and of the said Copyright Amendment Act, and of any other Act for the time being in force with relation to the liberty of publicly representing and performing dramatic pieces or musical compositions, shall, subject to such limitation as to the duration of the right conferred by any such order as shall be therein contained, apply to and be in force in respect of the dramatic pieces and musical compositions to which such order shall extend, and which shall have been registered as hereinafter is provided, in such and the same manner as if such dramatic pieces and musical compositions had been first publicly represented and performed in the British dominions, save and except such of the said enactments or such parts thereof as shall be excepted in such order.

6. Particulars to be observed as to registry and to delivery of copies.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That no author of any book, dramatic piece, or musical composition, or his executors, administrators or assigns, and no inventor, designer, or engraver of any print, or maker of any article of sculpture, or other work of art, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall be entitled to the benefit of this Act, or of any order in council to be issued in pursuance thereof, unless, within a time or times to be in that behalf prescribed in each such order in council, such book, dramatic piece, musical composition, print, article of sculpture, or other work of art, shall have been so registered, and such copy thereof shall have been so delivered as hereinafter is mentioned (that is to say), as regards such book, and also such dramatic piece or musical composition (in the event of the same having been printed), the title to the copy thereof, the name and place of abode of the author or composer thereof, the name and place of abode of the proprietor of the copyright thereof, the time and place of the first publication, representation, or performance thereof, as the case may be, in the foreign country named in the order in council under which the benefits of this Act shall be claimed, shall be entered in the register-book of the Company of Stationers in London, and one printed copy of the whole of such book, and of such dramatic piece or musical composition, in the event of the same having been printed, and of every volume thereof, upon the best paper upon which the largest number or impression of the book, dramatic piece, or musical composition shall have been printed for sale, together with all maps and prints relating thereto, shall be delivered to the officer of the Company of Stationers at the hall of the said company; and as regards dramatic pieces and musical compositions in manuscript, the title to the same, the name and place of abode of the author or composer thereof, the name and place of abode of the proprietor of the right of representing or performing the same, and the time and place of the first representation or performance thereof in the country named in the order in council under which the benefit of the Act shall be claimed, shall be entered in the said register-book of the said Company of Stationers in London; and as regards prints, the title thereof, the name and place of abode of the inventor, designer, or engraver thereof, the name of the proprietor of the copyright therein, and the time and place of the first publication thereof in the foreign country named in the order in council under which the benefits of the Act shall be claimed, shall be entered in the said register-book of the said Company of Stationers in London, and a copy of such print, upon the best paper upon which the largest number or impressions of the print shall have been printed for sale, shall be delivered to the officer of the Company of Stationers at the hall of the said company; and as regards any such article of sculpture, or any such other work of art as aforesaid, a descriptive title thereof, the name and place of abode of the maker thereof, the name of the proprietor of the copyright therein, and the time and place of its first publication in the foreign country named in the order in council under which the benefit of this Act shall be claimed, shall be entered in the said register-book of the said Company of Stationers in London; and the officer of the said Company of Stationers receiving such copies so to be delivered as aforesaid shall give a receipt in writing for the same, and such delivery shall to all intents and purposes be a sufficient delivery under the provisions of this Act.

7. In case of books published anonymously, the name of the publisher to be sufficient.—Provided always and be it enacted, That if a book be published anonymously, it shall be sufficient to insert in the entry thereof in such register-book the name and place of abode of the first publisher thereof, instead of the name and place of abode of the author thereof, together with a declaration that such entry is made either on behalf of the author or on behalf of such first publisher, as the case may require.

8. The provisions of the Copyright Amendment Act as regards entries in the register-book of the Company of Stationers, &c. to apply to entries under this Act.—And be it enacted, That the several enactments in the said Copyright Amendment Act contained with relation to keeping the said register-book, and the inspection thereof, the searches therein, and the delivery of certified and stamped copies thereof, the reception of such copies in evidence, the making of false entries in the said book, and the production in evidence of papers falsely purporting to be copies of entries in the said book, the applications to the courts and judges by persons aggrieved by entries in the said book, and the expunging and varying such entries, shall apply to the books, dramatic pieces, and musical compositions, prints, articles of sculpture, and other works of art, to which any order in council issued in pursuance of this Act shall extend, and to the entries and assignments of copyright and proprietion thereto, save and except that the forms of entry prescribed by the said Copyright Amendment Act may torship therein, in such and the same manner as if such enactments were here expressly enacted in relabe varied to meet the circumstances of the case, and that the sum to be demanded by the officer of the said Company of Stationers for making any entry required by this Act shall be one shilling only.

9. As to expunging or varying entry grounded in wrongful first publication.—And be it enacted, That every entry made in pursuance of this Act of a first publication shall be primâ facie proof of a rightful first publication; but if there be a wrongful first publication, and any party have availed himself thereof to obtain an entry of a spurious work, no order for expunging or varying such entry shall be made unless it be proved to the satisfaction of the Court or of the judge taking cognizance of the application for expunging or varying such entry, first, with respect to a wrongful publication in a country to which the author or first publisher does not belong, and in regard to which there does not subsist with this country any treaty of international copyright, that the party making the application was the author or first publisher, as the case requires; second, with respect to a wrongful first publication either in the country where a rightful first publication has taken place, or in regard to which there subsists with this country a treaty of international copyright, that a court of competent jurisdiction in any such country where such wrongful first publication has taken place has given judgment in favour of the right of the party claiming to be the author or first publisher.

10. Copies of books wherein copyright is subsisting under this Act printed in foreign countries other than those wherein the book was first published prohibited to be imported.—And be it enacted, That all copies of books wherein there shall be any subsisting copyright under or by virtue of this Act, or of any order in council made in pursuance thereof, printed or reprinted in any foreign country except that in which such books were first published, shall be and the same are hereby absolutely prohibited to be imported into any part of the British dominions, except by or with the consent of the registered proprietor of the copyright thereof, or his agent authorized in writing, and if imported contrary to this prohibition, the same and the importers thereof shall be subject to the enactments in force relating to goods prohibited to be imported by any Act relating to the customs; and as respects any such copies so prohibited to be imported, and also as respects any copies unlawfully printed in any place whatsoever of any books wherein there shall be any such subsisting copyright as aforesaid, any person who shall in any part of the British dominions import such prohibited or unlawfully printed copies, or who, knowing such copies to be so unlawfully imported or unlawfully printed, shall sell, publish, or expose to sale or hire, or shall cause to be sold, published, or exposed to sale or hire, or have in his possession for sale or hire, any such copies so unlawfully imported or unlawfully printed, such offender shall be liable to a special action on the case at the suit of the proprietor of such copyright, to be brought and prosecuted in the same courts and in the same manner, and with the like restrictions upon the proceedings of the defendant, as are respectively prescribed in the said Copyright Amendment Act, with relation to actions thereby authorized to be brought by proprietors of copyright against persons importing or selling books unlawfully printed in the British dominions.

11. Officer of Stationers' Company to deposit books, &c. in the British Museum.—And be it enacted, That the said officer of the said Company of Stationers shall receive at the hall of the said company every book, volume, or print so to be delivered as aforesaid, and within one calendar month after receiving such book, volume, or print shall deposit the same in the library of the British Museum.

12. Second or subsequent editions. — Provided always, and be it enacted, That it shall not be requisite to deliver to the said officer of the said Stationers' Company any printed copy of the second or of any subsequent edition of any book or books so delivered as aforesaid, unless the same shall contain additions or alterations.

13. Orders in council may specify different periods for different foreign countries and for different classes of works.—And be it enacted, That the respective terms to be specified by such orders in council respectively for the continuance of the privilege to be granted in respect of works to be first published in foreign countries may be different for works first published in different foreign countries and for different classes of such works; and that the times to be prescribed for the entries to be made in the register-book of the Stationers' Company, and for the deliveries of the books and other articles to the said officer of the Stationers' Company as hereinbefore is mentioned, may be different for different foreign countries and for different classes of books or other articles.

14. No order in council to have any effect unless it states that reciprocal protection is secured.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That no such order in council shall have any effect unless it shall be therein stated, as the ground for issuing the same, that due protection has been secured by the foreign power so named in such order in council for the benefit of parties interested in works first published in the dominions of her Majesty similar to those comprised in such order.

Sec. 15 requires the orders in council to be published in the Gazette; sec. 16, that they shall be laid before Parliament; sec. 17 enacts that they may be revoked; sec. 18 enacts that nothing in the Act shall be construed to prevent the publication of translations: sec. 19, that authors of works first published in foreign countries shall not be entitled to copyright, except under this Act; and sec. 20 is the usual interpretation clause.

This statute is intended to clear up a variety of doubtful questions that had arisen upon the existing Customs Laws. Sections 4 to 7 relate to smuggling, and, as they make an important change in magistrates' law, we cite them verbatim:—

4. Smuggling. Persons on board foreign mail packets, having contraband goods on board, liable to detention, and to a penalty of 100*l.*—And be it enacted, That every person who shall be found or discovered to have been on board any foreign post-office packet, being a national vessel employed in conveying the mails between any foreign country and the United Kingdom, such packet being found or discovered to have been within any port, harbour, river, or creek in the United Kingdom, not being driven thereto by stress of weather or other unavoidable accident, having on board or in any manner attached thereto, or having had on board or in any manner attached thereto, or conveying or having conveyed in any manner, any spirits, not being in a cask or package, containing twenty gallons at the least, or any tea exceeding six pounds weight in the whole, or any tobacco or snuff, not being in a cask or package, containing three hundred pounds weight at least, shall forfeit the sum of one hundred pounds; and it shall be lawful for any officer or officers of the army, navy, or marines, being duly employed for the prevention of smuggling, and on full pay, or for any officer or officers of customs or excise, or other person acting in his or their aid or assistance, or duly employed for the prevention of smuggling, and he and they is and are hereby authorized, empowered, and required, to detain every such person, and to carry and convey such person before any justice or justices of the peace, to be dealt with according to law: Provided always, that no such person shall be liable to be detained for any such offence unless there shall be reasonable ground to believe that such person was the owner of such goods, or was concerned in bringing the same into such ports and other places as are hereinbefore mentioned, or in concealing the same.

5. Several persons concerned in the same offence may be sued by one information.—And be it enacted, That where by any Act relating to the customs a penalty is imposed upon every person committing or concerned in the act by which such penalty is incurred, and such offence shall have been committed by several persons jointly, or several persons shall have been concerned in the same, such several persons shall jointly and severally incur every such penalty; and it shall be lawful to proceed against such persons to recover such penalties jointly by one information, or severally by separate informations, as the Attorney-General or the Commissioners of her Majesty's Customs respectively may deem expedient.

6. Persons having been before convicted of an offence against the customs may, upon a verdict passing against them, be sentenced to hard labour.—And be it enacted, That where any verdict shall hereafter pass against any person in any of her Majesty's courts of record for any offence committed after the passing of this Act, for which offence any pecuniary penalty shall have been inflicted by any Act relating to the customs, and such person shall have before been duly convicted, either by verdict in any of her Majesty's courts of record or otherwise, of any such offence, it shall and may be lawful for the judges of the said court in which such person shall be so convicted to order and adjudge that such person shall, in lieu of any penalty, be imprisoned in any house of correction for any period not less than six nor more than twelve calendar months; and the governor or keeper of any house of correction is hereby required to receive any person committed under any such order or judgment.

7. Persons previously convicted may be held to bail for full amount of penalty.—And be it enacted, That when any writ of capias shall hereafter issue against any person for any such offence as is hereinbefore lastly mentioned, and such person shall before have been convicted of any such offence, such writ shall issue and such person shall be held to bail for the full amount of the penalty sought to be recovered against him.

The remaining sections relate to alterations of duties, of no interest to the Profession.

The object of this statute is indicated by its title.

Cap. XVIII.

An Act to remove Doubts as to the Power of appointing, convening, and confirming the sentences of Courts-Martial in the East Indies. (June 6, 1844.)

Cap. XIX.

An Act for regulating the Bailiffs of Inferior Courts. (June 6, 1844.)

We give this statute verbatim.

Bailiffs to be appointed by the judge of the court.—Whereas courts are holden in and for sundry counties, hundreds, and wapentakes, honours, manors, and other lordships, liberties, and franchises, having by custom or charter jurisdiction for the recovery of debts and damages in personal actions, and in many places great extortion is practised under colour of the process of such courts: for remedy thereof, be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That the judge of every such court shall have power to appoint a sufficient number of proper and responsible persons to act as bailiffs of the said court, and in the execution of the process thereof, and to suspend or dismiss any such bailiff for misconduct, and no bailiff so dismissed shall be qualified to be re-appointed; and the bailiffs of the court so appointed, and no other persons, save as hereinafter mentioned, shall serve all summonses, and execute all orders, warrants, precepts, writs, and other processes issued out of the said court; and a list containing the name and place of abode of every such bailiff shall be put up in a conspicuous place in the said court: Provided always, that this Act shall not extend to prevent any process from being executed by any high sheriff or high bailiff, or any officer appointed by Act of Parliament to perform the duties of sheriff with regard to the execution of process out of any such court, or his or their bound bailiffs or other officers.

2. Bailiffs to give security.—And be it enacted, That every bailiff so appointed under this Act shall give to the said judge security, in such sum and manner and form as he shall from time to time order, for the due performance of his office, and for payment of all moneys received by him in the execution of his office.

3. Bailiffs taking fees other than those allowed, to be discharged.—And be it enacted, That every bailiff authorized to execute the process of any such court who shall wilfully and corruptly exact, take, or accept any fee or reward whatsoever other than and except such fees as shall be allowed by law and declared by order of the court, which shall be put up in some conspicuous place in the court, shall, upon proof thereof before the said court, be for ever incapable of serving or being employed in any office of profit or emolument of the said court.

4. Remedies against officers of the court guilty of extortion or misconduct.—And be it enacted, That if any bailiff acting under colour or pretence of the process of any such court shall be guilty of extortion or misconduct, or shall not duly pay or account for any money levied under process of the said court, it shall be lawful for the judge to inquire into such matter in a summary way, and for that purpose to summon and enforce the attendance of all necessary parties, and to make such order thereupon for the repayment of any money extorted, or for the due payment of any money so levied as aforesaid, and for the payment of such damages and costs to the parties aggrieved, as he shall think just; and in default of payment of any money so ordered to be paid within the time specified for the payment thereof, it shall be lawful for the judge of the said court, by warrant under his hand and seal, to cause such sum to be levied by distress and sale of the goods of the offender, together with the reasonable charges of such distress and sale, and in default of such distress to commit the offender to the county gaol or house of correction for any time not exceeding one calendar month.

5. Persons forging process, &c. guilty of felony.—And be it enacted, That for every such court a seal shall be made under the direction of the judge of such court, and that all summonses and other process issuing out of the said court shall be sealed or stamped with such seal; and every person who shall forge the seal or any process of the court, or who shall serve or enforce any such forged process, knowing the same to be forged, or deliver or cause to be delivered to any person any paper falsely purporting to be a copy of any summons or other process of the said court, knowing the same to be false, or who shall act or profess to act under or by the authority of such summons or process, knowing the same to be false, or who shall take upon himself to act as a bailiff of any such court without lawful authority, shall be guilty of felony.

6. Sale not to be till three days after execution.—And be it enacted, That no goods which shall be taken in execution under any process of any such court shall be sold until the end of three days at least next following the day on which such goods shall have been so taken, unless such goods be of a perishable nature, or upon request in writing under the hand of the party whose goods shall have been taken; and until such sale the goods so taken shall be in the custody of the bailiff to whom the warrant of execution shall have been directed.

7. Penalty for assaulting bailiffs, or rescuing persons or goods taken in execution.—And be it enacted, That if any bailiff of any such court shall be assaulted while in the execution of his duty, or if any rescue shall be made or attempted to be made of any person or goods taken or levied under process of any such court, the person offending therein, on conviction thereof before any two justices of the peace, shall be imprisoned with or without hard labour in the common gaol or house of correction for any term not exceeding three calendar months, or shall forfeit and pay such fine not exceeding five pounds as may be set upon him by the said justices of the peace; and every such fine, with the costs of conviction, in case of nonpayment thereof, shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods of the offender.

8. Limitation of actions, &c.—And be it enacted, That all actions and prosecutions to be commenced against any bailiff of any such court for any thing done in pursuance of his duty as such bailiff, or for such grievance, misfeazance, or nonfeazance as aforesaid, shall be laid and tried in the county where the offence was committed, and shall be commenced within three calendar months after the fact committed, and not afterwards or otherwise; and notice in writing of such action or prosecution, and of the cause thereof, shall be given to the defendant one calendar month at least before the commencement of such action or prosecution; and no plaintiff shall recover in any such action if tender of sufficient amends, in the opinion of the judge who shall try such action, shall have been made before action brought, or if after action brought a sufficient sum of money, in the opinion of the judge as aforesaid, with costs, shall have been paid into court, in satisfaction of such action."

9. Meaning of "judge."—And be it enacted, That in this Act the word "judge" shall be construed to mean the county clerk, under-sheriff, steward, or other person by or before whom any such court shall be holden.

10. Act may be amended.—And be it enacted, That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

Cap. XX.

An Act to amend an Act of the First and Second Years of her present Majesty, for securing the Debt due by the City of Edinburgh to the Public. (June 6, 1844.)

Cap. XXI.

The first section repeals the existing stamp-duties on policies of sea insurance and on certain agreements, and also on certain instruments for appointing proxies, except as to arrears.

Sec. 2 grants new duties set forth in the schedule in lieu thereof.

Sec. 3 enacts that the powers and provisions of former Acts shall be applied to the duties granted by this Act.

The remaining sections and the schedule we present verbatim, as they are important to our readers:—

4. Penalty for evading the duties on insurances. The London Assurance and the Royal Exchange Assurance Corporations allowed to make agreements on unstamped slips, on certain conditions.—And be it enacted, That if any person shall become an assurer upon any insurance in respect whereof any duty is by this Act made payable, or shall subscribe or underwrite, or otherwise sign or make or enter into any contract, agreement, or memorandum of any such insurance, or shall receive or contract for any premium or consideration for any such insurance, or shall receive or charge or take credit in account for any such premium or consideration as aforesaid, or any sum of money as or for any such premium or consideration as aforesaid, or shall wilfully or knowingly take upon himself any risk, or render himself liable to pay, or shall pay, or allow or agree to pay, or allow in account or otherwise, any sum of money upon any loss, peril, or contingency relative to any such insurance, unless such insurance shall be written on vellum, parchment, or paper duly stamped, or if any person shall be concerned in any fraudulent contrivance or device, or shall be guilty of any wilful act, neglect, or omission, with intent to evade the duties payable under this Act on policies of insurance, or whereby any such duties shall be evaded, every person so offending shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of one hundred pounds: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to subject any member, officer, or servant of the London Assurance or Royal Exchange Assurance Corporations respectively to any of the penalties by this Act imposed, for or by reason of his making any agreement to insure by any label, slip, or memorandum in writing upon unstamped paper; provided that in every such case the day on which such agreement shall be made shall be truly expressed in words at length on such label, slip, or memorandum, and a policy of insurance according to such agreement shall be made out in due form on vellum, parchment, or paper duly stamped, and which shall be duly executed within three office days from the time of making such agreement as aforesaid.

5. Agreements chargeable with duty under this Act may be stamped within fourteen days after the making thereof without penalty. Penalty on stamping the same afterwards, 10l.—And be it enacted, That if any agreement, or minute or memorandum of an agreement, chargeable with duty under this Act, shall be ingrossed, written, or printed upon vellum, parchment, or paper not duly stamped according to law, and such agreement, minute, or memorandum shall be brought to the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes, or to any of their officers appointed or authorized to receive the same, to be stamped, together with the duty payable thereon, within fourteen days after such agreement, minute, or memorandum shall have been made or entered into, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners and they are hereby required to cause the same to be stamped without the payment of any penalty: Provided always, that if such agreement, minute, or memorandum shall not be brought to be stamped as aforesaid within the time hereinbefore prescribed and limited for that purpose, there shall be payable by way of penalty on the stamping thereof the sum of ten pounds, over and above the duty chargeable thereon.

6. Instruments of proxy to be available for voting at one meeting, or at any adjournment thereof.—And be it enacted, That any letter or power of attorney, or other instrument made for the purpose of appointing or nominating a proxy, and chargeable with duty under this Act, shall authorize such proxy to vote upon any matter at one meeting of the proprietors or shareholders of or in any company or society, the time of holding whereof shall be specified in such instrument, or at any adjournment of such meeting; and no such letter or power of attorney or other instrument shall be further or otherwise available, any thing in such instrument or in any Act of Parliament to the contrary notwithstanding.

7. Commissioners not to stamp instruments appointing proxies after the signing thereof. Penalty for signing instruments appointing proxies, not being duly stamped, or for voting under such instruments.—And be it enacted, That it shall not be lawful for the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes, or any of their officers, under any pretence whatever, to stamp or mark, after the signing thereof by any person, any vellum, parchment, or paper upon which any letter or power of attorney, or other instrument appointing or nominating a proxy, chargeable with duty under this Act, shall be ingrossed, written, or printed; and if any person shall make or sign any such letter or power of attorney or other instrument as aforesaid which shall be ingrossed, written, or printed, or partly ingrossed or written and partly printed, upon vellum, parchment, or paper not duly stamped according to law, or if any person shall vote or attempt to vote or act as a proxy in pursuance or under the authority or pretended authority of any such letter or power of attorney or other instrument not duly stamped as aforesaid, every person so offending in any or either of the cases aforesaid shall forfeit and pay the sum of fifty pounds; and every vote made or given or other act done in pursuance or under the authority or pretended authority of any such letter or power of attorney or other instrument, not duly stamped as aforesaid, shall be absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes.

8. Recital of 6 Geo. 4, c. 41. Stamp duty on bonds given for obtaining drawbacks of duties of customs or excise repealed.—And whereas by an Act passed in the sixth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act to repeal the Stamp Duties payable in Great Britain and Ireland upon the Transfer of Property in Ships and Vessels, and upon Bonds and Debentures required to be given in relation to the Duties, Drawbacks, and Bounties of Customs or Excise, and to grant other Duties of Stamps on such Bonds and Debentures," the stamp duty of five shillings was granted and is now payable for and upon every bond given pursuant to the directions of any Act of Parliament, or by the direction of the Commissioners of Customs or Excise, or any of their officers, for or in respect of any of the duties of customs or excise, or for preventing frauds or evasions thereof, or for any other matter or thing relating thereto, except certain bonds in the said Act mentioned and exempted from the said duty: And whereas it is expedient to repeal the said duty granted by the last-recited Act, so far as relates to bonds given with relation to the drawback of any of the duties of customs or excise on the exportation of goods to foreign parts; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act the said stamp-duty of five shillings granted by the said last recited Act, so far as the same is charged or payable for or upon any bond to be given pursuant to the directions of any Act of Parliament, or by the direction of the Commissioners of Customs or Excise, or any of their officers, upon or with relation to the receiving or obtaining, or for entitling any person to receive or obtain, any drawback of any duty or duties or part of any duty or duties of customs or excise, for or in respect of any goods, wares, or merchandize exported or shipped to be exported from Great Britain or Ireland respectively to any parts beyond the seas, or for or upon any bond to be given as aforesaid upon or with relation to the obtaining of any debenture or certificate for entitling any person to receive any such drawback as aforesaid, shall cease and determine, and the same is hereby repealed.

9. Recital of 55 Geo. 3, c. 101, s. 30, requiring public notaries in Ireland to deliver accounts of bills and notes noted by them, and to pay the stamp-duties as for protests thereof. Enactment repealed.—And whereas by an Act passed in the fifty-fifth year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled "An Act to regulate the Collection of Stamp Duties on Matters in respect of which Licenses may be granted by the Commissioners of Stamps in Ireland," every public notary in Ireland is required, under a penalty in the said Act contained, once in every two months to deliver or cause to be delivered at the Stamp-office in Dublin a faithful account in writing, verified as in the said Act is mentioned, of bills of exchange and promissory notes which shall have been noted by him for non-acceptance or non-payment, and at the same time to pay the stamp-duty which would then by law be payable for or in respect of every such bill or note, if protested in due form of law: And whereas it is expedient to repeal the said enactment; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act so much of the said last-recited Act as requires any such account as aforesaid to be delivered, or as imposes any penalty for the non-delivery thereof, or for the non-payment of any duty thereon, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

THE SCHEDULE TO WHICH THIS ACT REFERS; CONTAINING THE DUTIES IMPOSED BY THIS ACT.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

NOTHING has occurred during the week claiming special notice here. The Quarter Sessions commence on Monday next, and again we take the liberty of urging upon the magistrates who will be required to sit in judgment there, to remember that they are not lawyers; that they have an inferior class of juries; and that from their decisions there is no appeal. Consequently it behoves them to be more lenient in the punishments they inflict than the learned judges. Hitherto, we regret to say, they have been far more severe; the effect of which has been to alienate from them the respect of the class subjected to their tribunal, and to bring the law itself into discredit. They might advantageously direct their attention to two topics upon which a word from them would have great weight; namely, the necessity for reforming and extending the courts of Quarter Sessions, and the inutility of grand juries. We subjoin the first portion of our usual digest of the decisions of the last two Terms on Magistrates' Cases.

REVIEW OF SESSIONS CASES IN EASTER AND TRINITY TERMS, 1844.

THE proximity of Easter and Trinity Terms induces us to make one review of both. They comprise some very important decisions.

WHERE A MANDAMUS LIES TO HEAR AN APPEAL.—Reg. v. Kesteven (1 Bittleston & Symons's V. R. 8) will be a leading case on this point.

It overrules Reg. v. Carnarvonshire (2 Q. B. 325; 1 Gale & Dav. 423) and Reg. v. West Riding (Keighley v. Wilsden) (2 Q. B. 331).

Long before these cases were decided, it was held, however, that if the Sessions came to an erroneous decision on a preliminary point, shutting out the merits, the Court would grant a mandamus ordering them to enter continuances and hear an appeal; and in the case of Reg. v. West Riding (Sheffield v. Crich) (3 Gale & Dav. 170), a still greater stretch of jurisdiction was based by Lord Denman on the analogous authority thus exercised over Courts of Quarter Sessions; and a mandamus went to order the erasure of an entry on its records of an order which the respondents had themselves obtained, confirming the removal without the knowledge of the appellants, though in their name. The principle has always been upheld of inviting the Sessions to enter upon and determine points of sufficiency in examinations and appeals for themselves, deciding them conditionally upon a case to be granted by themselves where they have any difficulty. This was laid down by Coleridge, J. in Reg. v. Bridgewater (10 Ad. & Ell. 693), and has been uniformly followed. It was always held that the Sessions were not compellable to grant a case, which was purely a matter in their own discretion. Ex parte Jarvis (9 Dowl. 120) Reg. v. Abergale (8 Ad. & Ell. 394), and the cases of Evenwood Barony and of Charlbury and Walcott (3 Gale & Dav. 145, 177) strongly upheld the conclusiveness of the judgment of the Sessions where they have gone into a case. In Reg. v. Lancashire (3 Q. B. 367, and 2 Gale & Dav. 714), the Sessions had refused to make a special entry of the order being quashed "not on the merits," where it had been abandoned by the respondents themselves; and in Ex parte Overseers of Ackworth (13 L. J. M. C. 38), there was a similar decision; and in both the Court of Queen's Bench refused to interfere; thus substantiating, in point of fact, the finality of the judgment of the Sessions, where that judgment had been exercised and relied upon. But where the Sessions had improperly shut out the parties from going into their case, or had, upon some preliminary point, come to a wrong decision there, as laid down by Coleridge J. in R. v. Charlbury and Walcott, the Court "compels the Sessions to hear the case." But now comes the question, what is a preliminary point?

In R. v. Carnarvonshire the point was, that the statement of the grounds of appeal was insufficient. Was this a preliminary point? We think it clearly was not. Then came Reg. v. West Riding (Keighley v. Wilsden), in which the Sessions had decided that the fact that the pauper's sister had been relieved in a certain parish was not sufficient statement of grounds of appeal on the face of it to entitle the appellants to a hearing. Still less was this a preliminary point; for certainly it was the substance of the appellants' case, which, being bound to state in their grounds of objection, enabled the Sessions to say whether it was sufficient or not. They did so; and on the principle before laid down and always acted upon, the Sessions being the judges, ought not to have been interfered with. But mandamuses issued in each of these cases, on the express ground that the decision was on a preliminary point.

Now comes Reg. v. Kesteven, in the judgment of which the Lord Chief Justice says, that "Reg. v. Carnarvonshire (at the decision of which I was not present) is clearly wrong, and Reg. v. West Riding (Sheffield v. Crich) (in the decision of which I concurred) is if possible more wrong. There was in each case a new trial upon the evidence, which the Court has no power to order." (8 Jurist, 446.)

The result of this case is, therefore, to establish more clearly what was in principle acted upon before, and of which principle a violation took place in the two cases cited. If there be a preliminary point which is not matter of evidence, but mere matter of practice, there the Courts will interfere by mandamus, and set the justices right; but wherever the justices have decided, be it rightly or wrongly, on points of fact, which affect the power of removal, that decision cannot be revised or interfered with, unless the Sessions choose to grant a case; and thus it is as to sufficiency of grounds of appeal, which is not a preliminary point of practice such, for instance, as the proper signature of the notices, or the complaint on the jurat in the examination, which, if wrongly decided, would entitle the parties to a mandamus; or where the Sessions imagine that a parish is bound to give notice of appeal before twenty-one days have expired after the service of the order of removal, as in Reg. v. The Justices of Lancashire (3 Gale & Dav. 296). These are preliminary points, and the justices may be ordered to do right by mandamus.

EVIDENCE OF CHARGEABILITY.—Reg. v. High Bickington (1 Bit. & Sym. V. R. 1) has occasioned some surprise at the apparently increased rigour of the requirement of the Court as to evidence of chargeability. A vast number of cases might be cited in which chargeability had been less strongly and plainly averred than in these words:—"I and my said children are inhabitants of the said (respondent) parish, and are chargeable to the said parish." Another witness, on his examination, stated, "I am one of the relieving officers of the union of B; I administer the relief ordered for the paupers of the said parish." The said Ann Ford and her four children are now chargeable to the said parish. The Court, however, held that actual relief had not been proved; that the fact of chargeability was an inference of law, which did not amount to direct evidence of the facts from which chargeability arose, and that these facts ought to be stated explicitly. The Court have subsequently upheld the same requirement, after a long and able argument by Merivale, in Reg. v. Lidford, who maintained that it was not essential, according to the 81st section of the Poor-Law Act, to state chargeability at all, as we understood him. Chargeability, however, is a condition precedent to removal, and, as such, is just as material as any of the substantial parts of the settlement, and defect in it just as fatal to an order of removal as a defect in the settlement alleged. We have no doubt that the same degree of accuracy and fulness is as essential in the one as the other. It certainly appears at first sight a fine distinction to hold that the assertion of a parish officer that A B was chargeable is not evidence, because it is an inference in law; but this is only in accordance with the rule laid down in Reg. v. Rishworth, (1 G. & Dav. 597), that the examination must contain legal evidence, and in Reg. v. Middleton in Teesdale (3 P. & Dav. 473), that "the examination should contain within itself a sufficient statement of a settlement." It has been remarked that the Court have not decided whether the quashing of an order on the ground that it insufficiently sets forth chargeability is conclusive against the parish. Clearly not. The case of Reg. v. Perranzubuloe (3 G. & Dav. 315) decides that quashing on the ground of want of evidence of chargeability is a quashing on the merits only as to that particular time, and does not conclude the parish from removing again the day after. This is another reason for strictness in the statement. The evil in all these cases arises from the neglect of parishes to take proper legal advice as to the evidence required, and the mode of stating it. In this case the appellants were fully entitled to be informed precisely of the facts, dates, and places constituting the right to remove, for to this chargeability amounts: and it was as important they should have this information as to chargeability as to the settlement itself.

In this case, therefore, we fully concur in the justice of the rule, rigorous though it be, laid down by the Queen's Bench. Let us, however, see how far the same principle has been carried out in other cases.

STATEMENT OF SETTLEMENT BY MARRIAGE.—It is always with great reluctance and deference that we differ from the opinion or judgment of any court of justice, especially from that of the Queen's Bench. But as regards the case of Reg. v. Aberdaron (1 Bit. & Sym. V. R. 51), we should be doing great injustice to our readers were we not unhesitatingly to warn them against placing the least reliance upon the decision there given. We speak with confidence, because we have the repeated authority of the Queen's Bench itself for so holding. The case was that of a settlement derived by a widow through marriage. The evidence of the marriage consisted solely in the woman's statement that she was the widow of A B. No date, no place of marriage given, and therefore (as Mr. Walesby very properly put it) no means given to the appellants to ascertain the facts. We need not load our pages with the numerous cases in which the Court of Queen's Bench have held that the examination must fully set out every fact essential to the settlement, strictly according to the rules of legal evidence; nothing is to be left to inference; and nowhere was this more strongly held than in Reg. v. High Bickington, where the statement that A B is chargeable at a given time and place, was held to be an inference in law, and therefore insufficient. In Reg. v. Aberdaron, it is held sufficient evidence of marriage that a woman says she is a widow! though the marriage thus impliedly stated may have taken place anywhere or at any time. And the sole reason given in the judgment for this decision is that the Sessions found the information sufficient; but when the Sessions have by a case referred the question whether they did right in so finding to the opinion of the Queen's Bench, it is surely a begging of that question to cite the opinion of the Sessions as any guide to the decision of the superior court. We speak with great deference, but we feel constrained to say that this decision is at direct variance with the plainest law laid down by the Court itself for the guidance of parishes, and must not be relied upon.

NON-SEVERANCE OF FAMILIES.—The case of Reg. v. Birmingham (3 Gale & Dav. 153), and the family tie principle, has received an additional support from that of Reg. v. Leeds (Washton v. Leeds). In Reg. v. Birmingham it will be remembered it was decided that, not even with her consent, could a child under seven be severed from its mother. It has been long inflexibly held, that husbands are not to be bereft of the consortium of their wives without their consent, and now the inviolability of the bonds of matrimony has taken another step, and, ungallant though the gentleman may be, and willing to part company, yet if the lady be herself loth to lose her husband, woe upon the parish that dares to part them! In this case, John Morgan, then married to and living with Lydia, his wife, states that he assisted George Smith in endeavouring to discover his place of settlement, if any. "We inquired of all persons, and searched in all likely places, to find a place of settlement for me, but without success. We could not discover any settlement for me, and I believe I never had any. I hereby consent and agree that my said wife and children shall, without me, be removed to the township of Washton, that being the last place of her maiden settlement. And I pray that such removal may be forthwith ordered and made according to law." This tender desire was destined to be baulked. It was in vain that the counsel for the order contended that the wife, being by, was nothing loth, and that silence gave consent. There was no express statement of that consent, and the Court held that severance was impossible.

It was also determined in this case that examinations need not be headed with the accuracy of an indictment, as long as they shew jurisdiction, and are true as far as they go.

It is not necessary, in the proof of a maiden settlement, for the examination to do more than state that diligent search has been in vain made for that of the husband. The appellants thought, in this case, that the respondents ought to have assured them that he was not born in Ireland, Scotland, Man, Guernsey, Jersey, or Scilly. But as they could not find out where he was born, the Court thought it was absurd to expect statements as to where he was not born.

Summary.

THE business of the Term is now fast drawing to a close, and the leisure of the Long Vacation will enable us to bring up the heavy arrears of statutes, lectures, and other matters, postponed to make way for the Reports. The usual summary of Decisions of the Term will appear immediately after the day appointed for delivering the last judgment.

SUMMER CIRCUITS, 1844.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT.

The judges appointed to proceed on this circuit, the Right Hon. Lord Denman, Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, and Mr. Justice COLTMAN, have fixed the assizes, for Northamptonshire—July 15, at Northampton.

Rutlandshire—July 19, at Oakham.
Lincolnshire—July 20, at Lincoln.
Lincoln (City of)—Same day, at Guildhall.
Nottinghamshire—July 25, at Nottingham.
Nottingham (Town of)—Same day.
Derbyshire—July 29, at Derby.
Leicestershire—August 1, at Leicester.
Leicester (Borough of)—Same day.
Warwickshire—{ Coventry division, August 5, at Coventry. Warwick division, August, 7, at Warwick.

SUMMER ASSIZES.—MIDLAND CIRCUIT.—On inquiry, we learn from authority upon which we can rely, that on this circuit, the only one on which the days of assize in the different counties remain unappointed, the learned judges going the circuit, the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench (Lord Denman) and Mr. Justice Coltman, have been, from various circumstances, unable to fix the respective days and places of the circuit, nor can they do so until the ensuing week, and that in all probability those assizes, which generally commence between the 10th and 15th July, will not this year commence before the 22nd.

FOREIGN-OFFICE, June 22.—The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. Joseph R. Croskey, as Consul at Cowes for the United States of America.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Shallett John Dale, of North Shields, in the county of Durham, gent.; Joseph Fairman, of Bishop's Stortford, in the county of Herts, gent.; and Henry Burchall Peren, of South Petherton, in the county of Somerset, gent. to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

THE MIDDLE TEMPLE, June 26.—This evening a splendid banquet was given by the benchers of this honourable society to the benchers of the Inner Temple. In accordance with the custom of this society, a biennial meeting takes place between the heads of the two learned societies of the Temple, in the hall of the Middle Temple, shortly after the expiration of Trinity Term, for the same purpose, perhaps, as that of many other learned societies—namely, the union of friendship and the discussion of their social interests, blended with the gratification of ministering to the wants of the "inward man." Every delicacy of the season graced the festive board. The usual toasts were proposed and drunk with due honours by the learned and honourable body; and from all we can learn, the "feast of reason" and the "flow of soul" reigned triumphant. The party assembled numbered about thirty, amongst whom were Mr. Erle and Mr. Leake, treasurers of the Inner and Middle Temple; the Right Hon. Lord Kenyon; Sir Frederick Thesiger, M.P.; Sir Robert Comyn; Sir Gregory Lewin; Sir William Owen; Mr. Roebuck, M.P.; John Jervis, Esq. M.P.; John Wyatt, Esq. the "father" of the bar, a barrister of fifty-four years' standing.

ADMISSION OF ATTORNEYS.—The result of the examination of candidates for admission on the roll of attorneys in last Trinity Term shows a larger increase on that branch of the profession, 71 having passed examination, whilst four were postponed, and four who had given notice did not attend, and a large number failed to perfect their testimonial of services, besides which, one of the candidates for admission withdrew during the examination. Upon referring to the examination of the last Michaelmas, Hilary, Easter, and Trinity Terms, it appears that in Michaelmas 106, in Hilary 90, Easter 92, and Trinity Term 71 passed, shewing a total for the last four terms of 359. This number, we believe, includes some instances in which the examiners reported specially with reference to questions of service of clerkship, and which were submitted to the decision of the judges.

COUNSEL TO THE IRISH GOVERNMENT.—The office of counsel in London to the Irish Government has recently become vacant, in consequence of the death of Mr. O'Hanlon, its late possessor. The Government has declared its intention of conferring it upon an Irishman, called to the English bar, and resident in London. We understand that this limitation has considerably diminished the number of candidates for the vacant appointment; and that out of this number Mr. Perceval Banks, of Gray's-inn, who in 1838 published a very able pamphlet on the subject of controverted elections, is considered to stand the best chance of success.

APPEAL IN CRIMINAL CASES.—The new Bill to provide an appeal in criminal cases has recently been printed by order of the House of Commons, preparatory to its being brought in for a second reading, at which stage the fate of the measure, as far as the Lower House is concerned, will, in all probability, be decided. No special notice of opposition has yet been given. The Bill, which is under the management of Mr. R. Fitzroy Kelly and Mr. Richard Godson, the members for Cambridge and Kidderminster, contains twenty-one clauses. Any "defendant" [prisoner?] found guilty of any felony or misdemeanor at the Central Criminal Court, or before any judge of assize, oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery, &c. may move either of the superior courts of common law at Westminster, which are empowered to grant a rule nisi, in order that the verdict may be set aside and a new trial had; or to command that a verdict of "Not Guilty" shall be entered in lieu thereof, or that the judgment shall be arrested. The application for the rule nisi must, with certain exceptions, be made within the next eight days after the verdict appealed from. All orders of the superior court must be implicitly and punctually obeyed by sheriffs, gaolers, et hoc genus omne. Where a verdict of "Not Guilty" is entered, or the judgment is arrested, the defendant may be forthwith, upon service of an office copy of the rule, containing the order of the Court, be discharged out of custody, and vice versâ in the event of the verdict of "Guilty" being affirmed. The judge at the trial may reserve any point of law to be considered in a court at Westminster. The sentence of the Court below may be suspended, if notice of appeal be given. A bill of exceptions to the opinion and direction of the Court upon any trial may be tendered; and it further appears that a writ of error will lie to the House of Lords; so that, if we rightly understand the terms of the clause, the defendant or prisoner will have two distinct rights of appeal—one from the original verdict of "Guilty," and another from the judgment of the superior court at Westminster to the House of Lords, subject to certain restrictions. The defendant need not be present at the hearing of the motions in the courts at Westminster. For the purpose, moreover, of avoiding the expense and delay attending the removal of indictments and records, by writs of certiorari and writs of error, for the purpose of objecting to the sufficiency thereof, a provision is made, by clause 17, that any prosecutor or defendant in a case of felony, &c. may apply by motion to one of the courts at Westminster, upon production of a certified copy of the indictment on record, to quash such indictment or to reverse the judgment contained in the record. Every clause and provision of the Bill is to be construed "liberally and beneficially." No time is fixed for the Act to take effect; but the blank in clause 20 will, of course, be filled up in committee, in case the Bill should pass successfully through the terrible ordeal of the "second reading," at which stage the principle of the measure will be discussed.

This Bill proposes, perhaps, the most important concession to criminals that has yet been granted; inasmuch as even the "Prisoners' Counsel Bill," passed in 1836, was esteemed a vast boon to the multitudes periodically brought to the bar of justice; whereas the right of appeal to a court of law at Westminster, and afterwards by writ of error to the supreme tribunal, will afford a wealthy defendant two more chances of escape, in the event of his lawyer's exertions being incompetent to stave off a verdict of guilty in the first instance.

THE OLD BAILEY BAR.—We are informed that a meeting of the barristers who are in the habit of attending to do business in the Central Criminal Court took place at the beginning of the week in the robing-room at the Old Bailey. It was professedly held for the purpose of adopting resolutions with respect to the fees taken from persons (not attorneys) for the defence of prisoners, and for the regulation of certain points of practice which have brought scandal upon the profession. We are not able to give the particulars, as the meeting was strictly private; but we know the meeting was a numerous one, for none of the learned gentlemen who attend the Central Criminal Court were absent except three, who are known to be respectable.—Sunday Times.

OXFORD, TUESDAY.—RATING THE COLLEGE.—The guardians of the united parishes have, at a special meeting, held this afternoon, resolved by an unanimous vote to go on with the actions commenced against the University, for the purpose of compelling the various colleges and halls to pay their quota towards the support of the poor. Although the university has thrown every impediment in the way of bringing this important question to a settlement, it is now determined by the guardians that the first action against Exeter College shall be tried at the ensuing Oxford assizes, and, for the purpose of meeting the expenses attending it, they have also, this evening, made an extra rate. This may not be quite pleasing to a few of the rate-payers, who would allow the colleges to escape paying this just impost, but to a very large majority of them it is highly satisfactory; as, in the event of the guardians being successful, a vast amount of property will thus be brought into rating. Mr. Sergeant TALFOURD is retained by the guardians.

AGREEMENT STAMPS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—On reading the case of Brown v. Pegg, on the subject of "Stamps," in your last week's paper, I am induced to ask of the Profession at large, how it is possible to account for a decision so anomalous, with the fact staring us full in the face, that "mortgage-transfers," being a distinct class of deeds specifically charged as such, and therefore unquestionably clear of the general deed duty (which applies only to deeds not otherwise charged), and which instruments, as being so specifically charged, are moreover authorized, equally with an original mortgage or any other deed, to contain in them whatsoever may be incidental to their purpose—how, I repeat, is it possible, with this fact before us, and bearing in mind, also, that the modern Transfer Duties Act of 3 Geo. 4 repeals the previous progressive as well as ad valorem duties, without re-imposing any fresh progressive duty in cases of further money secured (as in Brown v. Pegg)—again and again do I ask, how, in the face of all this, it is possible to account for so anomalous a decision? the fact being that, instead of too little duty, there was actually 40s. too much on the instrument in question!

It would seem that the fact is completely lost sight of, that there is now no progressive duty on mortgage-transfers where further money is secured.

Your insertion of the above will oblige, Sir,

Yours truly,

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 1844.

THE OBNOXIOUS CLAUSE IN THE POOR LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

SOME two or three weeks since we directed the attention of the Profession to a clause which had been smuggled into the Poor Law Amendment Bill, permitting Clerks to Boards of Guardians to practise as Attorneys in all matters relating to the administration of the Poor Law.

The warning was not unheeded. The Law Societies in many parts of the country forthwith bestirred themselves; their remonstrances were heard, and the obnoxious provision has been modified to the extent of permitting Clerks to Unions to attend as Attorneys only at Petty and Special Sessions, and not at the General Sessions!!

This may satisfy the London Attorneys, and content the Law Institution; but surely it cannot, it will not, it must not, satisfy the Country Attorneys, of whom so large a number are engaged in parish business. They have a right to demand that the clause of which we complain should be entirely expunged. Nothing less than that will meet the justice of the case, nor should they rest until it is conceded.

And if it be asked why we insist so strenuously on a point which, as a question of mere pecuniary value, is but trifling, we reply, because it involves an important principle; because it sanctions a practice to which, once recognized, it would be impossible to assign limits; because it is an open violation of a right secured to the Profession by an Act of Parliament—a right for which its members have paid, not only in the price of their education, but in the heavy tax which the Legislature has imposed upon them before they can be admitted, and which it continues yearly to wring from them for the bare permission to practise.

It is in consideration of the privilege that the tax is continued: to invade that privilege is to violate the tacit compact upon which the tax is levied.

A statute has solemnly given to Attorneys, who have complied with its somewhat exacting provisions, the exclusive right of practising in all Courts of Justice. What is the proposed clause in the Poor Law Bill, but a virtual repeal of the protection afforded by the Attorneys and Solicitors Act—a shabby mode of evading a just and beneficial law?

And what reason is assigned for this fresh assault upon the Lawyers? Is it economy? If the parishes are to save by it so much as to make it a consideration to them, the greater the wrong done to the Profession from whom so much is to be taken. If, on the other hand, the saving to the parishes will be trifling, we ask if it be worth while, for a trifle, to invade a privilege given by the existing law, and produce a feeling of uncertainty and a sense of being subjected to ill-treatment through a numerous body of persons spread over the whole country? In the one case, it would be a grievous injustice, in the other, a gratuitous folly: in either, it should receive the most strenuous and resolute opposition.

The strong objection we feel to this clause does not proceed from a belief that it will, in itself, occasion any serious loss of income to the Profession. It is against the principle that we protest. Once let the point of the wedge be inserted, and ruder hands even than those of Sir James Graham may drive it home. If this year unqualified Clerks be permitted to practise as Attorneys at Petty Sessions, a clause next year will admit them to Quarter Sessions. The example would soon be followed. Other public bodies would find it convenient to make Attorneys of their officers, and the protection which was given to the Profession so lately as last year would gradually melt away. In proof of the danger of permitting the slightest invasion of the privilege the law has extended to the Attorneys, we have but to point to the objections to the amended Bill, drawn up by the vestry of St. Marylebone, and agreed to by delegates from the various metropolitan parishes under local Acts, and which have been already forwarded to every member of Parliament.

Thus they notice the 60th clause, that which is now the subject of consideration. We cite from their circular:—

"Clause 60.—Clerks and officers to boards constituted under the Poor Law Act may conduct proceedings on behalf of guardians before justices at petty or special ses. ns, although not certified attorneys, without incurring penalty.

"Objection.—This clause may be greatly improved, and rendered available to parishes under local Acts, by the insertion of the following words after the word 'Act,' in the last line of page 31, 'or any local Act;' and before the word 'petty,' in line 4, page 32, to insert the word 'quarter.'

In plain terms, they request the re-insertion of the word "Quarter" Sessions.

Have we said enough to rouse our readers to the importance of this subject? This is the first attempt to repeal the protecting provisions of the Attorneys Act. Let success attend it, and when shall the Profession hope to make a stand? The clause as it is, equally, with the clause as it was, is a practical admission that the business of an Attorney may be legally done by others than duly certificated Attorneys. Is not such an admission, under the sanction of a law, fraught with dangers which no exertion should be spared to destroy while yet they are in their infancy? We call upon the Law Societies to bestir themselves, and upon every member of the Profession to use his individual influence to procure the expunging of this most unfair provision from the Poor Law Amendment Act.

AGREEMENT STAMPS.

A NEW statute is not very attractive to the reader, and we have no doubt that not a few of our subscribers will pass without notice the chapter in our columns reprinting an Act of Parliament which came into operation on the 6th instant, materially affecting the stamps on agreements. As the subject is one of extreme importance to every practitioner, we deem it right in this more prominent part of the LAW TIMES to direct the attention of our readers to the alterations that have been effected, lest through inadvertance they should fall into fatal errors.

By statute 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, agreements were made chargeable with a stamp duty of 1*l.* when the subject-matter was of the value of 20*l.* and upwards. The effect of this heavy duty was practically to prevent the use of stamped agreements, for rather than pay so large a tax, persons preferred to take the chance of subsequent stamping in case of need. The Legislature has now prudently reduced the duty to 2s. 6d. a sum so trifling that none who make a serious agreement would hesitate to adopt the security of a stamp. To meet the continually occurring case of an agreement being required to be signed forthwith, and no stamp at hand, the Commissioners are, by the new Act, expressly required to stamp any agreement within fourteen days after it shall have been made, without payment of any penalty. After the expiration of fourteen days no agreement is to be stamped without payment of a penalty of 10*l.*

For the details of the statute we refer to the reprint of it in its proper place in our columns. The purpose of this notice is merely to apprize our readers of the recent change.

THE CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

A PARAGRAPH, taken from the daily papers, announces that a meeting of counsel practising at the Central Criminal Court has been held, for the purpose of adopting measures for putting a stop to the business of the vagabonds who lurk about the prisons and courts, and conduct, as attorneys, the defences of the unsuspecting prisoners, upon whom they practise the most grievous impositions.

A similar class of vagrants is to be found in every Assize town: they haunt the Quarter Sessions, and undoubtedly carry off a large portion of the business which properly belongs to the attorneys.

The mischief is a great one, not only to the profession, but to the public, and any honest efforts for its cure ought to be encouraged. We therefore thank the Bar of the Central Criminal Court, for having ventured to grapple with the disease.

We have not heard what is the remedy they propose; but it can be no other than unanimously to refuse to accept a brief from any but a certificated attorney, and not alone to be satisfied with the indorsement of an attorney's name, but to have a reasonable assurance that the indorsement is boná fide, and that the use of the name has not been lent to, or stolen by, the party giving it.

This is all that the Bar can do; the rest must be done by the Attorneys themselves. They are the parties injured by these practices; moreover, in their own hands is the remedy. Nine-tenths of the Bar may enter into such an honourable understanding and abide by it; but if there be a tenth who will not accede to it, the plan is frustrated, and the desires of the more respectable portion of the Bar are baffled.

But here the Attorneys can and ought to give their aid. If they would unanimously resolve, and make their resolution known, that they would not give a brief to any counsel who should accept a brief from any but an Attorney, the reform would be accomplished, for no support the unlicensed vagabonds could give would compensate for the certain withholding of briefs from the entire Profession.

The Law Societies should take an early opportunity of formally denouncing this discreditable class of non-professional haunters of the prisons; they should assert their intention to prosecute any person who may so practise; to punish any Attorney who shall permit his name to be used for such a purpose, by such a person, and declare that they will not give a brief to any counsel who may thereafter accept a brief from any person, not being an Attorney, or acting immediately and boná fide for an Attorney and not in any manner on his own account.

This would sweep away the entire vagabond race, to the infinite advantage of the Profession, the prisoners, and the public.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

ANOTHER specimen of these compositions is extracted from the Times of June 24th:—

"TO THE EMBARRASSED.—There are thousands of persons in this Metropolis, and elsewhere, who have struggled long against the force of misfortune, but few are aware that by a very recent Act all small traders owing debts not exceeding 300*l.* and all others owing to any amount, can be entirely raised from their difficulties at a small expense, and without bankruptcy. All such Mr. Weston begs will apply to him at 40, Basinghall-street."

We are half-inclined to keep a standing list of these un-professionals.

SHAM LAWYERS.

WE have received many more of the threatening letters. In hope that they may attract the notice of the Law Societies, and that the members of the Profession in their several neighbourhoods may keep an eye upon the writers, we continue to publish them. Here are two.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

THE second part of the PRACTICAL REPORTS was published yesterday, purposely for the convenience of the ensuing Sessions. The next part is very forward.

Repeated inquiries being made by the members as to when and how they shall forward their payments, perhaps the most convenient course will be to require a subscription of 1*l.* 1s. only, until some costly works are undertaken: that sum, on receipt, will be placed to the account of the subscriber, to be repaid to him in the publications of the society, as originally proposed. The transmission of 1*l.* 1s. will, therefore, be payment of the subscription from Midsummer last.

PRACTICE—PLEADING—EVIDENCE.

By Professor Carey.

Delivered at University College, London.

LECTURE VIII.

There is another proceeding which is sometimes taken in order to insure the appearance of the defendant, viz. outlawry on mesne process, which is an indirect proceeding, adopted with a certain fictitious view. This is now done only on a writ of distringas, in practice; formerly it was done on a writ of capias. If the defendant is not within the jurisdiction of the Court, and has no property that can be distrained, the ordinary mode of compelling his attendance will not avail. Here, as he cannot be found, the writ of summons is of no use: as no property of his can be found, a distringas cannot be executed. How, then, are you to touch him? In this case the plaintiff may proceed to outlaw the defendant; that is, to put him out of the protection of the law, so that he is incapable of suing: he forfeits his goods and chattels, and the profits of his lands. Originally, an outlaw was a man who, for some grievous offence, was put out of the pale of the law—an outcast from society. No man was outlawed, except for a felony. The power of outlawry was subsequently extended to all actions in which a writ of capias might issue; and as the power of arrest increased, the power of outlawry kept pace with it. The Uniformity of Process Act so far makes an alteration that it allows the plaintiff to proceed to outlaw the defendant on a writ of distringas, and since the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, this is the usual mode of proceeding; but it is provided that no one shall be subject to outlawry who was previously exempt therefrom. This includes members of Parliament and other persons who could not be taken under a capias before the Uniformity of Process Act. A defendant may be outlawed in a subsequent stage of the action, that is, if execution cannot be obtained against him. But we are now considering outlawry as a means to be taken in order to enforce an appearance. He proceeds for one or other of three purposes: first, to obtain satisfaction for his claim; secondly, to enable the plaintiff to prosecute his action. For this purpose the outlawry is a compulsory process—the defendant is deprived of all his rights; but in practice they will be restored to him, provided he puts the plaintiff in the same situation as if he had duly appeared to the action in the first instance. Thirdly, where an action is brought against several defendants, it may be necessary to outlaw one of them in order to enable the plaintiff to proceed against the rest. The plaintiff cannot proceed against a defendant until he has appeared, and at common law, you could not declare against any defendant who had appeared until all the defendants had appeared, or such as failed to appear had been outlawed. Thus, where a suit arose on a contract made by the plaintiff with more persons than one: for instance, in trade;—as where A and B, carrying on a partnership together, had incurred a debt, and they were sued for the recovery of that debt: there, the contract being made by the defendants jointly, the action was brought against both, and the plaintiff could not declare until they had appeared; and if one was abroad or kept out of the way, the plaintiff could not declare against the other until that one had been outlawed. This rule has been modified by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42. If one of the defendants is a certificated bankrupt, or has obtained his discharge under the Insolvent Act, he need not be joined in the action; nor can any advantage be taken of the non-joinder of any defendant, unless it is shewn that he is within the jurisdiction of the Court. So that if a contract is made with two persons, and one of them is out of England, the plaintiff may commence an action against the other if he pleases, because no objection can be taken to this except on shewing that the person left out is within the jurisdiction of the court. If he is absent, the plea of abatement fails. So that if one is abroad you may sue the one who is at home; but if you sue both, you cannot appear against one until the other is outlawed. On this being done, the plaintiff may continue the original action against the defendant who remains within the jurisdiction of the court, and if the one who is abroad comes to obtain a reversal of the outlawry, he may be allowed to do so, by paying the costs and appearing to a new action brought against him by the plaintiff. Where the plaintiff intends to proceed to outlawry, he obtains a distringas in the manner before described. The only difference in the form of distringas is in the notice subscribed; that in the one, the defendant is warned that the plaintiff may cause an appearance to be entered for the defendant, and in the other he is warned that the plaintiff may cause proceedings to be taken to outlaw him. (See 9 Bingham, 464.) On this distringas the plaintiff is not at liberty to enter an appearance, and the distringas can only be resorted to when the defendant is out of the kingdom, and cannot be served with the other process. If the distringas is returned non est inventus and nulla bona, then, provided there were fifteen days between the delivery of the writ to the sheriff and the return, you may sue out an exigi facias directed to the sheriff of the county in which the former process issued,(a) and a writ of proclamation directed to the sheriff of the county in which the defendant was dwelling, the one commanding him to "exact" or "require" the appearance of the defendant at five successive county courts, the other, to make three proclamations for him to surrender. If the defendant does not appear, he is declared an outlaw. The Uniformity of Process Act (sect. 5) requires the first writ of exigent and proclamation to bear teste on the day of the return of the distringas. When a man is outlawed, he may be arrested by a writ of capias utlagatum, and by a special capias utlagatum, the property may be inquired of by a jury summoned by the sheriff, and seized into the king's hands. Upon this, the plaintiff may apply to the Court of Exchequer for a writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him, as the case may require, to sell the goods of the defendant, to levy the profits of his land, or to recover debts due to him; the money, in form, belonging to the Crown, but the defendant may obtain it on application. If the proceeds of the execution do not exceed 50*l*., the Court will, on motion, order the sheriff to pay over the amount to the plaintiff; if it is above that sum he must petition the Lords of the Treasury. Whether the defendant is arrested or not, he may in general obtain a reversal of the outlawry. A writ of error is the original common law process, but it is both dilatory and expensive; and an outlawry may be now reversed on application to the Court on motion, upon such equitable terms as the Court shall think fit. The ground on which outlawry proceeds is this: here is a gross contempt of the justice of the country: the defendant is publicly called on to appear in the county court of his own county, and at the parish church; if he does not appear, he is guilty of a contempt of justice of the country. For this he is outlawed, and cannot again obtain the benefit of the law without coming and setting the outlawry aside. Supposing him to have been abroad innocently or accidentally at the time when the steps are taken against him, so that he was not aware of them, he is, in fact, guilty of no contempt; and according, therefore, to the historical theory of outlawry, if a man is abroad at the time he is outlawed, he has been guilty of no contempt;—and, by shewing that the fact was so, the outlawry may be reversed; so that the fact of his being abroad is sufficient for the outlawry being reversed. Now, practically, outlawry is not taken to punish a man for being in contempt, it is only taken as a means to procure his appearance, and the courts will not allow a man to proceed to outlawry if he can be served in any other way whatever. A man is abroad: you want to proceed against him: it may be necessary to do so: he is possessed of certain property which you cannot touch: the six years of the Statute of Limitations may have nearly expired, and you must proceed against him: you commence an action, and outlaw him. From that time he never can acquire any civil rights, except by setting the outlawry aside, and putting himself in the same position in respect to you as if he had appeared to the action in the first instance. In the practical operation of outlawry, it is not allowed to be applied unless the person is abroad, and the theoretical ground of it is, that if he is abroad it may be set aside. Putting these two things together, you obtain this cumbersome machinery. You apply for it on the ground that he cannot be found at home, and if he sets it aside, afterwards, it is on the ground that, as he was abroad, he is guilty of no contempt, still it answers your purpose, because it is not allowed to be done except on terms. If the plaintiff has abused the process of the court by proceeding to outlaw the defendant, knowing that he is represented by an attorney in this country, the outlawry will be set aside, and the plaintiff made to pay the costs. That was done in the case Pigou v. Drummond (1 Bing. N. C. 354): the mere fact of the defendant being abroad is sufficient to entitle him to a reversal of the outlawry, even though he went abroad on purpose to defeat the plaintiff's claim. (Bryan v. Wagstaff, 5 B. & C. 315.) There it was held that, the defendants being abroad, even though it was fraudulent, was a ground why the outlawry should be set aside, because, though fraudulent, it was not an open contempt of justice in not appearing when called for.

In ordinary cases, the Court, as we have seen, will reverse the outlawry where any irregularity has taken place in the proceedings, such as, simply, where the party was abroad; but the Court will not do so without imposing such equitable terms as it thinks fit. The Court requires the defendant to pay all costs, and to put the plaintiff in the same situation as if he had appeared in the first instance. Before the 1 & 2 Vict. in all bailable actions he was required to find bail; now, unless he is about to quit England, it is sufficient to enter an appearance only. The Common Law Commissioners have expressed themselves in strong terms against this cumbrous, expensive, and fictitious machinery. They say—"It is one of those abuses which are prejudicial to the rights of both contending parties; it inflicts on the plaintiff the evils of delay and expense, and it subjects the defendant to surprise and oppression." The proceedings of "execution" and "proclamation," though extremely public, according to the notions and habits of our ancestors, may be now taken behind the back of the defendant, and he has in general no previous notice that the suit has been commenced, and may probably have no opportunity of becoming acquainted with the fact; any man out of England in business or pleasure may find himself outlawed on his return. Selden tells us, in his Table-Talk, that he once outlawed the King of Spain for not making his appearance in obedience to process. The Uniformity of Process Act, founded on the Report of the Common Law Commissioners, seems to consider outlawry as a proceeding doomed at some future time to make way for a better, as the authority which it gives to proceed to law is limited by these significant words: "It shall be lawful until otherwise provided for." No other provision has been made, and it still remains as it was.

The object of process is, technically, to insure the appearance of the defendant; to enable the plaintiff to put the defendant in such a position that he is enabled to proceed against him. We then come to the pleadings. In the old language of the law, plea is synonymous with action. This is the meaning of the word, where a Court of Record is said to hold pleas, or to have conusance tenere placita, or cognitionem placitorum. Here the word placita means actions. So likewise in the ancient forms, the defendant was summoned or attached (as you may see at the commencement of the declaration in N. C. 6, in Williams' Saunders), as the case might be, to answer the plaintiff, of "a plea of debt," "a plea of trespass," and others; hence, also, the division of actions into common pleas (pleas between ordinary individuals) and pleas of the Crown—prosecutions to which the Crown is a party. From the word placitum (plea meaning the action generally) you have the word implead, which means to commence an action against a person. In modern language, the words plea and pleading are applied to the mutual altercation of the parties; in it's most limited sense, the plea signifies the answer which, in civil cases, the defendant makes to the statement or declaration of the plaintiff; in criminal cases it is the answer he makes to the indictment. The prisoner, in criminal prosecutions, pleads guilty, or not guilty. He may plead divers other matters; sometimes by plea in abatement, of which we have an instance in the case of Mr. O'Connell. Such pleas are not of very frequent occurrence; but there is an instance of a plea in abatement in criminal proceedings in the 27th vol. of the State Trials, in which the defendants plead in abatement that one of the persons on the grand jury was an alien. The word pleading is sometimes applied to every statement of facts subsequent to the declaration of the plaintiff, made by either of the parties; and this has been used in contradistinction to demurrer, which is not a statement of facts, but an exception taken in point of law. Again, sometimes pleading is understood to comprehend every step in the altercation taken by either party, including as well the declaration of the plaintiff as the plea of the defendant, and all the subsequent statements of the parties in the issue, whether an issue in law or an issue in fact. It is in this sense we talk of the science of pleading, and it is in this sense of the word that that branch of professional men who draw the statements are termed pleaders, sometimes special pleaders.

The plaintiff makes a statement of his case; this is called the declaration: the defendant makes a statement of his answer; this is called the plea. For instance, the plaintiff complains of the defendant, that he has "assaulted and beaten" him; he puts that in legal phraseology, and that is the declaration. The defendant says he is not guilty of that with which he is charged; that is, a plea of not guilty. There is a fact asserted, on the one hand, and denied on the other; and whereas, in this case, the answer consists of a direct denial of the case of the plaintiff, or a direct denial to any of the facts necessary to support his case, the point in dispute is ascertained. Or, take a case in which a person complains of another that he has taken his property; an action of trespass de bonis asportatis: the defendant pleads that the goods are not the property of the plaintiff; and that he does not deny taking the goods, he merely denies that these goods are the plaintiff's. He does not deny the whole case of the plaintiff, but he does give a direct denial to one of the facts necessary to support his case. The pleadings have brought the parties to an issue, as it is termed—the point in dispute is ascertained, and the question is ready for trial, and the Court has to ascertain on which side the truth lies. But if the defendant, instead of denying the plaintiff's case or any material part of it, admits the facts to be true, but alleges some further fact to shew that the plaintiff never had a real claim at all; or, that whatever claim he had, it has ceased to exist, the pleadings are continued one stage further. Thus an action is brought for goods sold and delivered; the defendant does not deny that he had the goods, but he pleads payment: he says he paid all the sums due in respect of the goods. By this means the pleadings are carried one step further. In answer to the new fact brought forward by the defendant, the plaintiff is called on to reply. Sometimes he denies the fact. For instance, the plaintiff says, "You owe me so much for goods." "I have paid for them," says the defendant; and in his replication the plaintiff says, "You did not pay me;" that is, he denies the fact, and thus brings the matter to an issue. Sometimes he does not deny the fact alleged by defendant, but he in his turn alleges some new fact in answer to it; thus: an action is brought against the defendant for goods sold and delivered; the defendant does not deny having the goods, but he says, "I was an infant at the time you supplied them to me." It is then for the plaintiff to reply, and he may say, "You were not an infant." If he does, a fact is asserted on the one hand and denied on the other. The point in dispute is ascertained; or he may say, "True, you were an infant, but the goods that were supplied to you were such as were suited and were necessary to your condition in life." There he admits the fact of infancy, but asserts another fact, to obviate what would have been otherwise a legal inference from it. The new fact alleged by the plaintiff calls for an answer from the defendant; and so the altercation proceeds until the end. In the process of these altercations, where one party admits a fact alleged by his opponent, and answers him by an allegation of some other fact, he is said to "confess and avoid;" where he denies that which is asserted, he is said to traverse. In an action brought for goods sold and delivered, the defendant pleads he was "never indebted:" he traverses the debt; that is a denial of the fact: or if he does not do that, but pleads he was an infant when he had the goods, he confesses, and avoids the consequences of his confession by stating a new fact. The new fact is, that although he had the goods, he was an infant, and so not answerable for the price. Then the plaintiff is called upon to reply; he may say, "You were not an infant;" if he does, he traverses the fact set up by the defendant—he traverses the infancy—he denies it. There is a fact asserted on the one hand, and denied on the other. On the other hand, he may confess and avoid it; that is, admitting the defendant was an infant, but avoiding the consequence of that confession by saying that the things supplied were necessary: he confesses the infancy, but avoids the effect of it by shewing another fact, namely, that the things were necessary. Whenever the pleadings come to a traverse—when that which has been asserted by one party is denied by the other, the party that traverses the allegation of his opponent concludes to the country—that is, he states his readiness to submit the question to be tried by a jury; and if his opponent supports his statement, he does the like. The issue which I have now spoken of is an issue of fact. The question raised for decision is the existence or non-existence of the fact on which issue is taken. The fact must be proved before the jury, and found by their verdict.

But if the defendant, on examining the declaration of the plaintiff, finds that the facts which it discloses are not sufficient to support the action, and that he is therefore not called on to make any answer to it by way of plea, he demurs: the effect of which is to admit the facts contained in the declaration, and to submit to the Court that they are insufficient to support the plaintiffs' case, and that he must therefore fail on his own shewing. A demurrer may be made in any stage of the proceedings. Thus, if the defendant states matters in his plea which the plaintiff conceives to be no legal answer to his a tion, he demurs to the plea, and says it is not sufficient in law, and the question is thus submitted to the Court. If the facts that are set forth in his defence are deemed insufficient by the Court, judgment will be given for the plaintiff. These proceedings originally took place in open court, and being delivered either by the party or his advocate, a minute of the proceedings and other steps taken in the cause was contemporaneously entered on the parchment roll. This practice is supposed to have continued down to the middle of the reign of Edward the Third. The first departure from this probably was that the pleader no longer made his statements vivâ voce, but still continued to enter it on the parchment roll, as if it had been so made. By this fiction the contemporaneous presence of both parties became unnecessary. One party entered his statement of record as if it had been delivered, and the other did not hear it, of course, but he consulted the record to ascertain what his adversary had alleged. Some light is thrown on this subject by the present practice in the Sheriff's Court in London. The pleadings are merely written in the first instance on parchment, and that constitutes the record itself. In the superior courts it is supposed that the practice of entering the statements on the roll in the first instance was not continued later than the reign of Edward the Fourth, about the time the custom was introduced of writing the pleadings first on paper, and delivering them to the other parties, or filing them in court and deferring the actual entry of them on record to a subsequent stage of the proceedings. This is the present practice. Still it is requisite for you to understand that the pleadings that now only exist in writing are supposed to be the minutes of statements orally delivered. Supposing it to be a minute of what has been done, you would suppose it to be in the past tense, or any tense rather than the present; but if you recollect it was supposed to be said in open court, and taken down in writing by the officer of the court immediately, and what is now written is only a substitute for it, the same form being preserved, you immediately see the reason why the third person is used.

The alternate altercations of the parties, as they originally took place in open Court, were made only in term time; the written pleadings, which were supposed to represent these oral statements, were also required to be made, or at least to purport to be made in term. By the Uniformity of Process Act it is provided, that all proceedings to judgment and execution may be had in term or in vacation; and by a rule of court the declaration is required to be dated on the day of the month and year on which it actually filed and delivered. By a subsequent rule this regulation is extended to all subsequent pleadings; so that, by the joint effects of the statute and the rules of court, the pleadings are now carried on without any reference to the term.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

The Law and Practice in Proceedings on the Crown Side of the Court of Queen's Bench, comprising the Alterations and Rules made and adopted in pursuance of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 20, and an Appendix of Forms. By Standish Grove Grady and Colley Harman Scotland, of the Middle Temple, Esqrs. Barristers-at-law. London, 1844. Shaw and Sons.

The opening to the Profession of the practice on the Crown side of the Queen's Bench, which was effected by the Act of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 20, intituled "An Act for abolishing certain offices on the Crown Side of the Court of Queen's Bench, and for Regulating the Crown Office," has occasioned a demand for an efficient guide to that practice. Two volumes are already in the field, offering to supply that demand, and Mr. Archbold has announced a third.

Of the two that are before the Profession, there can be no hesitation in giving the preference to the volume which has been prepared by the joint labours of Mr. Grady and Mr. Scotland. In every attractive feature of a law-book,—methodical arrangement, patient research, pains-taking accuracy, copious collection of forms, and elaborate index,—it far surpasses its predecessor, and must be the authority on the subject on which it treats, at all events until a better work appears; and we should find it difficult to say in what department considerable improvements could be introduced.

The practitioner will probably be startled when a volume of nearly 600 closely printed pages is put into his hands as the practice of the court which has just been opened to him, and he may be half-disposed to think that, if so much must be mast ed, the business is not worth the price of the admission. But it will be found, upon inspection, that the authors have not limited their task to the practice, but have included the law relating to the subjects that come within the purview of the Crown-office.

Criminal Information is the first topic discussed, and having examined the nature of this proceeding, in what cases it is filed ex officio, and in what by the Master of the Crown-office, the various offences in which it is usually employed are successively examined; full instructions are then given as to the forms to be observed in applying for it, and the conduct of it afterwards to its result.

In the same convenient order are treated the subjects of Indictments and Presentments; of Quo Warranto Informations; of Certiorari; of the Writs of Contumace Capiendo, and Excommunicato Capiendo; of Habeas Corpus; of the traverse to an Inquisition on a Commission de Lunatico Inquirendo; of Mandamus; of the Issue on a sci. fa. to repeal Letters Patent; of Articles of the Peace; of Attachment; of Outlawry; of Recognizance; of Writ of Error.

An Appendix collects a number of forms, both general and special, the greater portion of which were obtained from the records in the office.

Hence it will appear how wide a range of subjects this volume embraces; how important they are, and how continually they occur in practice. To exhibit the style and manner of the authors we select some passages which are likely to convey information of utility to the reader.

PROCEEDINGS TO OBTAIN A MANDAMUS.

"Of the time for making the application.] The writ of mandamus must be applied for within a reasonable time after the commission of the grievance. (R. v. Stamford Canal Company, 1 M. & S. 32: see also Reg. v. Leeds and Liverpool Nav. Canal Company, 11 Ad. & E. 316; R. v. Lancashire (JJ.), 12 East, 366; Reg. v. West Riding, 6 Jer. 506; and see Reg. v. Ellis, 2 D. P. C., N. S. 961.) A mandamus to examine witnesses abroad must be moved for as early as possible after issue joined. (Brydges v. Fisher, 4 M. & Scott, 458.) So, the judgment of ouster must be actually signed, before you move for a mandamus to proceed to an election upon such judgment. (R. v. West Looe Corporation, 3 Burr. 1386.)

"The motion for a mandamus to put a party's name on the burgess-roll, must be made before the end of the term then next following the revision of such roll. (7 Wm. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 2[illegible])

"The writ of mandamus being a prerogative writ, and not a writ of right, the application for it is an application to the discretion of the court. (R. v. Excise Commissioners, 2 T. R. 385.)" The motion is made in open court by the party's counsel; and such motion must be founded upon the affidavit of the party injured. There is no notice necessary previous to an application for a mandamus. (R. v. Jones, 2 Stra. 704.)

" The affidavit.] The affidavit must be entitled in the 'Queen's Bench,' if made in the country; and in such case must also be described as having been sworn before a commission of the Queen's Bench (R. v. Hare, 13 East, 189; R. v. Jones, supra); but if sworn in court or before a judge of the Queen's Bench, it need not be entitled in the Queen's Bench. (R. v. Hare, supra.) Where the affidavit for a mandamus to the trustees of a turnpike-road was entitled, 'The trustees of the H. roads, on the prosecution of the Earl of Radnor:' Held bad, and could not be read. (Reg. v. Trustees of Harnham Roads, 5 Jur, 408.)

" The affidavit should contain a precise statement of facts, and the allegations must be positive. (See R. v. Sargent, 5 T. R. 466.) It must shew that there has been a precedent; distinct demand of the specific thing, the performance of which is the object of the mandamus, and a refusal of performance or conduct equivalent thereto. (Reg. v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 7 Jur. 233.) On an application for a mandamus to execute an instrument, simple in its nature, it is not necessary to allege in the affidavit that it was tendered for execution; but if there be any thing peculiar in the instrument, a tender, and demand of execution would be necessary. (Reg. v. Kendall, 1 Ad. & E. N. S. 385, n. c.) It must also appear the applicant is entitled to the relief he prays (R. v. Bishop of Oxford, 7 East, 345; and see Bull. N. P. tit. Mandamus); and that he complied with all the forms necessary to constitute his right. (R. v. Jotham, 3 T. R. 577; R. v. Clear, 4 B. & C. 899.) It must also state plainly in what character the defendants are to act. (R. v. Looe, 3 B. & C. 683.) On an application to admit to a fellowship in right of relationship to the founder, the statutes, or sworn copies of them, must be produced. (R. v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 7 Mod. 220.) On motion to restore one to an office, an affidavit that he once enjoyed it is unnecessary, as that fact may be stated in the return. (R. v. Cutlers' Company, Ca. temp. Hard. 129.) Where the application is for a mandamus, to admit or to be sworn into office, the fact of election should be positively stated. (Bull. N. P. 200; and see R. v. Harwood, 2 East, 177.) Where the application is for a mandamus to appoint overseers, it must be expressly sworn, that the place in question actually is a ville, or so reputed. (R. v. JJ. of Bedfordshire, Cald. 157; R. v. JJ. of Peterborough, id. 238.)

" If the affidavits of the applicant omit to state a material fact, the deficiency may be supplied by reading the affidavits of the defendant. (R. v. Mein, 3 T. R. 596. See tit. Quo. War. Information, p. 120.) Where a rule for a mandamus had been discharged, the affidavits being imperfect, and a subsequent rule obtained by the same parties, on the same ground, on amended affidavits, the court refused to hear the second application upon the merits, and discharged the second rule also, with costs. (Reg. v. Pickles, 12 Law J. N. S. 40.)

" If more than one defendant, their names should be mentioned in the jurat, and the place and county where the affidavit is sworn. The rule of Reg.-gen. H. T. 2 W. 4, s. 6, as to swearing affidavits before the attorney in the cause, does not apply to proceedings on the Crown side of the court. (Reg. v. Mizen, 1 D. P. C., N. S. 865.)

" Motion and Rule.] The affidavits, when prepared and briefed, are delivered to counsel to move in open court for a rule, which is either nisi in the first instance, or absolute. It may, however, be observed, that the court will not grant a rule in the alternative for a mandamus or a quo warranto (Reg. v. Mayor of Leeds, 11 Ad. & E. 512; 5 Jur. 548); and a rule to shew cause why one or more writs of mandamus should not issue as an improper form of rule. (Reg. v. Mayor of Bridgenorth, 10 Ad. & E. 66; 3 Jur. 384.) The court will not permit a rule nisi for a mandamus, and a quo warranto, to be discussed together (Reg. v. Mayor of Winchester, 7 Ad. & E. 215); and a subsisting mayor de facto must always be a party to the rule for a mandamus to elect a mayor. (R. v. Banks, 1 W. Bl. 445.) But it is not necessary to specify the particular person to whom a mandamus should be directed. (Reg. v. Corporation of Carmarthen, 4 Jur. 365.)

" By statute 1 Wm. 4, c. 21, s. 4, the court may, upon application for any writ of mandamus (other than such as relate to the offices and franchises provided for by statute 9 Ann, c. 20), make rules and orders, calling not only upon the person to whom such writ may be required to issue, but also all other persons having or claiming any interest in the matter of such writ and payment of the costs of the application, and upon appearance, or in default of appearance, to exercise all such powers and authorities, and make all such rules and orders applicable to the case as are or may be given by any Act passed or to be passed during this present session of Parliament, &c. (See also 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 58.)

" When more than two magistrates at petty sessions take part in a decision, it is not necessary that they should all be included in the rule; but should two be selected, or [illegible] be omitted for any improper purpose, the court will [illegible]. (Reg. v. Ellis, 2 D. P. C., N. S. 361.)

" The court seldom grants a mandamus without giving the party to whom it is prayed a day, to shew cause against it. (2 Keb. 243; pl. 195.) Where it is to restore one who has been removed, they will first grant a rule to shew cause why such a writ should not issue. (Bull. N. P. 199.) It is a rule nisi in those cases where a long-continued right is sought to be disputed. (R. v. Citizens of Chester, 1 M. & S. 102.)

" The rule will it seems be granted absolute in the first instance, when a corporate officer holds over, or when an actual vacancy has occurred from death. (R. v. Mayor of Truro, 2 Chit. R. 257.) So, for a mandamus to the archdeacon to administer the oath of office to a churchwarden, where there is no rival candidate, and no reason assigned for the refusal to administer the oath. (R. v. Lichfield and Coventry Archdeacon, 5 Nev. & M. 42.) So, for a mandamus to swear in a chapelwarden, where there is a dispute between the curate and the sequestrator, as to who should appoint, and each has appointed. (Ex parte Penruddock, 1 Har. & W. 347.) So, to churchwardens, to swear in overseers of the poor. (Reg. v. Manchester Churchwardens, 7 D. P. C. 707.) So, to admit to the freedom of a corporation. (R. v. Mayor of Coventry, 3 Doug. 236.) So, to the jailor, to give up the body of a debtor, dead within the jail; it appearing that he refused to do so, until a debt owing by deceased for his maintenance was paid. (Re Bailiff of Wakefield, 2 Ad. & E., N. S. 246.)

" Where a rule nisi has been obtained, it must be drawn up at the Crown-office, and a copy served upon the parties mentioned in such rule, before nine o'clock at night (R. H. 2 Wm. 4, r. 50); but personal service need not be effected; although it is better in all cases to do so, and at the same time to shew the original rule. Service need not be made on the clerk of the peace, it is sufficient if served on the justices whose decision is complained against. (R. v. Tucker, 4 B. & C. 545.)

" If an officer de facto or other parties be omitted, whose rights will be directly called in question, the rule nisi can be amended by the insertion of their names, and the rule will be good on a new service. (R. v. Banks, 3 Burr. 1452; 1 Bl. R. 455; Bull. N. P. 200.)

" In order to make the rule absolute, an affidavit of the service of the rule nisi, intituled and sworn as before, must be made and delivered with a brief to counsel, to move for that purpose.

PROCEEDINGS TO OBTAIN A CERTIORARI.

" Of the proceedings to obtain a certiorari.] The mode of applying for the writ of certiorari is regulated by various statutes. By the first of these, the 5 & 6 Wm. & M. c. 11, s. 2, it is provided, that in term time no writ of certiorari whatsoever, at the prosecution of any party indicted, be hereafter granted, awarded, or directed, out of the Court of King's Bench, to remove any indictment of trespass or misdemeanor, before trial had, from before the said justices in the said courts of general or quarter sessions of the peace, unless such certiorari shall be granted or awarded upon motion of counsel, and by rule of court made for the granting thereof, before the judge or judges of the said Court of King's Bench, sitting in open court. And by sec. 4, it is further provided, that in vacation writs of certiorari may be granted by any of the justices of the Court of Queen's Bench, whose names shall be endorsed thereon, and also the name of the party at whose instance the same is granted. (See 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, extending the jurisdiction of a single judge.) The provisions of this statute have been extended to the case of private prosecutors, by the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 33, s. 1; by which, after reciting the expediency of preventing private prosecutors of indictments and presentments from vexatiously removing them from inferior courts into the Queen's Bench, provides, that from and after the passing of the Act, no writ of certiorari shall issue from the Court of Queen's Bench at Westminster, for removing into that court any indictment or presentment from any court of session, assize, oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery, or any other court, at the instance of the prosecutor or any other person (except his Majesty's Attorney-General), without motion first made in the said court, or before some judge of that court, and leave obtained to remove such indictment or presentment, in the same manner as similar motions may now be made and leave given, when such application is made on the part of the defendants, any law to the contrary, &c. The above enactments are confined to the cases of of indictments and presentments; but the statute 13 Geo. 2, c. 18, s. 5, provides, that in cases of conviction, judgments, orders, &c. there must not only be a motion for a certiorari, but such motion must be made within six calendar months next after such conviction, &c. The motion or application for a writ under the foregoing enactments, must be supported by an affidavit. (Reg. v. Southampton Railway Company, 2 D. P. C., N. S. 53.)

" Affidavits.] In order to remove an indictment, the defendant (and now the prosecutor, by 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 33, supra) must make an affidavit, stating the grounds upon which his application is founded. (R. v. Eaton, 2 T. R. 89; Reg. v. Southampton Railway Company, supra.) Except where the Attorney-General applies on behalf of a revenue-officer or other defendant, in which case no affidavit will be requisite. (R. v. Lewis, 4 Burr. 2458; R. v. Stannard, 4 T. R. 161; 1 East, 303, n. d.) On the motion of the Attorney-General for a certiorari to remove an indictment, the right of the Crown having been mentioned by him to be in dispute, an affidavit is required from the defendant, according to the 5 W. & M., that the freehold is in question. (R. v. Burgess, 1 Ld. Ken. 135.) Where a certiorari is moved for, to bring up the depositions against a person charged with felony, in order to have him bailed in the country, an affidavit that he cannot afford to be brought up by habeas corpus, is not necessary. (R. v. Gregory, 1 Wol. P. C. 4; 4 Jur. 1015.) The Court will not grant a certiorari to remove a conviction under 52 G. 3, c. 93, for using a dog and gun without a certificate, on the ground that the jurisdiction does not appear on the face of the conviction, without an affidavit negativing the jurisdiction. (R. v. Long, 1 M. & R. 139.)

" Affidavits may be used in support of the motion for a certiorari, in order to determine whether the justices or sessions had jurisdiction. (Reg. v. JJ. of Cheshire, 8 Ad. & E. 398; 1 P. & D. 91; R. v. JJ. of Cumberland, 4 Ad. & E. 695; R. v. St. James's, Westm. 2 Ad. & E. 241; R. v. Parish of Great Marlow, 2 East, 244; R. v. Somersetshire, 5 B. & C. 816; R. v. JJ. of West Riding of Yorkshire, 5 B. & C. 818, n; R. v. Yorkshire, 5 T. R. 629; R. v. Bucks, 3 East, 342; R. v. Overseers of Bridgwater, Cowp. 130; R. v. Wakefield et al. 2 Ld. Ken. 164.)

" In moving for a rule nisi for a certiorari, it is irregular to entitle the affidavits on which such motion is founded in any cause; and if they are so entitled, they cannot be read. (Ex parte Nohro, 1 B. & C. 267; see Franks v. Wicks, 9 D. P. C. 489; 4 Jur. 341.) The affidavits on moving for a rule to quash a writ of certiorari, on the ground that it had issued improvidently, should not be entitled in a cause. (Reg. v. Inhabitants of Gilberdike, 8 Jur. 79.) The affidavit must set forth in certain and positive terms, the special grounds on which it is sought to remove the proceedings below, and such as the court will deem sufficient. Thus, an affidavit stating that the defendants controverted the title to certain tithes, and also, that the title to the tithes was then, and at the time of making the said affidavit, really in question, does not sufficiently shew the title to be in question, in order to remove an order of justices upon some Quakers, by certiorari, according to stat. 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 34, s. 4, and 1 Geo. 1, c. 62. (R. v. Wakefield, 1 Burr. 488; 2 Ld. Ken. 164.) So the affidavit in support of a motion to bring up the inquisition of a compensation jury, must swear positively to defects in the inquisition. (R. v. Manchester and Leeds Railway Company, 8 Ad. & E. 413; 2 Jur. 857.) If the objection be to the form of the inquisition, an exact copy should be set out, or it should be sworn that the deponent could not procure a copy; and he should in the latter case swear positively on information and belief. It is not enough to swear that he 'objects' that the inquisition does not contain requisites pointed out. (Id.) Under the statute 13 Geo. 2, c. 18, s. 5, the party suing forth the writ should be identified in the affidavit with the party who gave the notice; and the justices to whom notice was given with those who made the order. (Reg. v. How, 11 Ad. & E. 159, S. C. nom.; Reg. v. JJ. of Shrewsbury, 1 Wol. P. C. 61.) In the case of a conviction, on the face of which it appears that the justice may have no jurisdiction, or, having jurisdiction, may have omitted to set it forth, a clause in the statute, taking away the certiorari, will have effect, unless the jurisdiction is denied by affidavit (R. v. Long, 1 M. & Ry. 136); and so, if the proceeding, though somewhat informal, be manifestly under the Act which takes away the certiorari. (R. v. Cassen, 3 D. & R. 36.)

" Of the motion and rule.] The requisite affidavits being prepared, the attorney for the party applying for the writ, sends them with a brief to counsel, endorsed to move (as to the time when this motion must be made in certain cases) for a rule to shew cause why a certiorari should not issue, &c.; or for a rule absolute, as the case may require.

" Upon hearing the affidavits in support of the motion, the court or judge will either grant or refuse the application, at their or his discretion. (Reg. v. Manchester and Leeds Railway Company, 8 Ad. & E. 413.) If the application be refused, in consequence of the insufficiency of the affidavits, it cannot be renewed on amended affidavits. (Id.) If the application be granted by the court, it is either a rule to shew cause, or absolute in the first instance. It is a rule nisi only, where a judge's fiat or order for a certiorari to issue in vacation is granted. (R. v. Chipping Sodbury, 3 Nev. & M. 104.) The rule for certiorari, to remove an indictment for a felony is nisi only; but in the case of misdemeanors, and where the sessions have made an order subject to a special case, it is absolute in the first instance. (Reg. v. Spencer, 8 D. P. C. 127.)

" It is a rule nisi in the first instance, for a certiorari to remove proceedings of commissions of sewers. (Anon. 2 Chit. R. 137.) So, for removing an indictment for non-repair of a road, from an inferior jurisdiction. (R. v. Inhabitants of [illegible], 3 D. P. C. [illegible])

It is a rule absolute in the first instance, for a certiorari to remove a record from an inferior jurisdiction. (Pawsey v. Gooday, 3 D. P. C. 605.) So, for a certiorari under 19 Geo. 3, c. 70, s. 4; and the rule applies to all cases, where the defendant removes himself and his effects, out of the inferior jurisdiction. (Knowles v. Lynch, 2 D. P. C. 623.) So, to remove the proceedings from the Brighton Court of Requests, in order to ground a motion for a stay of such proceedings. (Franks v. Wicks, 1 Wol. P. C. 2.)

"Where a rule nisi is granted upon a motion made in court, the attorney for the party obtaining it draws up the rule with the master in the Crown-office; and a copy of such rule should then be served on the opposite party, before nine o'clock at night. (R. H. 2 W. 4, r. 50.) Previous to the appointed day, the brief should be re-delivered to counsel, with an affidavit of the service of the rule nisi, to move to make the rule absolute.

"Where an application for a certiorari to a judge at chambers became necessary, the invariable practice has been for the attorney of the party applying, to lay the necessary affidavits before such judge; and if, upon reading the affidavits, he should so think fit, the judge granted a fiat under his signature. (Anon. Comb. 88; Reg. v. White, Holt, 132; 1 Salk. 150; 3 Salk. 80.) The fiat was then taken to the Crown-office, and upon it the writ of certiorari issued immediately; but as in the late case of R. v. Chipping Sodbury (3 Nev. & M. 104), the court held, 'that the rule for the certiorari cannot be granted out of term, absolutely in the first instance,' it would seem, that if the old practice be now adopted, the writ may be set aside for irregularity, and that the order on the affidavit would now be nisi only in the first instance; on application, however, it has been ascertained that the practice in this respect remains uncertain.

"Shewing cause.] If it be intended to shew cause against the rule, the attorney procures an office copy of the rule, and of the affidavit upon which it was granted (Reg. v. Inhabitants of Rotherham, 21 L. J. 17); and delivers them, together with an affidavit, when necessary, and a brief to counsel. Corroborating affidavits may be read after a rule has been granted; but not those containing new matter. (R. v. Berkeley, 1 Ld. Ken. 81.)

"Where no cause is shewn, the counsel so instructed will move to make the rule absolute; which, as also where insufficient cause be shewn, the court will grant.

"Upon the rule being made absolute, the attorney for the party obtaining it, draws it up with the master of the Crown-office, as in the case of a rule nisi. The writ of certiorari is then prepared and engrossed by the attorney or party suing it out, and taken to the Crown-office to be entered and sealed. (N. R. H. 7 Vict. r. 1.)

THE MONEY MARKET.

The Funds have been quiet, and prices are not quite so buoyant. Consols for the opening realize 98⅝ to ¾. The Reduced Three-and-a-Half per Cents. have obtained 102½ to ¾. Bank Stock is worth 198½. Exchequer Bills 72s. to 74s. premium.

The foreign settlement is going off with tolerable ease. Spanish Active Bonds are still 23¼ ½; but the Three per Cents. have gone back to 35 and 34⅞ ⅞. This arises from the differences on the account. Mexican are supported at 35 to ¼. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents. are worth 62¼ to ⅜.

The Railway Shares are inactive, but Croydon and South-Eastern are flat since the settlement yesterday; the former owing to the Gravesend project.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO RAILWAYS. — In Mr. Laing's paper appended to the evidence taken before the select committee on railways, there is a curious table, shewing the rate of different items of expenditure per mile of railway upon some of the principal British and foreign lines. From this table we gather that the Parliamentary expenses of the London and Birmingham and London and South-Western Companies have been about 650*l.* per mile; and of the Great Western and Manchester and Leeds, 1,000*l.* per mile; while the London and Brighton (through its memorable campaign) cost, under this head, 3,000*l.* per mile. There appears to be no corresponding item in the accounts of the Belgian and French railways. The "law" charges, engineering, direction, &c. have varied on English lines; but on all [illegible] they have been enormously large. Thus, the London and South-Western Company have had to pay, under this item, 900*l.* per mile; the Grand Junction, 1,200*l.*; the Birmingham, 1,500*l.*; the Manchester and Leeds, 1,600*l.*; the Brighton, 1,800*l.*; and the Great Western, no less an amount than 2,500*l.*! Nice pickings, here, for the lawyers! It seems that the average per mile on the Belgian railways, under this head, is 430*l.* per mile; and on the Paris and Rouen Railway, 800*l.* Under "land and compensation," the difference is equally remarkable. Thus, the Newcastle and Carlisle Company paid, per mile, 2,200*l.*; the Grand Junction, 3,000*l.*; the South-Western, 4,000*l.*; the Manchester and Leeds, 6,150*l.*; and the Birmingham and the Great Western precisely the same—namely, 6,300*l.*; while the Brighton paid no less than 8,000*l.* per mile! The average of the Paris and Rouen Railway was 2,300*l.*; and of the Belgian railways, 2,750*l.* In "railway works and stations" the difference is greater still. For example—the Newcastle and Carlisle cost 12,000*l.* per mile; the Grand Junction, 15,000*l.*; the South-Western, 18,400*l.*; the Birmingham, 38,280*l.*; the Brighton, 38,000*l.*; the Great Western, 40,000*l.*; and, beyond all, the Manchester and Leeds, 41,400*l.*! The average of the Belgian railways is 10,000*l.* per mile; and of the Paris and Rouen, 17,000*l.* The "carrying establishment, per mile," has been—on the Newcastle and Carlisle Railway, 1,300*l.*; Grand Junction, 2,000*l.*; South-Western, 2,350*l.*; Birmingham and Brighton, 3,000*l.*; Manchester and Leeds, 3,600*l.*; while the Great Western has in this item far out-topped all, being 4,800*l.*! The average of the Belgian railways is precisely the same as the cost in this respect of the South-Western—namely, 2,350*l.*; and of the Paris and Rouen Railway, 2,400*l.* — Railway Record.

THE REPORTS.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

Thursday, June 13.

THE WILL OF THE LATE MAQUIS OF HERTFORD.

Dr. LUSHINGTON delivered the judgment of the Court in this matter. The late Marquis of Hertford died on the 1st of March, 1842, leaving many testamentary papers—a will in the common form, bearing date the 26th of February, and twenty-nine codicils, dated between February 1823, and November 1839. Probate was sought by the executors in 1842, and in Michaelmas Term a proctor appeared for Mr. Croker, one of the executors, who was one of the legatees. This allegation was opposed on behalf of the present Marquis of Hertford, and on the 17th of March he obtained a decree. Mr. Croker then appealed to her Majesty in Council. The first question was, whether the decree was to be confirmed or reversed, but in effect the question to be decided was, whether, assuming all the facts contained in the allegation to be true, the scrip dated at Milan, in October 1838, should be admitted probate or not. The substance of the allegation was, that the scrip was in the handwriting of the late Marquis, that he made it at Milan, and that it would be valid by the law of Austria, in which country it was made, and that the scrip was rendered valid by reason of the codicil, which was dated the 26th of April, 1839. In the course of the discussion two points were admitted and assumed on both sides—first, that the late Marquis died legally domiciled in England; and, secondly, that the statute of 7 Wm. 4 and 1 Vict. extended only to testamentary papers made subsequently to this codicil, and that it had been so decided by this Court in 1841, and recognized by the Court of Queen's Bench in a case 3 Q. B. Rep. 177. But it was contended on behalf of the appellant that the peculiar circumstances of the case took it out of the Statute of Wills. The statute as to wills required that every testamentary paper written after the 1st of January, 1838, should be attested by two witnesses. The scrip in question was dated October 1838, and not attested; therefore, primâ facie, it was not entitled to probate. Probate was asked on two grounds—first, that the scrip was valid by the law of Austria, which law, it was said, the law of England ought to adopt; secondly, that the scrip was made valid and operative by the words with reference to the codicil of the 26th of April, 1839, which was attested according to the Statute of Wills. To consider these propositions in order, the testator having domiciled in England, the law of England, in the sense that that expression was used, must govern the case. It is true the law of England might possibly adopt the law of another country if the scrip was formally written; but as this was an exception to the ordinary rule, it must be distinctly shewn that the foreign law ought to be adopted. The proposition to be maintained was, that it necessarily assumed that the recent statute was confined in its operation and effect to the testamentary papers of domiciled Englishmen, such papers being executed in England, because if it should be [illegible], unless attested by two witnesses, it would not be binding in our English courts. Proceeding on such assumption, the proposition maintains that the law shall be so applied according to the place where the testamentary paper was executed. If the first part of the proposition was correct, it was obvious there would be no occasion to resort to foreign laws at all, for, according to the universal practice prior to the passing of the recent statute, all testamentary papers were valid and admitted, and if this statute did not attend to such papers made abroad, why should not the old law prevail with respect to them? If the statute did not apply, this paper would be entitled to probate. The whole of the case resolved itself into this, whether the statute can be held applicable to testamentary papers made out of England? The question only arose on the assumption that the statute did not apply to testamentary papers executed abroad, and if the paper was prior to the statute, but valid by the law of the country in which it was written, it would be valid here. It was sufficient to add that there was no instance in which the foreign law had been resorted to as a guide to the decision whether testamentary papers of domiciled Englishmen should be valid or not. The state of our law before the statute rendered the occurrence very improbable. It was difficult to discover how the laws of other nations should form any sufficient ground for the introduction of a new rule as regarded the testamentary acts of domiciled Englishmen. They were now brought to the construction of the statute. The 9th section enacted, that no will should be valid unless it should be signed in writing by the testator at the foot or end, in the presence of two or more witnesses, who should be present at the same time, and such witnesses should attest and sign the will in the presence of the testator. Now these words were general, and did not of themselves import any exception; but it might be that exceptions might be ingrafted upon them, if it could be shewn from the consideration of the whole statute that the statute was not entitled to apply to such excepted cases. The alleged exception was that the statute did not extend to testamentary papers of domiciled Englishmen made out of England. It must be admitted that there were no words in the statute to apply to such an exception. If the validity of a codicil was to be governed by the foreign law, so must the revocation of a will, and then a will made in England might be revoked by an unattested paper made abroad. Serious results would follow; a testamentary paper not valid by the law of this country might revoke a will that was valid. The exception would not only produce this consequence, but would militate against the principle that a man was supposed to know the law of his own country, but not of the foreign country in which he might be living. The great object of the statute would be defeated, the object being the introduction of English testamentary law, founded upon fixed and positive rules. It was no answer to state that the statute did not extend to the testamentary papers of foreigners or Englishmen domiciled abroad. From the reasons now stated, the testamentary papers alluded to were subject to the provisions of this statute. As to the question whether the scrip dated Oct. 28, 1838, was rendered operative by the codicil of April, 1839, the words of the latter were, "This is a further codicil to the will and codicils of me," then it went on to state that in former codicils he had made certain bequests, "I hereby ratify and confirm my will and codicil, except as before excepted, in every other respect." The words relied upon in the Milan scrip were these "I hereby ratify and confirm my wills and codicils except as before excepted." The legal meaning and effect of these words must be ascertained from the whole, and in obedience to the acknowledged rules of interpretation. There were two modes of fixing a meaning to words used in an instrument—first, by taking the common acceptation; and, secondly, from the context of the whole. If the first mode of interpretation was to prevail, then on the 26th of April, 1839, the word "codicil" could only mean a testamentary paper which required the death of the testator to give it testamentary effect, or a testamentary paper [illegible] [illegible] to shew [illegible] particular [illegible] ought to be attended to; and it was difficult to find in the paper of 1839 any expression that could [illegible] Court to break in upon this [illegible] he would proceed to consider what would be the [illegible] and consequence of adopting the other mode of construction. If the word "codicil" was divested of its strict legal meaning, the next inquiry would be, why should it be restricted to a paper written and signed by the deceased? In common parlance, men were accustomed to call every paper subsidiary to the will a codicil. By the law as it existed before the statute, every paper, no matter in what state, whether written by the testator or not, was established. If the present legal meaning of the word "codicil" was departed from, why take a less extensive meaning than that which the old law gave? And then the testamentary paper of 1839 would make all others valid, whether signed or not. There was, however, another and most important rule of construction, viz. that the words of the will should be interpreted according to strict sense, although it might be against some popular interpretation and against the apparent intention of the party. To apply this doctrine to the present case, the strict sense of the word codicil was a testamentary instrument which would per se become valid immediately upon the death of the testator. There were codicils prior to 1839 duly executed; therefore, according to the rule of construction taken, however capable the words might be of other or popular constructions, the strict sense must be adhered to; and if the strict sense was attached to the word codicil, the codicil of 1839 would not render operative the Milan scrip. It was not necessary to rest their judgment on this ground, but he would proceed to consider the question which had been most argued. Assuming that the Milan paper might be included under the term "codicil," the question was now, whether the Milan scrip was rendered valid by the legally executed codicil of 1839. What was the proper meaning of the words "rendered valid?" Before the passing of the recent statute, it was common for the parties to render a codicil operative from the date of the will. If there had been an unexecuted paper, and another had been subsequently made, admitted to be a regularly executed codicil, referring expressly to a paper not previously duly executed, this was not a republication, but an incorporation of an unexecuted document. A man could not devise land by an unattested document, but it was permitted to a testator to render operative part of his will by reference to a codicil, because it being duly attested, the security intended by the statute would not be interfered with. Certainty and identification were the grand essence. So far as he could discover, there had been no express reference to a paper in writing described with certainty. The doctrine laid down was, that where the words of a testator referred to any paper already written and so described, there could be no doubt of it that would be sufficient. From this document it does not appear that there is any identification. Lord Eldon had said the rule was, that where an instrument was properly executed, in order to incorporate with it an instrument not properly executed, the description must be so manifest that the Court could not be in error. The question then was, whether the Milan scrip, being on a separate paper, distinct from the codicil of 1839, was incorporated as part of the codicil of 1839, for a republication it could not be. He would then examine the words of the codicil of 1839. There was no express reference to the Milan scrip by name; the words relied upon were, "I ratify and confirm my said will and codicil." If such words were sufficient, then a general description would suffice, without an express reference. What would be the consequence? Firstly, instead of attaching to the word codicil its strict sense, a merely popular acceptation would suffice; secondly, in a popular acceptation any paper of a testamentary kind, signed or unsigned, might be made valid; thirdly, it might interfere with the wish of a testator, as he might intend to refer to some, and not to others; and, fourthly, if general reference would do, why should not a testator write as many codicils as he pleased after the incorporated codicil, and defeat the provisions of the statute? What the statute requires is signature and attestation, without which the paper cannot be proved, otherwise, property might be devised without the attestation of witnesses at all. It is possible (said the learned doctor) that the intention of the testator may be defeated in the present instance; but we sit here, not to try what the testator intended, but what testamentary instruments he has made; and we must not be induced by any consideration of hardship to relax the intention of the statute. Being of opinion that all the facts stated in the affidavits would not, if proved, entitle the Milan scrip to probate, we must affirm the decree of the Judge of the Prerogative Court. With respect to the costs, considering the very peculiar circumstances of this case, we shall advise that the costs of the application in this court be paid out of the estate; but we must add, that in other cases such will not be repeated, save under circumstances equally peculiar.

Taxation of costs—Construction of Attorneys and Solicitors Act.

Where a solicitor refuses to procure the execution of a deed until his bill of costs is paid, and the party interested in the deed pays the bill under protest, that might constitute such a special circumstance as, under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, would entitle the party to a subsequent order for taxation: and it seems to be unnecessary in such a case of compelled payment to specify in the petition the items objected to. But where the affidavit in support of the petition specified certain items as forming the ground for a taxation which the affidavits in reply explained, the application was refused.

A petition was presented by Mrs. Andrews, praying that the bill of costs of Clement and Newman might be taxed under the late Act. The trustee of Mrs. Andrews' settlement had desired to be discharged from the trusts of the settlement, and new trustees had been appointed, and a release and indemnity given to the retiring trustee. The respondents were that trustee's solicitors, and they refused to permit their client to execute the deed until their bill of costs had been paid. The petitioner's solicitor objected to that bill as extravagant, but paid it under protest.

The affidavits in support of the petition referred, as instances of the exorbitant charges, to an item of 12*l*. 12*s*. paid to counsel for opinions and for settling the drafts of the conveyances; another of 3*l*. 10*s*. 11*d*. for an office copy of the settlement; and 5*l*. 5*s*. in one sum for general attendances. The affidavits in reply stated circumstances shewing that the charges complained of were reasonable and properly incurred. The total amount of the bill was 71*l*. and was proved to have been delivered to the petitioner's solicitor on the 16th of September, and it was paid on the 7th of October.

Allnutt supported the petition, and contended that the compulsory payment of the bill by the refusal of the respondents to procure the execution of the deeds by their client before their costs had been paid constituted a special circumstance within the meaning of the 38th and 41st sections of the Act.

Bayshawe contended that was not a special circumstance.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I think this is a special circumstance.

Bagshawe.—The petition does not specify the items objected to. Re Downes (5 Beavan's Reports, 525).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The words of the Act are very extensive. Has there been any decision that a party cannot tax a bill after it has been paid, upon shewing special circumstances, unless the specific items complained of are pointed out in the petition?

Bagshawe.—Massie v. Drake (4 Beavan's Reports, 433).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—That was a case of voluntary, not of forced payment.

Bagshawe.—The affidavits in answer completely answer the petitioner's objections.

Allnutt, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If the petitioner had relied on the special circumstances only, I should have been disposed to make the order; but she has thought proper to state what she considers to be objectionable items, and every such item is sufficiently and satisfactorily explained. She has brought forward the most objectionable items in the account, and they turn out not to be at all objectionable. I therefore think there is no ground for the application.

Petition dismissed with costs.

MAITLAND v. ROGERS.

Original motion to discharge a prisoner—Practice—Contempt for not answering—Person becoming a pauper during imprisonment.

A defendant in contempt for not answering, and who has been brought up under the 5th rule of 1 Wm. 4, c. 36, but is not then able to make the oath of poverty, so as to have counsel assigned to him under the 6th rule, but who afterwards becomes a pauper from a vesting order having been obtained against him under the Insolvent Debtors' Act, may at any time apply to the Court to have counsel assigned to him by reason of his poverty; and where there has been an order obtained under the 12th rule, that he shall not be discharged without an answer, he shall not plead his poverty as a ground for not answering, when he may have the means of doing so by applying to the Court.

Anderdon moved to discharge the defendant, who was a prisoner for contempt in not putting in his answer.

Rasch objected that the order made by the Vice-Chancellor of England upon a similar application made to him, should have been drawn up, and then the motion here ought to have been to discharge that order.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Might he not come here and make this as an original application? But, in fact, the order has been drawn up, and it is simply that the Court "makes no order" on the defendant's application.

Anderdon.—The defendant had been in prison since June 1843, for contempt, in not answering the bill. The 5th rule of the 1 Wm. 4, c. 36, requires the defendant in custody for contempt in not answering to be brought to the bar of the court within thirty days from the time of his being actually in custody; and, by the 6th rule, if the defendant is unable by reason of poverty to put in an answer, he will, on being brought up, have counsel and solicitor assigned to him to put in his answer in formâ pauperis; when, having done such acts as the Court may direct, he is to be discharged. Here the plaintiff complied with the 5th rule, and brought up the defendant on the 15th of June, which was within thirty days after his arrest. But the defendant could not then make the oath of poverty to bring himself within the 6th rule. By the 11th rule, the plaintiff may put in an answer for the defendant, but by the 12th rule, the defendant may be directed to remain in custody until he shall answer, or until further order. By the 13th order, if the plaintiff shall not take the bill pro confesso, the defendant is entitled to his discharge. The plaintiff had not put in an answer for the defendant under the 11th rule, or taken the bill pro confesso under the 13th rule, having obtained a previous order under the 12th rule, that the defendant should not be discharged until he had put in his answers. The bill was against the defendant, who had been the plaintiff's partner, for an account. While in prison the defendant was detained in execution on a judgment obtained by the plaintiff on a promissory note, but the plaintiff having obtained a vesting order against the defendant under the Insolvent Debtors' Act, his property vested in the provisional assignee. The defendant filed his schedule, and delivered up 177*l.* which formed the whole of his property. The defendant was then a pauper and unable to put in an answer. He was also liable to be examined in the Insolvent Court touching the partnership transactions, and remanded to prison if his answers were unsatisfactory. The defendant complained that the order obtained under the 12th rule for detaining him in custody until he had answered, was irregular, as having been obtained ex parte, and without notice to the defendant; and that, under the 13th rule, he was entitled to be discharged because the plaintiff had not taken the bill pro confesso. The time for doing so expired on the 19th of September, and the plaintiff could not then take the bill pro confesso. (Needham v. Needham; Oldfield v. Cobbett.) The plaintiff had been appointed assignee by the Insolvent Debtors' Court.

Rasch.—The order for detaining the defendant in custody until he should answer the bill was obtained upon the plaintiff's affidavit.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Does not the clause which enables the Court to assign counsel apply whenever the defendant is brought up? The man does not choose to answer, and the Court thinks an answer necessary. He has now become poor, and unable to pay the expense of putting in an answer, then why should not the clause be applied? I think it will apply. It is absolutely necessary that he should not be discharged until he has answered, and he shall not plead his poverty to prevent his putting in an answer. The Court thinks an answer is requisite, and therefore it will not do to take the bill pro confesso. The defendant may get the means of answering; and if he avail himself of those means by application to the Court, there is no reason why he should not be detained in custody.

HERRING v. CLOBERRY.

Contempt for non-payment of costs—Party in contempt cannot make any application to the Court.

Wakefield, for the plaintiff, moved to restrain the defendant, who was in possession of the estate which forms the subject-matter of this suit, from cutting timber pending an appeal to the House of Lords.

Cooper and Hare objected to the plaintiff being heard, he being in contempt for non-payment of costs, amounting to upwards of 800*l.*; such a person is not entitled to indulgence. A party while in contempt can only apply, 1st, for the purpose of getting rid of his contempt; 2nd, to take any necessary steps for an appeal. (1 Daniell's Chancery Practice, 655, 656; Bellchambers v. Worthy, 3 Maddock, Rep. 350; Lord Wenman v. Osbaldiston, 2 Brown, Parliamentary Cases, 276.)

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—A motion is not an indulgence, it is no favour; it is applying to the Court for something to which the party is entitled on making a proper case. But the general rule is, that a party cannot make a motion when in contempt for non-payment of costs; and it is important to adhere to that rule.

Motion refused.

Re TONBRIDGE SCHOOL.

Educational charity—Alteration in scheme.

The Skinners' Company presented a petition to procure some alteration in the scheme for the regulation of this school, which had been sanctioned by Lord Eldon. By that scheme the school was to have a considerable number of exhibitions to the University; and it provided that the boys of the school should be divided into two classes; the first composed of boys whose parents were residents in the town of Tonbridge, or within ten miles of it; and the second class consisted of strangers. In the distribution of exhibitions, the boys of the first class were always to have a preference. To be qualified for the first class, the boys must have been at the school five years, and their parents must be resident; and, since the scheme had been in operation, some doubts had arisen whether it would not be in the power of the boys of the second class to defeat the rule which gave a preference to boys of the first class. Thus it was supposed that it would be in the power of the parents of the boys of the second class to become resident within the district of ten miles during the last of these five years, and so enable strangers to share the benefits of the exhibitions, contrary to the intentions of the founders. Certain alterations had been framed to meet this case, and guard against the admission of boys of the second class into the first class; and such alterations were now submitted to the Court for its sanction.

Lloyd, in support of the petition.

Wray, for the Attorney-General, consented to the alteration proposed to secure the preference to the children of the inhabitants of Tonbridge, but suggested that the rule requiring the boys to have been five years at the school should be modified. Lord Eldon's scheme was intended to benefit the whole kingdom. Now, if a boy had been at Harrow or Eton, and should be afterwards sent to Tonbridge, he might become eligible in less than the prescribed period of five years.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I approve of the alteration proposed for the purpose of securing the privileges of the boys of the first class, and also of the rule requiring five years' education at the school. Were it otherwise, a boy at Eton, or some other school, might ascertain the state of the claims to the exhibition, and then enter himself at Tonbridge to take advantage of them. For the sake of the school, therefore, I feel bound to make no alteration on the point of the five years. It was something like the rule against changes on circuits, which would give undue advantages to men high in their profession.

Renshaw supported a petition that the accounts might be taken in the presence of some of the next of kin. There were twenty next of kin, and some of them were out of the jurisdiction of the court.

Re POPHAM, a Lunatic.

Allowances in lunacy.

Jas. Parker supported a petition that 500*l.* should be allowed for the purchase of a new carriage and horses for the use of the lunatic. The lunatic had an income of 13,000*l.* a year, and he had hitherto lived at the family mansion, but it was found by his medical attendants advisable to remove him; and the petition, therefore, prayed that a part of the establishment at the mansion might be kept up, and that certain charitable contributions, amounting on an average to about 250*l.* a year, which had been long made by the family, should be continued.

Ordered as prayed.

Re BARNES, a Lunatic.

Completing a purchase by means of sale or mortgage of other property.

The committee of the estate presented a petition, praying that a contract for a purchase which had been made before the lunacy might be completed, and that the funds necessary for that purpose might be raised by the sale of certain shares and by a mortgage of the real estate.

Ordered.

Re GARDEN, a Lunatic.

Effect of proving a will made by a lunatic after he had been so found.

Stinton again mentioned this petition, which was presented by the widow and executrix of the deceased lunatic, and prayed that a fund of 2,800*l.* in court might be paid to her as executrix.

It appeared that on the 12th of October, 18[illegible], the jury found that the deceased had been a lunatic from the 21st of June, 1831. The deceased had made three wills, one dated the 26th of October, 1830, the other the 21st of July, and the third on the 9th of July, 1831. The last will, which was dated subsequently to the lunacy as found by the jury, had been proved. Affidavits had now been filed to explain the circumstances.

By the first will the wife was given an annuity of 100*l.* for her life or widowhood, but on her second marriage that was to be reduced to 50*l.* The second will was in the same terms. By the third will the widow had a life interest in the whole of the deceased's property, which was afterwards to be distributed amongst the children. The fund in court was the only property, except furniture. It was now asked that the fund should be transferred into the names of trustees for the children, the income only to be payable to the widow.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Let the property be conveyed to trustees upon the trusts of the will; the dividends to be paid to the widow for her life. The costs will come out of the corpus of the fund.

Re MITCHIN, a Lunatic.

Payment into court—Reducing security by committee of estate.

The father of the lunatic, who had been appointed committee of his estate, but had not yet completed his securities, prayed that a sum of 1,000*l.* which was in a country bank, might be at once paid by the bankers into court, and not through himself, the committee. This would reduce the amount for which he would have to give security.

Ordered.

BARNSLEY CANAL COMPANY v. T[illegible].

Construction of Local Act—Compulsory purchase of mineral property.

The facts of this case have been before stated, as well as the intimation of opinion made by his lordship upon the opening of the case.

Tinney and Daniell were heard at great length on several days; the importance to the company of the reversal of the Master of the Rolls' decision being such, that they stated its effect would be to render them liable to pay [illegible],000*l.* a mile for sixteen miles.

Wakefield and Glasse, in support of the Master of the Rolls' order, dissolving the injunction, were not called on.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The [illegible] clause of the Act, which had been relied on, did not apply to the minerals. The land is sold, under the Act, to the canal company, reserving the mines, only the mines are not to be so worked as to injure the canal. The minerals, therefore, were not purchased by the Company. If the mines are being worked so as to be in danger of injuring the canal, the company may then purchase the minerals, and the amount of the purchase-money is to be settled by a jury. Then it is the company have to treat. Of what are they to treat? Why, for the purchase of so much of the minerals as shall be thought proper to be left for security of the canal; and then those working the mines are to be restrained within fixed limits. Who is to fix the limit? Why, a jury. Here, that does not arise, because the parties have agreed as to the quantity of coal to be left. Then suppose I should be of opinion that the defendant is entitled to something, could I grant the injunction? Fourteen years ago the owner of the coal let it to Mr. Twyball; then he treats with the company, and agrees to accept a certain sum. The Act gives the company no right of pre-emption, but directs them to make satisfaction to those interested in the minerals for being restrained from working the mine. It is a private right interfered with by a company.

Motion refused, with costs.

BOOTH v. CRESWICKE.

Omission in decree—Varying minutes—Practice

Where a decree has not been drawn up, and omissions are alleged in the judgment, the parties will be allowed to bring the omitted points before the Court by a petition.

In accordance with the suggestion made by his lordship on a previous occasion, the plaintiff had presented a petition to bring before the Court the special matter in respect of which he alleged the decree to be defective. The defendant Creswicke had obtained a rehearing of the cause upon special condition that the plaintiff should be placed in the same situation as to costs as if the defendant had appeared on the decree nisi for a foreclosure, and then obtained a rehearing. The plaintiff, by his petition, alleged that no provision was made in the decree for costs, which had been omitt d to be ordered to be paid prior to redemption.

First, there having been a bill filed against Henry Creswicke, the owner of the estate, by Jones, his mortgagee, there was a surplus paid into court to the credit of that cause and the present, and various costs had been incurred by the plaintiff in applications to procure payment to himself. Then there were the further costs in this suit before the Master; the costs in a suit of James v. Creswicke, which was a suit to impeach the defendant's title, and was dismissed with costs, but the plaintiff James was unable to pay them; and the costs of a suit which had been instituted at the Rolls by the defendant to impeach the the plaintiff's securities.

Wakefield and Beales contended that the mortgagee was entitled to all the costs of defending his mortgagor's title, however attacked; and they cited Lacon v. Mertins (3 Atkyns' Reports, 4); Godfrey v. Watson (3 Atkyns, 518); Hunt v. Fownes (9 Vesey's Reports, 70).

Stuart and Parry, for the defendant Creswicke.—The conditions on which the rehearing was permitted were, that the defendant should pay certain costs, and such further costs as might be directed on the rehearing. The costs specified had been paid, and no other costs had been mentioned in the judgment. The minutes of the registrar are therefore right.

Wakefield, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I consider this decree to be in precisely the same situation as if it was now pronounced on the rehearing. I vary the Vice-Chancellor's decree in two particulars, and in those only there was no other question before me. I think the plaintiff is entitled to the same direction, in respect of these costs he would have had at the hearing. But it was never presented to my consideration that there was any question as to costs. The way in which the question was argued was as to the validity of the decree, but nothing was discussed or said as to costs. I am to consider whether the Master will allow these costs as a matter of course; if not, I am further to consider whether I ought to give any special directions with respect to them. It was open to the parties to argue as to the costs. I only consider the merits of the decree, not any point as to costs. I will read the papers and give my judgment as to these costs.

COURT OF THE VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND.

Friday, May 24.

SMITH v. SMALL and OTHERS.

Demurrer for want of equity—Registry of ships under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 55—Conclusive ownership—Whether, in proceeding in equity against a party in respect of ownership of a British-built vessel, the registry must not be stated on the bill.

The plaintiffs, T. S. and W. S., were the builders and owners of two ships engaged in the East-India trade.

The defendants were the members of a certain firm in London, as East-India merchants, and acted as English agents for another firm, residing at Calcutta; the last-mentioned firm acting also as their agents in the East Indies: both these firms purchased shares in the two ships, one called the "Robert Small," and the other the "Plantagenet;" and, being equally entitled in the shares of the two ships, the shares of the "Robert Small" were transferred to the defendants in trust for the two firms equally, and the shares of the "Plantagenet" were transferred to G. C. the younger, another defendant, in trust also for the two firms equally.

The plaintiffs, T. S., and W. S., were the managing partners in sailing and employing the two ships in the East-India trade, and made large profits by the freights and purchases on behalf of ships, which were divided among the partners interested in the shares, the portion belonging to the firm at Calcutta being paid to the defendants, as their agents, along with their own portions, who duly accounted for the same to the Calcutta firm.

The Calcutta firm acted as the agents of the two ships at Calcutta, and the plaintiffs remitted to them from time to time the disbursements of the ships at Calcutta; but, after a time, the plaintiffs, seeing some reason to distrust the credit of the Calcutta firm, hesitated to remit the sums necessary for the disbursements of the ships at Calcutta, and stated their suspicions to one or two of the partners of the London firm, but they received such an answer as allayed their apprehensions, although it appears that at the time the London firm knew that they at Calcutta were insolvent.

In adjusting the accounts after the ships had completed the voyages in which they were engaged, it appeared that about 700l., arising from the interest of the Calcutta firm, remained in the hands of the plaintiffs.

On the 6th September, 1841, the Calcutta firm were declared bankrupt, and it appeared that the sums remitted to them by the plaintiffs were not applied to the use of the ships, and the plaintiffs claimed to be entitled to set off the profits of the voyages against the sums so remitted, and the other sums due from the plaintiffs to the Calcutta firm.

The plaintiffs were all along induced to give credit to the Calcutta firm under the impression that the last-mentioned firm had a lien on their portions of the proceeds of such voyages, but defendants, on the 25th March last, commenced two actions against the plaintiffs in respect of the shares of the Calcutta firm, upon the ground that they had not any interest in the ships, but that they, the defendants, as registered owners of the shares of the Calcutta firm, were respectively entitled to and solely interested in the gains and profits of the voyages of the two ships.

The bill was, therefore, filed for the purpose of establishing a set-off and for an account; also for an injunction against the defendants in respect of the actions at law.

To this bill the defendants put in a demurrer—1st, on the representation of credit as being cognizable at law only. 2nd, on the ground that the Calcutta firm were not registered owners, assuming the vessels to be British-built ships.

The demurrer overruled, on the ground that there was nothing in the bill which led to the inference that the vessels were British-built ships.

The bill was filed against six defendants, five of whom were represented as copartners in the East-India trade, residing in England, and the remaining sixth as the assignee of another firm out of the jurisdiction.

It appears that the plaintiffs, Thomas Smith and William Smith, were the builders, and for some time the owners, of two ships called the Plantagenet and Robert Small, which had for some years past been engaged in the East-India trade.

The defendants, Robert Small, Gideon Colquhoun, Jas. Bonar, William S. Boyd, and Gideon Colquhoun, the younger, for some years carried on the business in the city of London, as East-India merchants in partnership together, under the style of Messrs. Small, Colquhoun, and Co.

For some time prior to, and up to the month of September, 1841, certain persons carried on business at Calcutta as copartners, under the style of Messrs. Boyd and Co. for whom Messrs. Small, Colquhoun, and Co. acted as agents in England; Messrs. Boyd and Co. acting at the same time as their agents in the East Indies. Both these firms being desirous of having shares in the above-mentioned ships, purchased of the plaintiffs twenty 64ths of the Robert Small, and eight 64ths of the Plantagenet. The two firms being equally interested in the shares of the two ships, the twenty 64ths of the ship Robert Small were transferred to the defendants, in trust for the two firms, equally, and the eight 64ths of the ship Plantagenet were transferred to Gideon Colquhoun, the younger, in trust also for the two firms equally.

After this transaction, the two ships continued in the East-India trade, and were sailed and employed for the benefit of the plaintiffs and the two firms, according to the respective shares and interests therein, and the plaintiffs were the managing partners in sailing and employing the two ships; they also obtained freights, and purchased merchandize, and made shipments on account of such ships, and large sums of money were made by such freights and purchases, which sums were divided among the parties interested in the shares of the ships, the portions belonging to Messrs. Boyd and Co. being paid to their agents in England along with their own portions, and their agents, Messrs. Small, Colquhoun, and Co. duly accounting for the same to Messrs. Boyd and Co.

Messrs. Boyd and Co. acted as the agents of the two ships at Calcutta, the plaintiffs being in the habit of remitting them the disbursements of the ships at Calcutta, and in the month of September, 1841, these ships were engaged in voyages to the East Indies; and it was during certain of these adventures that the plaintiffs, seeing some reason to distrust the credit of Messrs. Boyd and Co. hesitated about remitting to them the sums necessary for the disbursements of the ships at Calcutta, and on the 6th of September, 1841, the plaintiff, Thomas Smith, called at the place of business of Messrs. Small, Colquhoun, and Co. and saw the defendants Robert Small and James Bonar, to whom he mentioned his distrust of Messrs. Boyd and Co. but received such an answer from the defendant Small as for the present allayed all his apprehensions, and, relying upon the representations so made to him, soon after remitted to Messrs. Boyd and Co. about 700l. for the use of the two ships on those voyages, and also allowed other moneys belonging to the plaintiffs to be received by and remain in the hands of Messrs. Boyd and Co.

The plaintiffs having, some time in October, 1841, written a letter to Messrs. Small, Colquhoun, and Co. received from them a letter in reply, as follows:—

"London, 1st Nov. 1841.

"Dear Sirs,—We are favoured with yours of the 30th ultimo, inclosing a cheque for 10l. 9s. 6d. premium of insurance on iron per Robert Small. You ask our opinion as to the limits you should give Messrs. Boyd and Co. for sugar, saltpetre, and rice, as dead weight for the Robert Small, should the lowness of the freights render it advisable to ship on owners' account; also as to the article of jute for light freight. We annex you our broker's ideas of safe limits for the produce you name, and have merely to suggest that you should give our Calcutta friends a certain discretion to act according to circumstances, Messrs. Boyd and Co. being equally with ourselves interested in the success of the voyage.—We remain, dear Sirs, yours faithfully,

"SMALL, COLQUHOUN, and Co.

"Messrs. T. and W. Smith, Newcastle-upon-Tyne."

The Calcutta friends alluded to in this letter were Messrs. Boyd and Co.

The ships some time ago completed the voyages in which they were engaged, and the plaintiffs had duly paid to the defendants their gains and earnings of the two ships according to their interests in them respectively, and, in adjusting the accounts of the voyages, there appeared to be a sum of about 700l. arising from the share and interest of Messrs. Boyd and Co. in the voyages remaining in the hands of the plaintiffs.

On the 6th Sept. 1841, Messrs. Boyd and Co. were insolvent, and soon after stopped payment, and were declared bankrupts in the East Indies, and the sum so remitted by the plaintiffs was not applied to the use of the ships; and the profits of their respective voyages were barely sufficient to repay the plaintiffs what they had remitted to Messrs. Boyd and Co. and the other sums due from them to the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs claimed to be entitled to set off the profits of the voyages against the sum so remitted, and the other sums due from the plaintiffs to Messrs. Boyd and Co.

Upon the bankruptcy of Messrs. Boyd and Co. Messrs. Small, Colquhoun, and Co. ceased to act as their agents in England, and had no longer any authority to receive the earnings and profits of their shares in the ships.

In employing Messrs. Boyd and Co. as agents of the ships, and in remitting them money, and allowing moneys to be received by them or remain in their hands, the plaintiffs always relied upon the fact that Messrs. Boyd and Co. had an interest in the voyages, and upon the faith of their having a lien on their portions of the proceeds of such voyages, the plaintiffs were induced to trust and give credit to them; but the defendants, on the 25th of March last, commenced two actions in the Queen's Bench against the plaintiffs, to recover the sum retained by them in respect of the shares and interests of Messrs. Boyd and Co. in the voyages of the ships, one of the actions being, in the name of the defendants, to recover the sum of 548l. 11s. 1d. and the other being, in the name of Gideon Colquhoun, the younger, to recover the sum of 266l. 15s. 9d.; upon the ground that Messrs. Boyd and Co. had no interest in the two ships, but that they, the defendants, as registered owners of the shares of Messrs. Boyd and Co. of the ship Robert Small, and Gideon Colquhoun, the younger, as the registered owner of the shares of Messrs. Boyd and Co. of the ship Plantagenet, were respectively entitled to and solely interested in the gains and profits of the voyages of the two ships, and, therefore, as such, entitled to recover from the plaintiffs the sums demanded in the actions.

The bill charged, among other things, that Messrs. Boyd and Co. had always been interested in the voyages of the two ships, according to their shares, and that they had always received 10-64ths of the earnings of the ship Robert Small, and 4-64ths of the earnings of the ship Plantagenet, and that Gideon Colquhoun the younger had never paid for the 8-64th shares of the ship Plantagenet, and that such shares were paid for equally by the firms of Small, Colquhoun, and Co. and Boyd and Co. and that Gideon Colquhoun the younger was a trustee of such shares for the two firms, and that he never, except as a member of the firm of Small, Colquhoun, and Co. took any part in the management of the ship Plantagenet, and never received any earnings or profits of such ships. The bill also charged, that on the 6th of September, 1841, when the firm of Boyd and Co. became insolvent, they were indebted to the firm of Small, Colquhoun, and Co. in upwards of twenty lacs of rupees, or 200,000*l.* and the defendants Small and Bonar, were at the time aware of the circumstance, and sent one Mr. Beeby as their agent to India, to look after Messrs. Boyd and Co. with full powers to compel them to stop payment and wind up their affairs, which agent accordingly issued a writ against that firm in India, and compelled them to become bankrupts, and they have paid only a small dividend, without any prospect of paying a further one.

It appeared, moreover, that in a trial before the Supreme Court at Calcutta, last November, in which the assignees of Boyd and Co. were plaintiffs, the defendant Wm. Smith Boyd, being examined as a witness, swore that on the 6th of September, 1841, Messrs. Small, Colquhoun, and Co. thought the affairs of Messrs. Boyd and Co. not in a proper state, and that they were indebted to the defendants to the extent of twenty lacs of rupees, and that the defendants had, some months before, ceased to ship goods to them in India.

The plaintiffs, therefore, conceived, that under the circumstances before mentioned, the defendants were bound to make good to them all the loss which they sustained by giving credit to Messrs. Boyd and Co. on the representation made to them on the 6th of September, 1841, and that they, the plaintiffs, were entitled to retain the sum so remitted as before mentioned to Messrs. Boyd and Co. out of any moneys of the defendants, or of Messrs. Boyd and Co. which are now or might come to their hands, filed their bill, praying that the plaintiffs might be declared to be entitled to retain and set off the sums earned or gained by the two ships in respect of the shares and interests of Messrs. Boyd and Co. in the voyages in the year 1841, in payment of the sums so remitted by them to Messrs. Boyd and Co. in the disbursements of the ships, and the other sums due from Messrs. Boyd and Co. to the plaintiffs at the time of their bankruptcy, and for an account (if necessary) of such respective sums, and of the accounts between Messrs. Boyd and Co. and plaintiffs, and for an injunction against the defendants, Robert Small, Gideon Colquhoun, James Bonar, William Smith Boyd, and Gideon Colquhoun, the younger, to restrain them from further prosecuting any other action against the plaintiffs respecting the matters aforesaid, or any of them.

Stuart and Stevens, for the demurrer, stated that the bill claimed relief on two grounds, viz. the representation of credit, and the ownership of Boyd and Co. The representation of credit only is the subject of an action at law, and no ground for relief in equity. [The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Certainly not.] Under the Ship Registry Act, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 55, the registry is conclusive of the ownership, and that Boyd and Co. as equitable owners, had no title to the freight. (Spell v. Lechmere, 13 Ves. 588; Thompson v. Leake, 1 Mad. 39.) That freight cannot be separate from the legal ownership, except by written agreement, is clear from Davenport v. Whitmore (2 My. & Cr. 177).

Bethel and Bates, for the plaintiffs.—The question is whether the Court can carry into effect part of the prayer of this bill, viz. to retain the sums gained by the two ships in respect of the interests of Messrs. Boyd and Co. in the voyages in 1841, in payment of the sums so remitted by them to Messrs. Boyd and Co. in the disbursements of the ships. Boyd and Co. were the agents of the London firm, while Small and Co., residing in London, acted as agents for Boyd and Co. living at Calcutta. The bill is filed to take an account of the proceeds arising out of past transactions of which the plaintiffs had the management for the benefit of all parties; therefore the question is, where the form of the bill represents past transactions, the result of which is to shew that the plaintiffs had advanced a sum of money, whether they are not entitled to retain a proportion of the shares. Boyd and Co. became bankrupts on the 6th September, 1841. To our bill a general demurrer was put in for want of equity. Now, observe, you cannot tell who are the registering parties, what were their names, or in what form it was effected, or what contract was entered into; and if so, whether the claims of the parties depended upon the nature of the contract or the construction they chose to put upon it. The simple statement in the bill is, that certain shares in the two ships were transferred to the two firms in England and Calcutta; there is nothing said about their being registered. The whole argument, therefore, on the part of the defendants, proceeds upon a mistaken hypothesis, and the argument derived from the Registry Act falls to the ground. There is nothing to shew that the vessels in question are British-built ships; they might have been built in America or China. Independently of this, the argument has not the slightest connection with the subject of our claim. The allegations in the bill are, that certain voyages were made which produced certain sums of money belonging to certain individuals; that those individuals sent certain sums of money to parties living at Calcutta, who applied it in a certain manner, and who are now called upon to account. We have, therefore, nothing whatever to do with the Registration Act. Battersby v. Smith (3 Madd. 110) was quoted by defendants. Now, if we were claiming an account of the earnings of a ship in respect of some interest therein, the case would be different. Davenport v. Whitmore (2 My. & Cr. 177) came before Lord Cottenham, who acted upon the doubt of Lord Eldon. We are dealing only with a sum of money; the bill is, therefore, reduced simply to this, viz.—for account to be taken as between ourselves and Boyd and Co. and the proceeds of their shares, and that the course of dealing of the parties was sufficient to bring the case within the rule laid down by Lord Cottenham in Davenport v. Whitmore, that the freight and earnings were independent of the legal ownership.

Stuart, in reply.—The question is very short. If a man proceeds against Boyd and Co. he must shew a title in those parties to the property. If, therefore, the title of plaintiffs to set off against Boyd and Co. depends upon any ownership of Boyd and Co. then Battersby v. Smith is applicable. Boyd and Co. are out of the jurisdiction, but I appear for other defendants. Now, the account prayed by the bill is against Boyd and Co. not against Small, Colquhoun, and Co. Boyd and Co. are owners of the ships, and the plaintiffs claim a set-off. Now, it does not appear that Boyd and Co. are owners of the ship, and their earnings must depend upon ownership. Mr. Bethel says that registration does appear in the whole bill. Now, if the freight of the ships belongs to a registered owner, it ought to appear. My friend, moreover, argues that they do not appear to be British, but, for any thing that is shewn upon the face of the bill, they may have been built in any other quarter of the globe. The plaintiffs, however, who built the ships live at Newcastle. [The VICE CHANCELLOR.—The question is, whether it appears in the bill that they were subject to the Registration Act.] How did the transfer take place? They were transferred, not to the people in India, but to owners in London. Now we must suppose, according to my friend's statement, that the ships were built in Newcastle and sold to some persons in India and England. It does not rest here; for the bill states that we pretend that Boyd and Co. had no interest in the said two ships, and that the defendants, as registered owners of the shares of Messrs. Boyd and Co. of the said ship Robert Small, and the said Gideon Colquhoun the younger, as the registered owner of the said shares of the said Messrs. Boyd and Co. of the ship Plantagenet, are and is respectively entitled to, and solely interested in, the gains and profits of the said voyages of the two ships, and entitled to recover from plaintiffs the sum demanded in the said actions; but plaintiffs charge the contrary of such pretences to be the fact. Now the plaintiffs ought to assert a clear undoubted right. How have they asserted a legal title in the party from whom they claim? In all cases, the statement on the pleadings must be taken against the pleader. If they meant to say that Boyd and Co. are entitled, they have not stated it. To support the bill, there ought to have been the assertion of a clear legal title in Boyd and Co. But the plaintiffs' argument is, that if the freight has been the subject of an account, it may still go on; they claim an account by reason of an alleged ownership in Boyd and Co. but they have failed to shew a title in them. If the meaning of the bill is that the ships are not within the Registry Acts, then what ground have they to proceed upon? they have no remedy either at law or in equity. And if Boyd and Co. are the legal owners, the plaintiffs' remedy is at law.

Wednesday, May 29.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR stated that he was not at liberty, from the pleadings, to infer from the allegations that the vessels were British-built, so as to bring them within the provisions of the Act of Parliament; that one of the statements in the bill was, that the defendants pretend that Messrs. Boyd and Co. had no interest in the ships, and that the defendants, as registered owners of the shares of Messrs. Boyd and Co. were entitled thereto and solely interested in the gains and profits of the voyages, and entitled to recover from the plaintiffs the sum demanded in the said action; whereas the plaintiffs charge the contrary of such pretences to be the fact. His Honour thought there was nothing in the cases cited in the court that had any application to the Registry Act, and that he must therefore overrule the demurrer.

ROLLS COURT.

Monday, June 24, and Thursday, June 27.

YOUNG v. GUY.

A, having understood from B, his solicitor, that C was willing to lend money, by letter authorizes B to obtain a sum on the security of a mortgage and bond, and subsequently executes a bond and a transfer of mortgage, referred to in the bond to C, to secure a less sum. B, having money of C's in his hands, gives C the bond, and represents to him that he had passed the money to A. C made no inquiry as to B's authority, and B told A that the loan was not to be obtained, and the bond was rescinded. B subsequently absconds, and C, having recovered against A at law, is compelled to refund in equity.

At the death of defendant's father, on the 24th May, 1837, a mortgage debt of 700*l.* was owing to him from one Morecroft, and the defendant, as executor, employed John Rumsey, a solicitor, to get it in, which he accordingly did. Instead of paying it over, however, Rumsey represented to the defendant that he could invest that sum, with 300*l.* more, which h persuaded him to advance, on a mortgage of an estate of Sir William Young, brother of the plaintiff. Much correspondence and negotiation ensued; but, ultimately, nothing was done as to the mortgage. Rumsey, however, put off payment of the money to the defendant, on various pretences, till January 1838, when a proposal was made, and accepted, of lending 300*l.* of the 1,000*l.* to a clerk of Rumsey's, which was accordingly done. The 700*l.* residue, however, still remained unpaid. On the 10th February, 1839, a parcel of title-deeds, which had been promised, were sent as a security by Rumsey to Guy, who was very uneasy about his money. These related to some property of Sir W. Young's called Risborough. The same excuses were resorted to to put off payment, and in this state of things the transaction with the plaintiff commenced. It appeared that in 1835, the plaintiff, the Rev. Henry Tuffnell Young, purchased an estate in Radnage, in Bucks, and being unable to pay the whole of the purchase-money, mortgaged the estate to one Eeles, for the term of 500 years, to secure the sum of 700*l.* advanced by Eeles. Rumsey being the plaintiff's solicitor, informed him, in 1839, that Eeles wanted his money, and on the plaintiff's expressing an intention to sell the estate, proposed getting the money from Guy. The plaintiff assented, and wrote a letter afterwards to Rumsey, proposing to borrow 800*l.* on the security of a mortgage and bond. On the 11th Oct. 1839, the plaintiff, by Rumsey's appointment, called at his office in High Wycombe, and executed a deed of assignment of Eeles's mortgage, and also a joint and several bond with Rumsey, to Guy, who, however, was not present. The bond was conditioned for the payment of 700*l.* and referred to the assignment of mortgage of the same date. This bond Rumsey delivered to Guy, who was then in possession of the Risborough title-deeds, which, however, on the 10th February, 1841, Rumsey prevailed upon him to return, on some pretence. Rumsey, being the solicitor for both parties, continued to pay interest to Guy down to the 11th January, 1841; but the defendant, pressing for his money, received post dated cheques for it, which Rumsey always on some pretence prevailed on him not to present. At last, on the 14th of April, 1841, the defendant did present one of the cheques at Messrs. Praed and Co.'s, and there were no assets. The next day Rumsey absconded; and it then appeared that no money had ever been paid to the plaintiff, and that, soon after the execution of the assignment and bond, Rumsey had written to him to say that Eeles did not want his money, and the bond had been rescinded. Eeles had never been made acquainted with the transactions, and never sought to have his mortgage paid off. On the 22nd April, 1841, a fiat in bankruptcy was issued against Rumsey; and on the 7th June following, an action was brought by the defendant against the plaintiff, upon the bond, in which, on the 21st July, judgment was allowed to go by default, and, on the 29th of the same month, execution was levied thereon. The plaintiff having filed his bill in this court, moved, on the 22nd of the same month of July, for an injunction, which was refused. On the 28th May, 1842, he dismissed that bill, and, on the 29th June following, filed the present bill, having in the mean time had access to the papers of Rumsey, in the hands of his assignees. The bill prayed for a declaration, that the delivery by Rumsey of the bond to the defendant was a fraud, and that the defendant having retained the bond, and having obtained judgment at law, and levied execution thereon, with knowledge of the fraud practised by Rumsey, and without having given any consideration for it to the plaintiff, was a trustee for the plaintiff of the moneys received by him under such execution, and for repayment with interest.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—This is one of those unfortunate cases in which two innocent persons having a misplaced confidence in the integrity of a third, the question arises, which of them is to suffer by the misconduct of the third party. The case has been fairly conducted on both sides; there is no imputation of fraud on either, and both are innocent; and it is my painful duty to determine who is to be subject to the loss neither has deserved. [His lordship stated at great length the particulars of the case, and commented upon them.] To say that both parties have not unduly trusted Rumsey, would be too much. If the plaintiff had placed a bond in the hands of his solicitor to receive money, and the solicitor did receive it, he would, perhaps, have no reason to quarrel with the transaction; but then that would be the case of a simple money-bond. That, however, is not the case here, for the bond expressly refers to another security, which was intended to be the principal and the bond the collateral security. Therefore the authority to receive money on the bond was only a limited authority, and the defendant was not justified in lending his money, without being satisfied as to Rumsey's authority. But the case is stronger, for the money was not paid to Rumsey at the time; it was an existing debt of the latter to the defendant. The defendant clearly is not entitled to the benefit of the bond; he must refund the sum levied on the execution, and pay interest on the capital sum of 700*l.* from the date of the levy; he must also pay the costs of the suit. The assignees must be dismissed, but without their costs, which they must get as they best may, out of Rumsey's estate.

Saturday, June 29.
CONSTABLE v. ROGERS and OTHERS.
Motion ex parte for an injunction.

Turner (Taylor with him), for the plaintiff, moved ex parte for an injunction to restrain the defendants, Messrs. Rogers (bankers), from parting with some title-deeds, one of which was forged, the attesting witness having been convicted of uttering it. The plaintiff applied to the Central Criminal Court to have the deeds delivered up, but they were, on the 18th of June, ordered to be delivered to Messrs. Rogers, upon their undertaking to hold them for a fortnight. The plaintiff, within the fortnight, filed her bill claiming the estate to which the deeds belonged, and praying that they might not be parted with.

The MASTER of the ROLLS granted the injunction as prayed by the bill.

Monday, July 1.
BLAGRAVE v. BLAGRAVE and OTHERS.
Motion ex parte for an injunction to stay waste, &c.

Tripp moved ex parte for an injunction to restrain Colonel Blagrave, the tenant for life of certain estates in Berks, Oxfordshire, and Somersetshire, under the will of John Blagrave, dated 1797, from cutting timber, &c. The testator gave his estates to his wife for life, remainder to Sir J. Simeon and John Blagrave in trust to pay debts, with divers remainders over. In 1827, the present tenant for life came into possession, there being also a remainder to his issue under the will, and the first estate of inheritance is now in John Henry Blagrave, Colonel B. having no children, and not being likely to have any, as his wife is fifty years of age. In 1842 the bill was filed to carry into execution the trusts of the will, and for an injunction; but proceedings were suspended for a time to try the effect of negotiations for an arrangement, the Colonel undertaking not to cut timber, &c. in the mean time. These negotiations ceased in May last, and the injunction was now moved for. By the will, timber was to be cut only for repairs, and oak not even for that purpose; also ornamental groves, &c., a certain number of deer, &c. were to be preserved in a park containing ninety-six acres. The bill stated that, before 1842, the Colonel had cut timber, and had not done the repairs; that he had sold 156 ash and elm trees for 190*l.* and some of them had been cut and carried away, and that he threatened to cut more.

Lord LANGDALE granted the motion as prayed.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Tuesday, June 25.
WOODCOCK v. MONCKTON.
Post-nuptial settlement—Consideration.

Where, after a marriage, proposals were made by the lady's father for a settlement to be made by him upon the husband and wife and the issue of the marriage, upon the husband's making a similar settlement, and the father accordingly executed the settlement, but the wife having died in the meantime, leaving an infant daughter, the husband refused to execute the settlement; it was held that the father was entitled to be relieved from the covenants contained in the settlement, and to have the instrument delivered up to be cancelled.

In November 1835, a marriage was solemnized at Bengal between Mr. Edward Cradock Monckton and Miss Caroline Woodcock, the plaintiff's daughter. The lady was entitled to the sum of 1,500*l.*, but no settlement was made upon her marriage. It was proposed by the plaintiff to the uncle of the husband, that he (the plaintiff) would settle such a sum as, with the 1,500*l.*, would make up the sum of 7,000*l.*, provided the husband should settle or secure a similar sum, and enter into further arrangements for settling the family estate in case it should devolve upon him. The uncle agreed to these arrangements, which it was also alleged the husband had, by letter, consented to. A settlement was accordingly prepared, whereby the plaintiff covenanted that he, in his lifetime, or his executors or administrators, within six months after his decease, would pay to certain trustees the sum of 5,500*l.*, to be held upon trusts for the benefit of the husband and wife and the issue of the marriage, and similar trusts were declared of the 1,500*l.* belonging to the wife.

The settlement, which also contained provisions on behalf of the husband similar to those proposed, was executed by the plaintiff, and forwarded to India for execution by the husband. Before its arrival, the wife died, leaving an infant daughter surviving her. The husband refused to acknowledge the agreement, or to execute the settlement. This bill was accordingly filed, praying a declaration that the settlement was inoperative and void against the plaintiff, and that it might be delivered up to be cancelled. On behalf of the infant, it was contended that the settlement was binding.

Swanston, Koe, Wigram, Parry, Craig, Kennion, and Paton, for the various parties.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that the question was, whether in equity the plaintiff was bound by this instrument, or whether equity would interfere to relieve him from it. The terms of the covenant were such that a suit could not be maintained upon it against the plaintiff during his life. It would, however, be monstrous that he should remain for life under this cloud. His opinion was, that the intention to be collected from the whole instrument was, that the plaintiff was not to be bound unless Mr. E. C. Monckton was also bound. It had not been contended that the latter was bound; and he did not think it was material, and he did not decide whether the instrument was a deed or an escrow, or whether, on the decease of the plaintiff, an action would lie on the covenant; but he did declare that Mr. E. C. Monkton not being bound to execute, and having declined or refused to execute, the plaintiff was not bound in equity by his covenant. The instrument must, therefore, be impounded.

HAMMOND v. MAULE.
Vested interest—Minority.

A testator bequeathed a sum of money to a trustee upon trust, to invest and to pay the interest to A. B. during her life, and, after her decease, to transfer the fund to her daughter if she should then have attained the age of 21 years; and if she should not then have attained that age, then upon trust to apply the interest for her maintenance during her minority, and upon her attaining the age of 21 years, to transfer the fund to her. The daughter died in the lifetime of her mother, and under 21. Held, that it was an interest vested in her.

Mr. John Bradburn, by will, dated in 1809, gave to the Rev. Henry Hammond the sum of 1,000*l.* upon trust, to invest the same, and to pay the interest and dividends thereof to Sarah Guett for her life, and, after her decease, the testator directed that the stock or fund purchased with the said sum of 1,000*l.* should be transferred or paid to her daughter, Sarah Guett, in case she should then have attained the age of twenty-one years; but in case she should not have attained her age of twenty-one years at the decease of her said mother, then upon trust to pay and apply the said interest or dividends, as the same should become due and payable, for the maintenance and support of the said Sarah Guett, until she should attain such age of twenty-one years, and upon her attainment thereof, upon trust to transfer the said stock or fund to the said Sarah Guett, for her own use and benefit. The testator died shortly after the date of his will. Sarah Guett, the daughter, died in the lifetime of her mother, at the age of seven years, and as she was illegitimate, Mr. Maule took out letters of administration of her estate and effects, and claimed this legacy on behalf of the Crown.

Cooper and Harrison, for the plaintiff.

Wigram and Smythe, for the surviving residuary legatees under the testator's will, contended that by the death of Sarah Guett under twenty-one, the legacy passed into the residue. They cited Batsford v. Kebbell (3 Ves. 363); Leake v. Robinson (2 Mer. 384); Taylor v. Bateman (8 Sim.); Watson v. Hayes (5 Myl. & Cr. 125); Butcher v. Leach (5 Bea. 392); Hanson v. Graham (6 Ves. 239); Wadley v. North (3 Ves. 364).

Spencer and Wood, for the representatives of a deceased residuary legatee.

Twiss and Wray, for the Crown, were not heard.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the law of the court on such a question was too well settled to leave any doubt that the legacy was vested in Sarah Guett. To decide otherwise would be to overrule one of the most clearly-established principles of law. He did not entertain the slightest doubt upon the point.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Saturday, June 29.

The Court sat to-day to give judgment on the cases standing over from Easter Term and Trinity Term.

LEWIS v. MARSHALL.

"Cargo" and "freight," primâ facie, refer to goods only: therefore passengers and passage-money will not be included within the terms Cargo and Freight. In order to vary the ordinary meaning of these terms, and to make them comprise passengers and passage-money as well as goods, the evidence at the trial must be clear, cogent, and irresistible.

TINDAL, C. J.—The question which has been argued before us in this case arises on an issue taken under the third plea upon an allegation in the first count of the declaration. That count was framed on a letter of guarantee which was written by the defendants' ship-brokers to the plaintiff, the owner of the ship Stratheden, by which letter the defendants engaged with the plaintiff to have a full cargo for the Stratheden, the rates of freight for which were to average 40s. per ton, and at least nine cabin passengers, whose passage-money was to average 75*l.* The breach of contract assigned in the declaration was, that "the defendants did not have and procure a full cargo for the said ship, the rates and freight for which would average 40s. per ton, according to the true intent and meaning of the agreement, and the defendants, in the third plea, took issue on this breach on the terms on which it was framed. At the trial, it was proved that the average rate of freight for goods put on board by the brokers amounted to 32s. only per ton, instead of 40s. as specified in the contract. It was also proved that, besides the goods, the brokers had shipped on board several teerage passengers for the voyage, the passage-money paid by each such steerage passenger, after deducting therefrom the expense of their diet during the voyage and the allowance to be made for tonnage occupied by them and their necessary stores, when added to the freight of the cargo, properly so called, made the average earnings of the whole ship, per ton, amount to more than 40s.; and the question at the trial was, whether this was a performance of the terms of the guarantee. The defendants offered parol evidence to prove that the terms "cargo and freight," when used in a contract of this description, with reference to the voyage on which this vessel was engaged, did, by the general usage and course of trade, not only comprise "cargo and freight," in the strict and proper sense of these words, as applicable to goods, but also comprised cargo and steerage passengers, and the net profit arising from the passage-money. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, objected to the admissibility of this evidence, contending that the terms of the contract were precise, and perfectly free from all ambiguity. I thought, however, the case fell within that class of mercantile contracts in which such evidence was held to be admissible, and I received it accordingly; but, as the evidence appeared to me, after it had been received to be not admissible, I declined to leave it to the jury as a means of interpreting the contract, but told them the terms of the agreement must be interpreted in their plain and ordinary meaning; that the legal effect of the contract was, that the brokers engaged to procure a full cargo of goods, properly so called, which should average the freight of 40s. per ton, which they had not done; and that the jury must find their verdict on the first count for the plaintiff. The jury, nevertheless, found their verdict on this count for the defendants, and the case came before us on a motion for a new trial, as upon a verdict against evidence, and against the direction of the judge. On shewing cause against the rule, it was contended on the part of the defendants, first, that I ought not to have withdrawn the effect of such evidence from the jury, and taken the construction of the contract upon myself; and, secondly, that the evidence given at the trial proved that the construction of the contract was that which the defendants had contended for; and as the respective parties, on the discussion of the question, had requested the Court to substitute themselves for the jury, and to make a final conclusion of the question between them, both as to the law and the facts, it becomes necessary to decide both questions; upon the first point we take the acknowledged distinction to be this: if the evidence offered at the time by either party is evidence by law admissible for the determination of the question before the jury, the judge is bound to lay it before them, and to call on them to decide upon the effect of such evidence; but whether such evidence when offered is of that character and description as makes it admissible by law, is a question for the determination of the judge alone, and ought to be left solely to his decision. On the present occasion, the question was whether there was a recognized practice and usage in reference to a vessel engaged in that particular business out of which the written contract, the subject-matter of the action, arose, and to which it related, which gave a particular sense to the words employed, so that the parties may be supposed to have used those words in such a sense. The character and description of evidence admissible for that purpose is the fact of the general usage and practice prevailing as to particular trades and businesses, and not the judgment and opinion of the witnesses; or a contract may be satisfactorily and correctly interpreted by a reference to the fact of the usage, as it may be presumed that such fact is known to the contracting parties, and that they contracted in conformity thereto; but the judgment and opinion of witnesses called afford no safe guide for that interpretation, as their judgment and opinion are confined to their knowledge of their own business. On referring to the notes of the evidence at the trial, we are inclined to think that the evidence offered falls under the latter character and description, and that that general ground was properly withdrawn by the judge from the consideration of the jury; it becomes necessary, however, from the course the cause has taken, that we should arrive at a positive opinion on this point, for we all agree in the opinion that if the evidence had been submitted to the jury, they ought to have found a verdict for the plaintiff. The contract itself, as it appears to us, speaks with much plainness and precision; the words "cargo" and "freight" do, primâ facie, in their natural and ordinary meaning, refer to goods only; and where in the same document occur the words "cabin passengers and passage-money," and a contract is made between the same parties as to such latter-mentioned subject-matter, the inference is almost inevitable that the former words were not intended, within the meaning of the contracting parties, to comprise passengers and passage-money of any description, and the parties shew themselves to be capable of making a contract as to passengers by their proper and specific terms. In order, therefore, to vary the ordinary meaning of such plain words, and to make them comprise passengers and passage-money as well as goods, we think that the evidence ought to have been clear, cogent, and irresistible; whereas at the trial, although two of the witnesses spoke of the usual course of practice in the trade, the third speaks of his own judgment alone; and there is no evidence of any such construction as stated by any of the witnesses within their own knowledge, and the agreement, if valid, is declared not to be according to the usual course of things. The fair inference drawn from their testimony at the trial appears to us to be that it is customary, in calculating the earnings of the ship, or making up the amount of the earnings, the money paid by the steerage passengers should form a necessary item, and there is no general usage in a contract of such a description as this, that such a meaning should prevail; we, therefore, upon this evidence, think that instead of there being a new trial, the verdict entered for the defendants on the first count should be set aside on the usual terms, and be entered for the plaintiff for such sum as shall be ascertained between the parties unde. the agreement entered into, and we rule accordingly.

Stead v. Williams.

Where the description of an invention has been so published as to become part of the public stock of information, a person who takes out a patent for such an invention is not the true and first inventor within the meaning of 21 Jac. 1, c. 3, s. 6, although he may have not borrowed his invention from such information.

Sir Thomas W—e and Shee, Serjt. (with whom was Webster) shewed cause in Easter Term last against a rule which had been obtained for setting aside the verdict found in this cause for the plaintiff; and Channell and Byles, Serjts. (with whom were Hoggins and Warren) were heard in support of the same. (The facts of the case will sufficiently appear in the judgment of the Court now delivered.)

Tindal, C. J. in delivering judgment, said—This was an action for the infringement of a patent granted for an invention for "making and paving public streets and highways, public and private roads, courts and streets, with timber and wooden blocks." The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was not the first and true inventor of the said invention in the patent and specification mentioned, besides various other pleas, which it is not necessary to particularize with reference to the present motion, and, on the trial at the last summer assizes at Liverpool, before my brother Cresswell, a verdict was found for the plaintiff, but a rule nisi was afterwards granted for a new trial, and, on the report of the learned judge, it appears that, before the granting of the letters patent to the plaintiff, there had been published in a scientific work in England a letter from a gentleman named Heard, containing such a description of the mode of paving blocks as made it fit to be submitted to the consideration of the jury as not differing substantially from the invention for which this patent was granted. It appears, also, in summing up the evidence with reference to the plea above adverted to, the jury were told, in substance, that if they thought the patentee had borrowed his invention directly from the publication which had been proved, he could not be considered as the first inventor; so also, if the letter had been so far communicated to the public as to become a part of the public stock of information, and he had obtained his knowledge indirectly from the publication, he was not to be considered as the first inventor within the intention of the statute. On the discussion before us it was contended that this mode of summing up, although undoubtedly correct, so far as it went, yet it did not present a fair view of the case to the consideration of the jury; for it was argued that if the invention had been communicated to the public, though it never directly or indirectly came to the knowledge of the patentee, still he could not be considered as the inventor. It was admitted, on the part of the defendant, that no case could be cited in which the case had been expressly decided, but it was contended that, in point of reason and principle, such must have been held to be the case; for if the invention had been already communicated to the public, it would be unreasonable that they should lose the benefit of it, and be restricted from making use of it by a patent being taken out by one whose claims to such a patent could only be supported on the ground of his being ignorant of that which had been communicated to the rest of the world; and though no decided case was cited, various dicta of the learned judges, which are found to support the view so contended for, were offered, and particularly what was said by Mr. Baron Alderson in Carpenter v. Smith (9 M. & W. 302), and the observations made by Lord Lyndhurst and the other Lords of the Privy Council, as reported in 1 Webster, 718, where Lord Lyndhurst says, "If a machine is published in a book distinctly and clearly described, corresponding with the description in the specification of a patent, though it has never been worked, is not that an answer to the patent?" It is continually the practice, on trials for patents, to read out of printed books, without reference to any thing that has been done. "And again," he says, "if an invention is in use at the time the patent was granted, a man cannot have a patent, though he is the original inventor; if it is not in use, he cannot obtain a patent if he is not the original inventor; he is not called the inventor who, in his closet, invents, but who does not communicate it; the first person who discloses an invention to the public is considered the inventor." On a full consideration of this subject, we have come to the conclusion that the view taken by the defendant's counsel is substantially correct; for we think, if the invention has already been made public in England by a description contained in a work, whether written or printed, which has been publicly circulated, in such case the patentee is not the first and true inventor within the meaning of the statute, and whether he has himself borrowed his invention from such publication or not; because we think that the public cannot be precluded from the right of using such information as they were already possessed of at the time the patent was granted. It is obvious that the application of this principle must depend on the particular circumstances which are brought to bear on each particular case. The existence of a single copy of a work, though printed, or brought from a depository where it has long been kept in a state of obscurity, will afford a very different inference from the production of an Encyclopædia or other work in general circulation. The question will be, whether, on the whole evidence, there has been such a publication as to make the description a part of the public stock of information. We think, therefore, as this question has not been submitted to the jury, there ought to be a new trial in this case.

Davies v. Lowndes.

Since 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, a writ of right by journées accompts cannot be sued out. Such writ is a new writ, and not strictly a continuance of a former one, which had abated.

But where, since 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, such writ was sued out against the heir of the deceased tenant, the Court refused summarily to interfere by setting the writ aside, but left the tenant to demur. The mise upon the mere right cannot be joined with pleas raising questions of fact for a jury.

Talfourd, Serjt. and E. V. Williams (with whom was Willes), appeared for the demandant, and Sir Thos. Wilde and Byles, Serjt. (with Kelly and Gray), for the tenant.

Tindal, C. J. in delivering judgment, said—Two rules have been obtained in this action on a writ of right:—The first, by the tenant calling on the demandant to shew cause why the writ of grand cape, and the sheriff's return thereto, and also the count delivered in this action, and all other proceedings thereon, should not be set aside; the second, on the part of the demandant, calling on the tenant to shew cause why he should not elect between the first plea and the general mise and certain other pleas comprised in a rule to plead several matters, and why either the said first plea or such other pleas should not be struck out and set aside. With respect to the first rule, which involves a question of far more importance than the other, the facts are, that the former writ of right was sued out on the 6th of December, 1832, by the present demandant and her late husband, who died during the progress of the suit, and whose death was duly suggested on the record, against Wm. Selby Lowndes, esq. the tenant of the tenement sought to be recovered; that on the trial at the bar of the Court of Common Pleas, a verdict was found for the tenant; but that, on a bill of exceptions to the ruling of that Court, the Court of Error awarded a venire de novo; that the cause was tried a second time at the bar of the Court of Common Pleas, and a verdict was again found for the tenant; a bill of exceptions was again tendered to the ruling of the Court, but that between the date of the second verdict and the argument on the second bill of exceptions the said Wm. Selby Lowndes, the sole tenant to the writ of right, died; after his death, namely, in Hilary vacation 1843, the demandant sued out a new writ of right against the heir, grounding her right so to do upon the doctrine of a writ purchased by journées accompts. The tenant shortly afterwards made application to the Lord Chancellor to set aside the writ so issued, on the ground that all writs of right having been abolished from and after the 31st of December, 1834, by the statute of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, that no writ of right could now be issued under any circumstances; and, secondly, that the right of proceeding by journées accompts did not hold in the case of the death of the sole tenant to the writ. The Lord Chancellor, after expressing his opinion in terms that it was impossible to misunderstand, that the writ of journées accompts was not maintainable by law, on the ground of the first objection, declined however to act on that opinion by quashing or setting aside the writ, on the ground that the same objection might be raised on demurrer in an ulterior stage of the proceedings, where it might become the subject of review by the ordinary tribunals of the law. The same objections have been raised before us on this application to set aside the count and all the judicial processes issued in this Court, and after hearing a learned argument in support of and against such an application, we have come to the same conclusion as that arrived at by the Lord Chancellor, and for the same reason, namely, that by analogy to the course and practice as adopted in this and the other courts of Westminster Hall, we think we ought not, upon a summary application, from which there can be no appeal, to decide upon a question which involves the final determination of the rights of parties, when the very same question may be raised upon the record, and thereby not only the judgment of this Court be obtained, but, if thought necessary, the judgment of a court of ultimate appeal. It is obvious that such is the case, for the count in the present action necessarily forms part of the record, and that count states on its face, that the former writ against the late tenant was issued before the passing of the late statute 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, and it also recites the count upon the former writ, whereby it appears that the demandant Elizabeth Davies alleged the seizin of Thos. J. Selby, deceased, whose heir she states herself to be, within sixty years next before the commencement of that suit; it also sets forth all the subsequent proceedings in the action down to the giving of judgment on the second writ of error, and then it avers the death of the sole tenant to the former writ; the count then states, that by reason of the death of the said Wm. Selby Lowndes, the said writ of right issued in that behalf became and was abated, and thereupon by journées accompts, that is to say, within fifteen days next after the giving of the last-mentioned judgment by the said Court of Exchequer Chamber, she freshly brought this present suit, wherein she now counts; and that count, after setting forth verbatim the writ which was last issued, alleges the seizin of T. J. Selby, deceased, whose heir she alleges herself to be, within sixty years next before the commencement of the said suit, wherein the said Thomas Davies and Elizabeth his wife were demandants, and brought the present suit as a continuation by journées accompts as aforesaid. It is clear that the very objections which the tenant intended to raise against the validity of this second writ of right appears upon the record itself—namely, the power of issuing a writ by journées accompts, where the former has abated by death of the sole tenant, the power of suing out any writ of right by journées accompts, after the passing of the statute of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, and also the objection that the seizin of the ancestor from whom the tenant claims, was not laid within sixty years next before the teste of the writ last sued out, but within sixty years next before the teste of the former writ; and it is equally clear the tenant may either raise his objection to the proceedings, and call for the judgment and decision of the Court thereupon at the time of his pleading, by demurring to the count; or he may at his option reserve the objection till after the trial has taken place upon the merits, at which time the objection to the writ, if well founded, would be equally fatal to the proceedings as at the present time, on the principle debile fundamentum fallit opus. If this mode of deciding the question on the demurrer had not been open to the tenant, if he had not possessed the power of raising the question whether the writ was valid or not before a superior court, except by previously incurring the expense of a new trial, we should have thought it our duty at once to have quashed the proceedings, and declared the writ issued in this case by journées accompts a nullity; but as the tenant has the opportunity of bringing the question at once before a court of record as a simple question of law, we think that he can have no right to complain if we decline to proceed summarily and to leave the question open for discussion before the highest tribunal. Such being the determination at which we have arrived, we nevertheless think it right to explain the ground on which our judgment is formed; that in the present state of the law a writ by journées accompts cannot be sued out in order that the demandant may have an opportunity of determining for himself the expediency of incurring the additional expense of litigation, which, if it should turn out even favourable to himself on the merits, it would be fruitless in the event. The broad ground on which we rest our opinion that the present writ by journées accompts cannot be supported is the operation of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 36. By that statute it is enacted that no writ of right, and no other action, real or mixed, with certain exceptions mentioned in the statute, shall be brought after the 31st of December 1834; the words of the Act are precise and peremptory, including, extending to, and comprising all writs of right whatever, whether originally sued out or not by journées accompts, or, which is contended to be the case before us, sued out by continuance. The question, therefore, becomes this, is the writ of right so newly sued out a fresh and a different writ from that which was first sued out? If it is so, the consequence would necessarily follow that it is not a writ allowed by the law—there is no such writ in existence—no office from which, nor is there any officer by whom, such new writ can be issued; and that it is a new writ is the language of all the books. If a writ abates without default of the demandant, or plaintiff, he may have a new writ by journées accompts. (6 Coke, 10 B.) The expression is, a new writ in aliud breve. Now, in the Terms de ley it is said that he may purchase a new writ. The demandant contends that is not a new writ in substance, but a continuance of the old writ, whereas it appears to us strictly and properly it cannot be a continuance, for it is not issued till after the old writ has abated, and Lord Coke, in his report above referred to, calls it quodammodo continuance. The Statute of Limitations (32 H. 8, c. 2) expressly gives a power of suing out such new writ in the case of abatement of the former writ by death, and it expressly enacts that the demandant, if alive, or his next heir, may pursue his action within one year next after one action or suit has abated, and shall enjoy all such advantages within the said one year as the demandant in such writ has or might have had on the said former action or suit." As it is, it appears that the second suit is not a continuance of the first, but that the two suits, the former and the present, are distinct. The statute 21 James, c. 16, makes a similar legislative provision for the plaintiff's bringing a new action within one year next after judgment for the plaintiff has been reversed by writ of error and the entire silence in the statute now under consideration, where these exceptions are found in the former, leads to the conclusion that the common law cannot introduce a provision in favour of the demandant, a conclusion to which the two cases referred to in Brooke's Reading on the former statute (32 H. 8), 154, 155, affords a strong confirmation; for in these cases it is held that the statute only made provision for a new writ where the former suit was abated by the death, and the demandant was not entitled to sue out such writ by journées accompts, where the former had abated by any other cause, though without the fault of the demandant. If, therefore, where the Statute has made an actual provision for a new writ in that case, namely, abatement by death, and such provision cannot be extended to any other species of abatement, there could be no alleged ground for counteracting the general words of the statute Wm. 4, by introducing an exception on which the Act is altogether silent. Without entering into the consideration whether the doctrine of journées accompts applies to the case of abatement by the death of the sole tenant, which is the case now under consideration, we have arrived at the conclusion which I have before stated; but at the same time, for the reasons before given, we think the first rule must be discharged. With respect to the second rule, the question is, whether the tenant's mise upon the mere right can be joined with other pleas which raise questions of fact for trial by an ordinary jury? and we think the two cannot be joined together. The mise is not properly a plea, but a defence of a peculiar kind, in which the [illegible] takes on himself to assert that he has a better title than the demandant. An inspection of the [illegible] at the end of the 3rd vol. of Blackstone's [illegible] will shew at once how variable is the process for the trial of an issue in the one case and that in the other. The oath administered to the recognitors of the grand assize is a different oath to that taken by the jury, and the number of recognitors is different. Many of the issues raised by the pleas are involved on the trial; and if it is supposed for a moment that there could be a jury to try the issue, and the mere right should be tried by the recognitors, great and inextricable confusion would arise if the jury were to find one way, and the recognitors another. No instance has been pointed out where this could be allowed as a matter of right. In the writ of right tried at Lancaster, which was referred to as an authority, it appears that the issues of fact were tried by the recognitors by consent of the parties, and we cannot but think the allowing such a practice by consent to be greatly inexpedient, and makes any proceeding against witnesses very hazardous. We cannot, therefore, without any authority, introduce a new practice on this occasion, which is not improbably the last writ that will be tried. We therefore think that this rule, which calls on the tenant, to elect must be absolute.

Discharged with costs.

ADMIRALTY COURT.

Monday, June 3.

THE GLASGOW PACKET.

Salvage.

Where it appears that the salvors have performed a meritorious service in the first instance, but have been guilty of subsequent misconduct in forcing their services upon the owners when they were no longer wanted, the Court allots to them a reward for the assistance rendered up to the time when that misconduct commenced, and a sum nomine expensarum proportionate to the costs up to that period.

One of the witnesses in the cause having sworn to contradictory affidavits, the Court intimated its intention of suggesting to the Lords of the Admiralty the propriety of prosecuting him for perjury.

A claim for salvage by the crews of several luggers against the owners of the Glasgow Packet.

The owners made a tender of 9*l.* 12*s.* for tide-work.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment of the Court. The argument was heard on the 26th of April and the 3rd of May, and

LUSHINGTON, Dr. now pronounced judgment. This vessel, whilst proceeding up the river on a voyage from Glasgow to London, came to anchor in Gravesend Reach, and, whilst so at anchor, was run into by a brig called the Margaret, which caused her, a short time afterwards, to sink. This occurrence took place on the 30th of November last. Immediately after the collision the anchor was slipped, she was taken in tow by the Tam O'Shanter, and brought over to the Essex shore. Three men of the Spring assisted in the performance of this work. Whilst so lying at anchor on the Essex shore, some of the sails and part of the cargo were put on board of the Grey Mare Meg, which came up subsequently. The services of those who now claim to be salvors, according to their own account, commenced whilst the vessel was lying at anchor, and about to sink. A service, whatever it may be, or to whatever reward it may be entitled, is, to a certain extent, admitted by the tender which has been made. I shall consider when that service commenced, of what kind it was; 2nd, what degree of merit ought to be attached to it; 3rd, when it ended. Upon the duration of the services of course much will depend; and my decision in some respects must be governed by the determination of that point. Now, in some respects this case certainly differs as relates to the form in which it has been conducted from the form which is used in ordinary cases. The original statement for the salvors does not contain the whole facts, but it keeps back matters of considerable importance in this case; I refer particularly to what occurred upon the arrival of Mr. Jones, who was engaged to raise this vessel. On the other hand, the answer sets up a different case, and in many respects negatives the case of the salvors inferentially and not directly. Now I must observe that this mode of conducting a case requires the Court to exercise a more than common degree of care in order to discover what is really in issue between the parties. The usual and most convenient course is to negative expressly every important matter which is intended to be denied—the principle of pleading by act on petition being, that what is not denied is to be considered as true; and if such a course be departed from, there is great risk that the case may be prejudiced, for it is impossible always precisely to ascertain what is intended to be an inferential denial. The salvors alleged that the service commenced about eleven o'clock on the 30th November by the mate boarding two men of the names of Spiers and Allen, who were at that time in their skiff James approaching the vessel; that the mate directed them to save what they could, and that it was done accordingly. The master, at that time, it is also averred, was not on board his own vessel, but on board the Margaret. Now this statement of the salvors is confirmed by them upon oath, and it is not negatived in the answer to their statement in any manner whatsoever. The statement of the salvors, therefore, being supported by affidavits, I must proceed on the ground that this was the commencement of the service, and, if so, it was clearly a just and legitimate commencement. Shortly afterwards the Hope and the Confidence came up, and little seems to have been done, or attempted to have been done, till the master gave the charge of the vessel to two of the salvors. The master at this time was about to proceed to London with all the crew, excepting the mate and another person, and he gives the written paper in question to two of the persons named in that paper. Upon what principles am I bound to construe the effect of this paper? I apprehend that this Court, as all other courts, is bound to take the meaning of a written document from its contents, and not from parol explanation. In considering written documents, of whatever nature they may be, it is a cardinal rule, applicable to all cases, that no parol explanation shall be received. Evidence of the circumstances under which it was written may be given, but a parol explanation of the words cannot be received. There is no principle more important than that to which I have referred. You may shew that a written document was obtained by fraud, and then it becomes mere waste paper; or you may shew that circumstances were agreed to be stated in the document and improperly left out, and these facts may be restored to the document itself; but you cannot attempt to explain the contents of a written document by evidence as to what the parties said or merely intended at the time, except it was reduced into writing. It is quite evident what the effect would be—that all written documents would be perfectly nugatory, if it were open to parties on parol explanation to say that they did not mean that which the words import to mean upon the very face of them. I must then give to the words used the ordinary acceptation. The words in that document are these:—"November 30, 1843. I, David Nichol, leave charge of the Glasgow packet to Mr. Spayrs. James Groves." Now, then, the meaning is that the charge and care of the vessel was given to the persons named, and that this charge so given must, in all ordinary acceptation, mean an authority to do all that might reasonably be thought fit for the preservation of the property. If any thing else was intended, it ought to have been expressed in the paper. I cannot engraft any limitation upon it which is not consistent with the ordinary, plain, and primary meaning. If it had been intended to have said that this charge was given for a specific purpose only, then the paper ought to have stated that it was merely for the prevention of plunder, or if it was intended to be, not a charge at all, but merely an order to prevent plunder, and the vessel was to remain in charge of the mate, then that fact ought to have been stated. And now I must observe that the very fact of the master giving the charge of the vessel to these men goes, in my judgment, a great way to discredit the assertion that their services were rejected altogether in the first instance, and were actually forced upon the master. Surely if the men had so misconducted themselves, the master would not have selected some of these very persons for the purpose of intrusting to them the care of the vessel. He might have deemed it necessary to leave more of his own crew to have performed that duty. For this reason I am of opinion that these salvors are entitled to be paid a reasonable compensation for their exertions from about noon of November 30 till some time on the 2nd of December, when the persons arrived from London, and other occurrences took place, to which I must presently advert. I see no reason, and no reason is stated in the papers, why I should disapprove of the measures the salvors pursued; the sending to Gravesend, or what was subsequently done in the preservation of the property and the prevention of accident. The tender of 9*l.* 12*s.* I think an inadequate compensation for this service; but before I adjudicate on this point I must look at the subsequent circumstances. The next question is, whether these men were at any time, and when, actually and lawfully discharged and prohibited from further interference with the vessel. In common cases, it is true, when the services of the first set of salvors have been accepted, and they are competent to perform the service, they cannot be dispossessed by subsequent salvors. But such principles have no application whatever to the present case. Here the vessel was actually sunk, and it was impossible for the original salvors to have raised her by their own unassisted services; and, moreover, the owners were on the spot to give the orders which they deemed best for the preservation of their own property. Again, in some cases salvors have a right to retain possession to secure for themselves the compensation which may be due, but such rule has no place here; for here there was no possession acquired by salvage service; and, what is a still more important fact, it is the foundation on which salvors are allowed to retain possession. There was no necessity for retaining the ship to secure the demands upon the owners; for the ship could not by possibility, under the circumstances, have escaped the process of this court. If these men were then actually discharged by the owners or the authorised agents, in my opinion there was no legal—no justifiable ground—for any attempt to continue their services, and they cannot claim to be paid for what was done against the will of the owners themselves; nor will any alleged necessity for assistance give them a claim, where of this necessity the owners and agents were the only proper judges. It would be a most dangerous doctrine to hold, that, in the river Thames, any set of persons can be entitled to supersede the authority and overrule the discretion of the owners of the ship as to the preservation of that which is most valuable to themselves—their own property. As to the men being discharged on the 2nd of December, when the person hired to weigh the vessel had arrived, there can be no doubt whatever, because, it is admitted by them in the reply, and the only difference is in the time of day. Besides, it very clearly appears that, in addition to this original discharge, they had a subsequent intimation to the same effect from the owners, and which intimation they equally and with equal imprudence, wholly disregarded. I consider the subsequent conduct of these persons exceedingly reprehensible; and I shall not allow any compensation for services—if they are to be called services—if improperly intruded on the owners. The course I shall pursue is this: I shall pronounce against the tender, which I deem to be insufficient for the services performed from the 30th of November till the 2nd of December, and I shall decree to the salvors 40*l.* instead of 9*l.* 12*s.*—for I think an entire mistake has been made on the part of the owners in considering this as merely tidework service. As to the costs, the strict course would be to give them their costs up to that time, and to condemn them in the subsequent costs; but it would be exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to work this out with any accuracy. I shall, therefore (believing that the costs for the first period ought—I do not say, are—to be greater than the latter) decree to the salvors 20*l.* nomine expensarum. I cannot close this judgment without referring to two affidavits made by a person of the name of Neale. In the latter of these, he positively contradicts what he has sworn to in the former. To such affidavits, of course, not the slightest attention can be paid. But I am not disposed to let the matter rest there. It is of the last importance that swearing of this description should be prevented; and I shall take into my most serious consideration the propriety of submitting to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty whether it would not be right that they should direct their solicitor to prosecute this person and all others who may attempt to pervert the course of justice.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COURT OF REVIEW.

June 3, 4, 7, and 24.

Ex parte BUSHELL, re ACRAMAN.

Partnership—Proof—Separate debt.

Where two members of a partnership of six had made advances to the firm, and, without the knowledge of the other partners, directed the authorized agent of the firm to sign several promissory notes in the name of the firm, and one of these two members subsequently deposited the notes with a creditor on account of a separate debt of his own; a proof against the estate of the whole firm was, under the circumstances, held to be valid.

This was a petition to expunge a proof for the sum of 10,000*l.* made upon four promissory notes against the bankrupts. The fiat was issued on the 16th of June, 1842, against six individuals, then carrying on trade in partnership, three of whom were engaged in a separate trade of their own. In 1839, D. W. Acraman, and his son and his nephew (W. E. Acraman and A. J. Acraman), carried on business in partnership at Bristol, as ironfounders. Into this business Messrs. Thomas Holroyd and William Morgan were, in October, 1839, admitted as partners. William Morgan superintended the manufacturing department; D. W. Acraman, who was of a great age, took no active part in the business; Holroyd was in fact a dormant partner; and W. E. Acraman and A. J. Acraman attended to the financial part of the business, and kept the books of the partnership. On the 11th of August, 1841, Mr Franklin was admitted to the partnership. The capital of the partnership previous to Franklin's admission amounted to 90,000*l.* When Franklin was admitted, it was agreed that the capital should be increased to a sum not greater than 250,000*l.* and that a kind of joint stock company should be formed by the partners, to be divided into shares of 5,000*l.* each, and accordingly twenty-nine shares were divided amongst the partners. There remained, therefore, shares to the amount of 105,000*l.* not taken. W. E. and A. J. Acraman had made considerable advances to the firm beyond the amount to be paid up upon their shares, but not beyond the full amount of the shares taken by them. George Morgan, the brother of the partner and the authorized agent of the firm, by the direction of W. E. and A. J. Acraman, in September, 1841, signed several promissory notes in the name of the firm, four of which being deposited with Messrs. Hulbert, Layton, and Co. on account of a private debt due to them from A. J. Acraman, formed the subject of dispute on the present occasion. The commissioner had allowed a proof on account of these notes against the whole firm, and it was now sought to expunge this proof.

Swanston and Bacon, on behalf of the petitioners, cited Attwood v. Mannings (7 B. & Cr. 278); Fenn v. Harrison (3 T. R. 757); Green v. Deakin (2 Stark. 347); Ex parte Bonbonus (8 Ves. 540); Ex parte Agas (2 Cox, 312); and Gill v. Cubitt (3 B. & Cr. 466).

Russell, Wood, and Jenkins, for the respondents.

Swanston, in reply.

The CHIEF JUDGE, after a very full statement of the case, said, that a question had arisen before the commissioner whether Mr. Franklin was liable upon these notes, which bore date prior to his becoming a partner of the firm, and the commissioner had properly held that subsequent recognition had rendered them available against all the partners. There was also a question between the estate of the three Acramans and that of the other partners, whether the notes were justifiably possessed by the two younger Acramans; and he (the Chief Judge) thought they were not. There was nothing dishonourable or concealed; but the transaction was not sustainable, though the subsequent conduct of the other partners might serve to make them liable. The notes in question were received by Messrs. Hulbert, Layton, and Co. in November, on account of a separate debt of A. J. Acraman, for payment of which certain title-deeds, then released, had been deposited. The question was whether the respondents became in orsers and holders of these notes for valuable consideration without notice. There was nothing collusive or fraudulent in the transaction, and no such appearance of irregularity as to have thrown on the respondents the responsibility of making further inquiries. There were no facts to bring the case within the principles of invalidity recognized by the decisions in the cases cited. The case of Gill v. Cubitt was held by Mr. Justice Patteson to have gone too far; but he did not think that case would serve to defeat the respondents' title. George Morgan held the same authority under both firms; he signed the notes by the direction of two members of the firm; and, under the circumstances, the firm of the six was as fully bound by his signature as if it had been written by the direct order of each separate member. The authority was complete. He could not, therefore, set aside the proof, but must dismiss the petition, the costs to be borne, one-half by the joint estate of the six, and the other half by the estate of the three Acramans.

Ex parte SMITH, re FEAVER.

Equitable mortgage—Reference—Rents.

Where, upon the petition of an equitable mortgagee for the customary order of sale, a reference was directed to the commissioner to inquire into the circumstances of the mortgage, the mortgagee was, upon a favourable report being made, held to be entitled to the rents from the order of reference.

In January 1842 the bankrupt deposited with the petitioner, Mr. Smith, for the purpose of securing a debt, some wine-warrants, leases, and oil paintings. On the 15th of November, 1842, the fiat issued, and a petition was presented by Mr. Smith, for the purpose of obtaining the common equitable mortgagee's order under the bankruptcy. On the hearing of that petition on the 2nd of February, 1844, a reference was directed to the commissioner to inquire as to the circumstances under which these wine-warrants, leases and oil-paintings had been deposited with the petitioner.

The commissioner having made his report, the only question which arose was, as to the period from which the petitioner was entitled to the rents due upon the leases.

Swanston, for the petitioner, claimed the rents from the date of the order of reference.

Bacon, for the assignees, cited Ex parte Alexander (1 Den. & Ch. 532); and Ex parte Bignold (2 Mont. & Ayr. 16).

The CHIEF JUDGE.—The petition was presented by an equitable mortgagee. The Court makes an order directing the commissioner to inquire under what circumstances the mortgage was made, and whether the petitioner had any and what claim thereto; the further order and the costs are reserved. I am of opinion that it is not opposed to my order, and that it is consistent with the authorities that the right to the rents attaches when the first order was made.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Serjt. STEPHEN.)

Tuesday, July 2.

Re J. F. DAVIS, ex parte WALTON.

Practice on opening fiat, by a creditor, the petitioning creditor having neglected to do so within three days, under sec. 4 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122—Auxiliary depositions—Power to extend time for appealing against adjudication.

In this case the fiat was issued on the 11th June, on the petition of the Coalbrook-dale Company, and on the 17th June, Palmer applied to open the fiat, but failed in proving the petitioning creditors' debt; he then withdrew his application.

On the 24th June, Homes appeared for Messrs. Walton, Walker, and Co. who were creditors to a sufficient amount, and applied to open the fiat; contending that the ineffectual attempt of the petitioning creditors, on the 17th June, was not such an "opening" of the fiat as was contemplated in sec. 4 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, so as to preclude any other creditor from applying under that section. After some consideration, his Honour allowed the fiat to be opened, when the debt of Messrs. Walton, Walker, and Co. was proved. A witness, who had been summoned to prove the act of bankruptcy, did not attend, when the further hearing of the case was adjourned until Wednesday, the 26th June. On that day, Homes attended with further depositions, and stated that, the written permission of the Commissioner having previously been obtained, the witness who had disobeyed the summons at the previous meeting had been examined in London, under the 85th section of the Act, and that his written deposition would not arrive in Bristol until Thursday morning, consequently the further hearing was adjourned. On Friday, the 28th of June, the Commissioner adjudicated, and notice thereof was stuck up on the bankrupt's house on the same evening by the messenger, who was unable to obtain admission. On Saturday morning, the bankrupt was served personally with the notice, and then applied for copies of the depositions on which the adjudication was founded; but, in consequence of their length, he did not receive them until six o'clock on Monday evening.

Smith and Stone now appeared for the bankrupt, and applied for an extension of the time allowed by the 23rd section of the Act: that section only allowed the bankrupt five days to appeal against the adjudication, and this time would expire on Wednesday, but they contended that his Honour had the power to extend the time for shewing cause.

Homes, contrà, contended that the clause was peremptory; that "if at the expiration of the said time" (meaning the five days) "no cause shall have been shewn to the satisfaction of such Court for the annulling of such adjudication, such Court shall forthwith, after the expiration of such time, cause notice," &c. In the 4th section, power was expressly given to the Court to postpone the opening of the fiat, and in the 33rd section, power was expressly given to enlarge the time of the bankrupt's surrendering, but in the whole Act, there is not any express power given to the Court to enlarge the time for appealing against the adjudication. The words "shall forthwith" are imperative on the commissioner, and leave him no discretion.

His HONOUR said, that according to the construction he put on the words of the Act, the Court had the power to extend the time for shewing cause against the adjudication, and as there were ten very lengthy depositions in this case, he thought the application reasonable, and should adjourn the hearing until Monday, the 8th instant.

Adjournment accordingly.

REG. v. O'CONNELL and OTHERS.

Conspiracy—New trial—Indictment—Venue—Misnomer of juror—Trial at bar extending from Term to Vacation—Separation of jury during progress of a trial—Omission of names from list of jurors—Newspaper published by one traverser evidence against the others—Admissibility of evidence—Misdirection.

The defendants were tried upon an indictment for conspiracy, and found guilty. The venue was laid in the county of the city of Dublin. A declaration made by one of the defendants at the Stamp Office, pursuant to 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 76, stated the place of publication of a newspaper to be in the said county, and the publication of several numbers of the paper were charged as overt acts, and given in evidence as such; Held, that it was sufficient evidence to support the venue.

2nd.—Where one of the jurors, whose real name was J. J. R. was entered on the jurors' book and the panel, and summoned and sworn as J. R. without objection, though he stated in open court that his name was J. J. R.; Held no ground for granting a new trial.

Held, 3rd, that a trial at bar, commenced in Term, may, under the provisions of the stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 31, s. 8, be continued during the ensuing vacation, and

4th, That in misdemeanor cases a jury may, during the progress of a trial (at all events by consent) be allowed to return to their homes, in the evening, upon the adjournment of the Court; and,

5th, That the omission from the jurors' book of names of persons adjudged entitled to be placed thereon is no ground for granting a new trial.

Held, 6th, That a document largely circulated at a meeting (called by some of the defendants, and charged as an overt act), and coincident in sentiment with language held by one of the defendants at the meeting, was evidence to go to the jury in support of the charge.

7th. (a)—That articles published in a newspaper belonging to one defendant were admissible as evidence of conspiracy against his co-defendants. And that reports of speeches made at certain meetings by one of the defendants, published in the newspaper of another of them, were evidence against the former to go to the jury of his having attended the meetings, and made the speeches in question.

The traversers having been found guilty of a conspiracy, after a trial at the bar of the Court, which was continued by adjournment from the 15th of January last until the 13th of February following (see 2 Law T. pp. 378 and 503 for an abstract of the indictment, and the finding of the jury); in the ensuing Easter Term their counsel moved for a new trial, or a venire de novo, upon the following grounds:—

1st. That the jury-lists from which were framed the jurors' book and special jury-list for the present year 1844 were fraudulently dealt with, for the purpose of prejudicing the traversers in their defence, and that by reason thereof they were so prejudiced, as the jury who tried this cause were struck from the special jury-list in 1844. For that John Jason Rigby, one of the jurors of the jury who tried the said cause, was sworn as John Rigby; and also for that there was no such person as John Rigby of Suffolk-st. in the county of the city of Dublin, as stated in the postea in this cause, but that the person who filled the office of juror is John Jason Rigby; and also, for that the said John Jason Rigby, prior to his having been sworn as aforesaid, informed the Court of the true state of the facts, and said in open court that he was not John Rigby, but John Jason Rigby. That there was no evidence produced at the trial to prove the alleged conspiracy, or any overt act thereof, having taken place within the county of the city of Dublin (the venue laid in the indictment). That the trial was continued beyond the end of Hilary Term, and did not terminate until the 13th day of February last, instead of its having been adjourned until the present Easter Term. That the jurors were allowed on each evening to separate and return to their respective homes, and had, during the said trial, full opportunity of reading many articles which were published, during the progress thereof, in the Evening Mail and Evening Packet newspapers, commenting on the evidence against the defendants, and calculated to influence the minds of the said jurors to find a verdict against the said defendants. That the verdict was against law and evidence, and against the weight of evidence. That there was no evidence of the existence of the alleged conspiracies. For misdirection of the learned Lord Chief Justice. That he misdirected them as to the effect of the evidence. That he stated to the jury, with strong commentary, the evidence offered for the Crown, and omitted to make any observations resulting from the evidence favourable to the traversers. For that the whole current and bearing of the learned Chief Justice's charge was such as to express and signify to the jury a strong conviction in his own mind of the guilt of the traversers; and that he did not advert sufficiently to the evidence offered for the traversers, or direct sufficiently the attention of the jury to the effect of the said evidence, or the inferences they were at liberty to deduce therefrom; and that in reading to the jury extracts from the speeches and publications given in evidence on the trial, the learned Chief Justice only read the extracts relied on by the Crown, and omitted to read the extracts relied on by the traversers; and that his lordship stated facts to the jury which were not in evidence, and did not state with sufficient clearness the application of the law to the particular facts of the case; and that his lordship expressed his opinion on the facts of the case to the jury in such a way as was calculated to control their judgment, and lead them irresistibly to a conclusion of guilt in the traversers.

Separate notices of motion (embracing amongst them the above objections) were served on behalf of each of the traversers, and they appeared by separate counsel.

The Attorney-General having objected to any counsel being called on to address the Court on behalf of the Crown until each notice of motion had been opened by the traversers' counsel, it was agreed on both sides that, instead of two counsel being heard for and two against the application of each traverser, four counsel should be heard in succession on behalf of all the traversers; that then the Solicitor-General should be heard for the Crown; that then four more counsel should be heard for the traversers, and the Attorney-General in reply.

Affidavits were made by the traversers and their attorneys in support of the application; and on the part of the Crown were filed the affidavits of Mr. Kemmis, the Crown solicitor; the clerks of the peace; the several clerks in their office, who were concerned in the preparation of the jurors' book; and of Mr. Magrath, chief clerk in their office, and who had acted as registrar to the recorder during the revision of the jury-lists—all of which negatived the fact of fraud, or intention to prejudice the traversers, by the omission of names from the jurors' lists, and expressed their belief that the omission was the result of accident, and not of design. An affidavit was also made by Mr. Hodges, the Government short-hand writer, from which it appeared that the juror, J. Rigby, was sworn with the assent and knowledge of the traversers' counsel; and also that their leading counsel had consented to the separation of the jury.

Whiteside, Q. C. Hatchell, Q. C. Moore, Q. C. and O'Hagan, in support of the motion, cited the following authorities to shew that the Court had a discretionary power to grant a new trial after a trial at bar, as well as in other cases.—Lucas v. Lucas (7 Brown, P.C. 160); Bright, executor of Crisp v. Eynon (1 Bur. 391); 2 Tidd's Pract. 905, 9th edit.; Rex v. Gough (2 Doug. 791); R. v. Holt (5 T. Friday, May 24.

Perrin, J. after adverting to the nature of the motion and the charges contained in the indictment upon which the traversers had been convicted, proceeded to say: "The first objection which has been taken to this verdict is, that there is no evidence of any act being done within the county of the city of Dublin. That objection to the venue is answered by the fact that the publication of several articles in the newspapers, which were charged as overt acts, and relied on as evidence of the conspiracy laid in the indictment, took place in the county of the city of Dublin. Another objection is, that one of the jurors sworn was not the person upon the panel. This objection is founded upon the fact that a person of the name John Rigby was sworn, and the allegation is, that his name is John Jason Rigby. Many cases were cited and discussed upon this subject, which it is unnecessary for me to examine, for he was summoned and empannelled by the name by which he was sworn, so that there was no substitution or mistake of the person: and, secondly, there was evidence that he was known by the name by which he was sworn; but, thirdly, what I particularly rely on is, he was sworn with the express consent of both parties, and in some degree at their instance, with a full knowledge of all the facts; and I would hold that, even with reference to a person whose name was not in the panel at all, when it was agreed between both parties that he should be sworn, such an objection could not afterwards be maintained. The next objection is the extension of the trial beyond the term (see 2 Law T. 501-2) into the vacation, and taking the verdict therein. With respect to that point, I say, the objection is upon the record and may be taken advantage of hereafter; and also, when the application was made on the 13th of January to enable the trial to be so extended if necessary, and the attention of the defendants' counsel was called to the subject, they declined to argue the question: and I think that the Court ought not, upon motion, to conclude the prosecutors where this objection is apparent on the record. The next objection is, the separation of the jury, and their being permitted to return to their homes each day upon the adjournment of the Court. It took place with the deliberate consent of the traversers' counsel, and it is not an unusual thing; it has occurred very frequently in misdemeanor cases, and seems to me to be a necessary consequence of protracted trials and adjournments; but what I rest on is, the deliberate assent of the traversers' counsel throughout the trial, and their making no objection until after verdict. The next objection is as to the jury-list. This question has been before the Court on two occasions—on a motion to quash the panel, and on a challenge to the array. (2 Law T. 336.) It involves a question vitally affecting the administration of justice, and one which, if made at a proper time and place, ought to be fully discussed and inquired into. (The learned judge here referred to the several affidavits which had been made relative to this subject, and then observed)—The Recorder, who for this purpose constitutes the Court of Quarter Sessions in Dublin, sat several days—I believe from the 14th to the 23rd of November—for the purpose of revising the jury-list, as returned to the clerk of the peace by the collectors of the several parishes in Dublin. Many objections were taken and applications made; and, after much discussion, the Recorder completed the correction and revision of the lists on the 23rd or 24th of November. The lists so amended contained the names and qualifications of those whom he adjudged entitled to be placed thereon. He struck out several names, and inserted many others in his own handwriting, and authenticated the list of each parish by his signature. This duty he performed under the 9th section of the statute (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 91); and it was his further duty to cause one general list to be made out of the twenty parish lists, containing the names of all persons whose qualifications entitled them to be placed thereon, arranged according to rank and property, and to have it delivered to the clerk of the peace. There seems to have been no reason why this should not have been done without delay, and the statute (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 91) seems to contemplate the completion of that duty by the justices before they separate—at all events, in time to enable the sheriff to make out the special jury-list, which it is his duty to do before the commencement of the year in which it is to come into operation. The Recorder, it appears, gave those twenty lists to Mr. Magrath, who acted as his registrar, to reduce to or make one single list therefrom, and left Ireland before it was completed. On the 28th or 29th December, and not till then, a general list was returned, but not containing all the names; several names were omitted, twenty-four at least, and amongst them fourteen of those in Audoens parish, who were entitled to be on the special jury-list. The withholding it till that day had the effect—whether the omission was intended or not—of preventing the sheriff amending the list. I regret that no attempt has been made to visit with punishment the person who was guilty of trifling with the law in a matter of such importance, whether it was by design or negligence. The more I consider this question, the greater difficulty I feel in holding that this was a perfect jurors'-book, and the more I am inclined to abide by the opinion which I expressed when the question was before the Court as a matter of a challenge—that it is a sound ground of challenge. (2 Law T. 337.) I adhere to the opinion that this was not a perfect jurors' book; but I think that the objection cannot be taken advantage of except by way of challenge, and that it cannot form a ground for granting a new trial, especially in this case, where it was known, and made the subject of a previous application, and also of a challenge to the array before the trial. The next ground of objection is the admission of illegal evidence; that is, of the printed document which was circulated at Mullaghmast. (See 3 Law T. 166.) I abide by the opinion I expressed on the argument of that question at the trial; and I do not think it necessary to add any thing further to it; I have no doubt that it was admissible evidence. (With reference to the objection that there was a misdirection by the Court, in leaving the newspaper reports published by one of the traversers to the jury as evidence of the acts and speeches of another (Mr. O'Connell), and in leaving the report in the newspaper to the jury as evidence of the conspiracy against him, and as furnishing a fact from which the jury might draw an inference that he was engaged in the conspiracy, and had attended the meetings mentioned in the report, and made the speeches there attributed to him, his lordship proceeded to say): It was contended that the newspaper was a publication in furtherance of the common end, and that, therefore, the entire of it, even though a portion of it was narrative, ought to be received in evidence against the co-traversers. I agree with that to this extent, that it is evidence as against Barrett, and as far as the acts of Barrett can affect Mr. O'Connell, it is to be received in evidence against him likewise, if he has been otherwise shewn to have been engaged in the conspiracy; but I have heard no authority cited, nor, although I have looked with great care, have I been able to find any, which would warrant us in saying that the narrative or statement in the newspaper imputed to Mr. O'Connell is evidence of the fact against him. It is argued for the prosecution that the newspapers were evidence not only against the proprietor but also against all his co-traversers; and the argument for the admissibility of those papers against Mr. O'Connell must rest upon this, that a conspiracy had previously been established; but the counsel for the defence complain that the order of things has been reversed, and that the paper has been given in evidence, to prove the primary fact of a conspiracy against Mr. O'Connell. It appears to me that these speeches, with others, were left to the jury as evidence of the conspiracy, as proof of acts by Mr. O'Connell, from whence the jury might legitimately infer that he was engaged in that common conspiracy. Upon the best consideration, and after much reflection, it appears to me that we misdirected the jury in leaving those matters to them as evidence of acts of Mr. O'Connell at Mallow and Tara, whence they might infer that he was engaged in, and a party to, the conspiracy. (His Lordship, after observing that in his opinion it was not too late to make the objection, proceeded further to say)—I am of opinion that there was, besides the evidence in question, abundant proof against Mr. O'Connell to sustain the verdict; but I do not feel myself at liberty to pronounce what the opinion of the jury might have been if this matter had not gone to them; I cannot feel myself warranted in saying that the jury would have been of opinion that, without this, there was sufficient evidence to satisfy them of the guilt of Mr. O'Connell. Therefore, upon this ground, it appears to me, and taking all these matters into consideration, that these newspapers were not admissible evidence against Mr. O'Connell of his having spoken these speeches, and that they were improperly left to the jury with that view, and they were misdirected in that respect upon an important matter which might have influenced their verdict; and upon that ground, in my opinion, the verdict ought to be set aside."

The learned judge then proceeded to comment at great length upon the charge to the jury, as it affected the case of the Rev. Mr. Tierney, and stated it to be his opinion that the Court did not direct the jury with sufficient precision in his case, and that the evidence was presented to the jury in a manner that might possibly have misled them in the conclusion at which they had arrived as regarded him, and that therefore he was of opinion that the verdict should be set aside as regarded Mr. Tierney also.

Crampton, J. expressed his concurrence in the opinion that the misnomer of the juror was no ground for a new trial. In Frost's case it was solemnly decided that such an objection could only be taken before the jury were sworn. The second ground of objection, that the trial extended into the vacation, the learned judge was also of opinion was not sustainable. Cui bono was the permission given by the statute to fix a day or days in term for a trial at bar (b) (which power the Court had before, unless the possibility of a trial commenced in term extending into the vacation were contemplated? As to the question of venue, it was sufficiently proved by the newspaper declarations lodged in the stamp-office, and the evidence of Browne, the printer to the Repeal Association, which proved the Repeal Association to be within the city of Dublin, and by several of the documents emanating from it, which were given in evidence. (See 2 Law T. 378-9.) His lordship, after expressing his opinion that the objection, on the ground of the separation of the jury, could not be sustained, proceeded to say: "There are two objections with reference to the jury-lists which have occupied a great deal of the time and attention of the Court; first, that the jury-list had been fraudulently made up for the purpose of prejudicing the traversers; and, secondly, that by such fraud the traversers had been prejudiced. Now I think the traversers' counsel have wholly failed in both branches of the proposition, and it is incumbent on them to establish both in order to sustain the motion on that ground. With regard to the question of the defendants having been prejudiced by the omission of names from the panel, they might, if they were really prejudiced, have taken another course, and had the case tried by a jury of the county of Dublin, under the provisions of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 91, or they could have applied to the Court, as was done in Hunt's case, so often referred to, and the venue could have been changed. Upon all these grounds, I am clearly of opinion that there is no reason why the verdict should be set aside upon the ground of the constitution of the jury-list. Another objection which has been raised to this verdict is, that evidence has been received against the traversers. It has been objected that the Mullaghmast ballad ought not to have been received. (See 3 Law T. 166.) It was received after very solemn consideration, but still, if the Court thought it was wrongly received, it would not refuse a new trial. There are two points of view in which it might be offered to the jury as evidence of a conspiracy, in which case it would be necessary to connect the parties with the documents; or, secondly, as evidence of the nature of the meeting at which it was circulated, on the same principle as evidence was received in Redford v. Birley. Now this seditious publication was sold in thousands, communicating to that vast assembly the same topics as the leader on the platform was addressing to those around him; I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that this Mullaghmast ballad (c) was properly received in evidence." On the other grounds of objection, also, his lordship said that the motion could not be sustained. As regarded the newspapers, the learned judge further observed they were properly received as evidence against the traversers. "No objection was made to their admissibility by any of the traversers' counsel during the trial, and they were used by them in a precisely similar way, namely, for the purpose of shewing that certain speeches had been made by the traversers at certain places; the Solicitor-General was permitted to comment on those papers as if they were evidence, and the Chief Justice was allowed to do the same without any objection, the result being that the evidence went to the jury by mutual concession, and I think it is now too late to come forward with the objection which has been taken to it." The learned judge, after commenting on the evidence against the Reverend Mr. Tierney, and observing that he had not joined the Repeal Association until the 3rd of October, after all the overt acts laid in the indictment, save one, had been committed, and that, though he did not mean to say there was not any evidence against him of a previous knowledge of the conspiracy, yet that, in his opinion, the evidence was of a slight nature, proceeded to say, "On the whole of this case, except as regards Mr. Tierney, I am of opinion that the verdict ought to be sustained; but if that course involves the safety of Mr. Tierney, as I said before, I think there ought to be a new trial as regards all the traversers."

Burton, J. after adverting to the insufficiency of the other grounds of objection to the verdict relied on by the defendants' counsel, proceeded to say: "The next matter for consideration in my view of the case respects the admission in evidence of the different newspapers of which some of the traversers are proprietors, both as that evidence affects themselves and as it may concern or affect others. So far as that evidence is applicable to themselves individually, I do not think it necessary to make any remark, concurring as I do with my brothers Perrin and Crampton. But there is then to be considered the application of this evidence to the first traverser, as it concerns a meeting at which he is represented as having attended and spoken; that representation, together with a report of his speech, being printed in a paper of which another of the traversers was at that time the registered proprietor and editor, that paper being, it is, the only evidence laid before the jury of his (Mr. O'Connell's) speech, and of his attendance or presence at the meeting; the ground of the objection to the reception of this evidence of these facts being, that although the paper so given in evidence be full evidence against the proprietor, and although it may be admissible as an act of his in furtherance of the common design imputed to the other traversers, and, so far, affecting them, yet, as being only a relation or narrative of certain facts respecting the first traverser, it can be no evidence against him of the truth of those facts. In addition to what has been said by my brother Crampton on the question, and in perfect conjunction with his opinion upon it, I do not feel it necessary to say more than that, upon the principle of the authority cited from the 24th vol. of the State Trials (Rex v. Hardy), I am satisfied that the paper was properly received in evidence against the first traverser of those facts. In the present case, the paper produced is an authenticated statement or declaration of a person charged with being a participator in the common design imputed to several of the traversers; the narrative having a direct reference to that common design, and raising the question of its tendency to the furtherance of it; and it is also subject to this additional observation, that instead of being a private or untransmitted letter or narrative, it is a printed and published notification to the public generally, and especially to that portion of the public who are members of the Repeal Association, and are in the light of subscribers to the paper; a leading member of the Association being the principal traverser himself, and any misrepresentation or inaccuracy in the narrative respecting him being, therefore, open to contradiction or correction. Upon this question I should not entertain any doubt, if it were not for the difference of opinion upon the point in one of the members of the Court, and which must have the effect of producing in my mind diffidence upon it; I feel myself bound, however, to express my judgment according to the impression made on my mind by my own research, and the assistance given to me by the opinions and reasoning of the rest of my learned brethren; indeed, I rather think the objection has been reduced nearly, if not altogether, to a misdirection, or rather to the want of a sufficient direction in the charge to the jury, and that is, if I understand it right, that they should have been told that if there was not any other evidence of the first traverser being at that time a conspirator, or participator with the editor in the common design, there was not sufficient of it; but I apprehend that to hold this we must go the length of holding, that nothing but conclusive evidence of such a fact would be sufficient, that is, nothing short of a verdict finding the fact of a common design; whereas it appears to me that if there was evidence, and that satisfactory to the jury, of facts of participation, it is quite sufficient to make the act of one of the traversers the act of another in furtherance of the common design." His lordship then, with reference to the case of the Rev. Thomas Tierney, said, he could not concur in the opinion of his brothers Crampton and Perrin that the evidence against him was insufficient; he thought his knowledge of, and consent and concurrence with, the other traversers in the common design might be inferred from his own acts and words, although no formal declaration of it could be shewn; and, after summing up and reviewing the numerous objections to the Chief Justice's charge and to the verdict being against evidence, and the weight of evidence, said that, in his opinion, there was no sufficient ground for awarding a venire de novo, or granting a new trial.

(b) By the stat 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 31. s. 3 (analogous to 1 Wm. 4, c. 70), it is provided, "that if any trial at bar be directed by any of the said courts, it shall be competent to the judges of such courts to appoint such day or days for the trial thereof as they shall think fit, and the time so appointed, if in vacation, shall be deemed and taken to be a part of the preceding term." As to the order for a trial at bar which was obtained in this cause, see 2 Law T. 501-2.

(c) This document, though called during the trial and the subsequent argument, the Mullaghmast ballad, was in prose, and consisted of extracts from different histories of Ireland, with very inflammatory comments upon them.

PENNEFATHER, C. J. concurred altogether in the view taken by Burton, J. and in the judgment he had delivered, and, after adverting to the various other objections taken, proceeded to say: "The next topic is the reception of the newspapers in evidence; my brothers Burton and Crampton have expressed their opinion that they were evidence not only against Messrs. Barrett and Duffy, but also against all the traversers. I agree with them both in that opinion, and will explain the grounds of my concurrence: it was perfectly plain that the publication of seditious and inflammatory documents was an illegal act, and was done in furtherance of the common design. It was not in the nature of a confession, as the letter in Hardy's case, or of a narrative of facts; it was an act done in furtherance of the common object. To take the case of Barrett and the Pilot, there was evidence to go to the jury that it was an act done by him in furtherance of the object of the conspiracy, and that question, like all others, was left to the jury; then, this publication being of such a nature, it is to be considered as the act of O'Connell as well as Barrett, once the jury had come to the conclusion that there was a conspiracy. I do not mean to say that it was conclusive evidence that Mr. O'Connell was at the meeting in question, it was open to him to have shewn that he was not there, or that, if he was, he did make the speech attributed to him. I quite agree with my brother Burton that you are not to wait until the jury have given a verdict whether there was a conspiracy in existence or not, before you go into other evidence. There is another ground upon which this appears to me to be evidence against all the traversers; Mr. O'Connell was a leading member of the Repeal Association; he was chairman of the committee which drew up a list of the duties of repeal wardens, one of which duties is for them to have certain newspapers, amongst which are the Pilot and Freeman, circulated as widely as possible. To this document Mr. O'Connell attached his name, as chairman of the committee. But (and this is a most material point) no objection was made at the time of the reception of this evidence. It has been said that Mr. MacDonough had objected to its admissibility; but that objection only related to the analogy between the publications in the newspapers and a confession, as the letter was held to be in Hardy's case. The objection which is now raised was not made at the time, nor was it made in a specific, tangible form. I look upon it as a rule that any objection, either to the charge of the judge or to the evidence, ought to be made at the time, and in a specific form; and the reason is, that, if the objection is to the evidence, new evidence may be given; or, if to the charge of the judge, he may be able to withdraw, qualify, or explain it. This principle, which is equally applicable in a misdemeanor as in a civil case, has been laid down in Ball v. Mannin (3 Bligh, N. S. 22), by Lord Tenterden and Lord Plunket; and I utterly protest against the course adopted of reserving such objections until months after the trial. There is no affidavit made denying the facts by any of the traversers, except the Rev. Mr. Tierney, for the affidavit of Mr. O'Connell merely denies an inference of law." His lordship then commented on Mr. O'Connell's address to the jury, in which he had referred to the newspapers in corroboration of his assertions. The Solicitor-General also referred to the same newspapers, and there was no objection made by any of the traversers' counsel; and the Court, without any interruption, then charged the jury, on the principle that all the papers were in evidence. His lordship, after having expressed his concurrence with Mr. Justice Burton, as well as regarded Mr. Tierney as the other traversers, pronounced the rule of the Court to be that the motion be refused generally.

Smith, A. G.—After what has fallen from two of the members of the Court, I shall not call up Mr. Tierney for judgment.

CRAMPTON, J.—Do you mean to enter a nolle prosequi as to him?

Smith, A. G.—I was not aware until the judgment of the Court was pronounced, that the Court was divided upon the subject of this case. I do not mean that any judgment is to be kept hanging over the head of Mr. Tierney; but I must consider, with reference to the state of the record generally, the manner in which the proceeding should be entered.

CRAMPTON, J.—I am satisfied. As this is the course to be pursued with respect to this particular traverser, I have to observe that my opinion fully concurs with that of my brother Burton and my Lord Chief Justice, in refusing the application for a new trial as regards the other traversers.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

So the annual process of Bill strangling has begun. The murder of the Innocents was duly announced by Ministers on Monday. The Premier's statement of the measures to be abandoned and those to be pressed will be found below. The following only are of peculiar interest to our readers:—

The Poor Law Amendment Bill is to be pressed, so let the Profession forthwith look to the clause that deprives them of the protection given by the Attorneys Act. The Bills relating to Joint-stock Companies are to be made laws.

The County Courts Bill is left in a state of suspense, hovering between life and death, depending upon the abolition of imprisonment for debt by the House of Lords. But Ministers have a hope that they may yet be able to pass both the County Courts and the Debtors and Creditors Bill. We congratulate the Profession on the abandonment of that most wretched mockery of reform, the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill. The Irish Registration Bill is also referred to next session. The country will be pleased to find that Ministers persist in passing the Railways' Regulation Bill, spite of the opposition of the Railway Companies. We shall now see which interest is most cared for by Parliament, the public or the Directors of Railways, for certainly a more righteous and a more needed measure was never submitted to a Legislature. It ought to receive the energetic support of the people out of the House.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MARRIAGES (IRELAND) BILL.

FRIDAY, June 21.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said he would now move the second reading of the Irish Marriages Bill, and the discussion might be reserved upon it until the motion was made for the House to go into a committee.—The Archbishop of ARMAGH was desirous that the Bill should go before the select committee, which had been sitting inquiring into the law of marriage generally in Ireland; because the select committee having examined witnesses and considered the matter, the Bill would be well considered there.—The LORD CHANCELLOR observed that this Bill had never been before the select committee, nor was it, since it had been prepared, under their consideration. No doubt but the select committee had gone into the investigation as to marriages in Ireland, with a view of improving the law on that subject; and when the committee was sitting he had from time to time submitted clauses which were embodied in the Bill for their consideration; but, as he had just said, the Bill in its prepared form was never before them. He had no objection, however, if the most rev. prelate desired it, to re-assemble that committee, when the Bill might be submitted to them.—After a few words from the Archbishop of ARMAGH, which did not reach the gallery,—The LORD CHANCELLOR begged to repeat that he had no objection to have the Bill submitted to the select committee, which might be reassembled for that purpose.—The Archbishop of ARMAGH said he wished to make a few observations with respect to the Bill.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said, that being the case, the discussion might be either taken now or when the motion was made for going into a committee of the whole House. He thought, however, that the most convenient course would be to have the Bill, as he had proposed, now read a second time pro formâ, and when the motion was made for going into a committee, the most rev. prelate might then address the House.—The Bill was then read a second time.

PRIVY COUNCIL (APPELLATE JURISDICTION) BILL.

TUESDAY, July 2.—On the report on this Bill, the LORD CHANCELLOR (with the consent, as we understood, of Lord Brougham, who had left the House) moved that the clauses be expunged relating to the jurisdiction in divorce cases. The clauses having been expunged, the report was received, and the Bill ordered to be ingrossed.

THURSDAY, July 4.—Lord BROUGHAM, in moving the third reading of this Bill, said he had struck out the divorce clause, and his noble and learned friend on the woolsack and himself intended to prepare a more effectual measure, extending both to divorce à vinculo and à mensâ et thoro. The Bill was then read a third time.—Their lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE BUSINESS BEFORE THE HOUSE.

MONDAY, July 1.—Sir R. PEEL, in moving the order of the day for the second reading of the Registration of Voters (Ireland) Bill, said he would take that opportunity of stating, so far as present circumstances enabled him, the course which the Government intended to pursue with those bills of which they had the charge. He thought he should include the greater portion of the important Government Bills, if he took those which stood on the "Orders" for Thursday, Wednesday, and the present day. He was sorry to say, that the mass of business set down for those days was very heavy, and the greater part of it consisted of measures which the Government must press; but he did not anticipate that, with one exception (as we understood), any of those Bills would be met with any lengthened discussion. The chief business which stood for Thursday was the Poor-law Amendment Bill, and with that it was the intention to proceed on that day. There were two other Bills relating to the duchy of Cornwall, which went to settle long-pending disputes, and he was sure that those Bills would give general satisfaction to all parties concerned. To neither of those did he anticipate any opposition. Another Bill set down for Thursday was the Metropolitan Buildings Bill—with that Bill it was the intention of his noble friend the Chief Commissioner of Woods and Forests to proceed. There were two Bills under the charge of Government which were set down in the orders for Wednesday. One of these was for the registration and regulation of joint-stock companies, and another for giving to joint-stock companies remedies at law and equity, to neither of which would there be any opposition. The first Bill which stood on the orders for the present day was the Registration of Electors (Ireland) Bill. He had stated on a former evening that he had no hope of being able to go on with the measure in the present session beyond its second reading, as, from the very serious differences existing respecting it, it would be impossible to pass it into a law in the present session. The next Bill on the orders was the Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Bill. He owned that he was surprised at learning that any objections were raised against this Bill, as its object was to extend the provisions of the English Municipal Corporation Bill to Ireland. As, however, it was so closely connected with the Registration of Voters Bill, it was by many considered desirable that both should be brought simultaneously under the consideration of the House. He would not, therefore, press the Municipal Bill in the present session, though, looking at its object, he was sorry for the delay. The next on the list was the Railways Bill, a measure of considerable importance, to which he was sorry to find that much opposition was likely to be raised by existing railway companies; but, as it was of importance to the promoters of Railway Bills now before the House, and to those which might be brought before it in the next and future sessions, that the intentions of Parliament with respect to railway legislation should be known, it was the intention of the Government to go on with the Bill in this session. With the Savings-bank Bill and the Land-tax Commissioners Bill it was the intention of his right hon. friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to proceed. As to the County Courts Bill, it was so circumstanced at present that he would rather postpone any final announcement on it to that day week, as there was now pending in the Lords a Bill which would have a most material bearing on it; and he hoped that at the end of a week from the present time the opinions of the Lords, would be made known on that Bill, and be in time to enable the House to legislate on both. The next two Bills, standing Nos. 7 and 8 on the list—the Superior Courts Common Law Bill and the Small Debts Bill —were not in the charge of any member of the Government. They were, he believed, in charge of the hon. and learned member for Chester, and he (Sir R. Peel), of course, could say nothing as to their further progress. With respect to Bills Nos. 10 and 11 on the list,—the Court of Common Law Process Bill and the Court of Common Law Process (Ireland) Bill—he could say nothing. He believed that they had come from the Lords, and were now in the charge of the hon. and learned member for Cork. For these Bills, of course, he could not be responsible. Then there was the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill; he had to state that the Government, seeing the mass of other business in the House, and the great differences of opinion which existed as to various details of the measure, did not intend to press it this session, as they had no chance of passing it through. His right hon. friend the Secretary for the Home Department had already said that it was intended to proceed with the Unlawful Oaths Bill, and also with the Copyhold Enfranchisement Bill. With the next five Bills on the list Government intended to proceed. They were the Customs Duties (Isle of Man) Bill, the Bank of England Charter Bill, the Education Bill, the Linen Manufactures (Ireland) Bill, the Charitable Loans (Ireland) Bill, and the Protection of Purchasers (Ireland) Bill. They would also go on with the Colonial Postage Bill, and the New South Wales Bill. From the tone and temper in which the opposition to the Bank Charter Bill was conducted, and which evinced a total absence of party or factious feeling, he was led to hope that it would go through its remaining stages without further discussion. The number of these Bills was large, but on the whole he did not believe that they would lead to any protracted discussion. There was one Bill which was ready to be introduced, and which was a corollary to the Bank Charter Bill. It was a Bill to establish new regulations for such joint-stock banks as might hereafter be established. It would not apply to existing banks, and would be merely prospective in its operation. There was one other Bill of considerable importance, which Government intended to bring in, and which was founded on a report of a select committee appointed to consider the manner in which the House exercised its jurisdiction with respect to contested elections. That committee was composed of hon. members who had been selected on account of their extensive acquaintance with the subject. The report, which had been some time before the House, suggested certain alterations in the law which it was the object of the Bill to carry out; therefore the principle of the Bill was already before the House. His noble friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, who was a member of the committee, would introduce the Bill, to which he did not anticipate any objection. He had now gone through the various measures before the House, or about to be laid before it, and had stated the intentions of Government with respect to each as far as circumstances enabled him to judge; but he must reserve to the Government the power of modifying this statement with respect to them, according to the progress which the Government Bills might make.—Colonel RAWDON said, there was one Bill of great importance, particularly in the north of Ireland, to which the right hon. baronet did not allude, and which was not yet before the House. He alluded to the Presbyterian Marriages Bill. He should be happy to hear what were the intentions of Government with respect to it.—Sir R. PEEL said, as a general rule, he thought it would be better not to refer to measures which were not before the House; but the Bill to which the hon. and gallant member had alluded was so important that he felt he was bound to deviate from that rule, and to state that the Government would persevere with the measure, which he thought would give satisfaction to all parties concerned; and he hoped that another session would not pass before the question was finally settled.

GAMING ACTIONS BILL.

TUESDAY, July 2.—Viscount PALMERSTON moved for leave to bring in a Bill to continue, till the end of next session of Parliament, the Act of the present session, c. 3, for suspending certain actions under the provisions of several statutes for the prevention of excessive gaming.—After a few words from Mr. M. Gibson and Sir James Graham, the motion was agreed to.

CUSTOMS' DUTIES (ISLE OF MAN) BILL.

WEDNESDAY, July 3.—This Bill passed through committee. The report was ordered to be received on Thursday.

The Linen Manufactures (Ireland) Bill was read a third time.

JOINT STOCK COMPANIES' REGISTRATION AND REGULATION BILL.

Mr. GLADSTONE moved the order of the day for going into committee on this Bill.—Mr. HAWES objected to the Bill as having been brought in without any notice to the parties immediately concerned; and also as giving to the Board of Trade an almost unlimited control over all present and future joint-stock companies. It had been said that this was recommended by a committee on joint-stock companies, as being intended to prevent the formation of fraudulent joint-stock companies. He denied that it would have that effect. The real object was to give a power of interference to the Executive in all great commercial speculations, with which it ought to have nothing to do. The Board of Trade ought not to have any such power, for the Right Hon. President of that Board seemed to have strong objections to the employment of capital in those large undertakings to which the country was so much indebted. He would now move that the House do resolve itself into the committee that day six months.—Mr. HAYTER seconded the amendment, and expressed his full concurrence in all the objections taken by his hon. friend.—Mr. GLADSTONE defended the Bill, which he hardly thought could have been tortured into a party question. Whatever were its merits, the Government did not claim any praise for it. The Bill emanated from the Select Committee on Joint-Stock Companies, of which the hon. member for Lambeth was one. He denied that the Bill had any injurious tendency. On the contrary, its great object would be most useful, because it would enable any person wishing to become connected with any joint-stock company to go to a particular office, where he would find all the particulars about the company which it was important to know, and which would prevent his being taken in by needy speculators using the names of honourable men for the purposes of fraud, or for the reckless chance of obtaining the management and control of the funds belonging to others. The hon. member for Lambeth had said, that this was an attempt to grasp at increased power by the Board of Trade. The hon. member was a lawyer, he believed. Did he ever read the Letters Patent Act? Was the hon. member aware that the Board of Trade had at the present moment the power, in conjunction, of course, with the Privy Council, to advise her Majesty to grant larger powers to joint-stock companies, or to individuals, than could be possibly given by this Bill, which limited, rather than increased, the power of the Board of Trade? He denied that the Bill was intended to apply to present joint-stock companies further than a registration of their names and objects. It was in all other respects prospective. —Mr. GODSON supported the Bill, on the ground that it would prevent the future formation of fraudulent joint stock companies, by many of which, as was proved before the Committee on Joint Stock Companies, the greatest frauds were committed, to the utter ruin of many unfortunate persons who had embarked their capital in them.—Lord SEYMOUR wished to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he would exclude at once railway companies from this Bill, and not deal with them indirectly, as this Bill would do? This would greatly facilitate the future progress of the Bill.—Mr. GLADSTONE, in answer to the question put by the noble lord (Seymour), said he had not made up his mind as to the exception of railways, but the leaning of his mind was, that the exercise of any discretionary power should not be allowed to the Board of Trade with respect to railways. What he would suggest at present was, that they should go on with the clauses generally, and when they saw what the Bill would be made in committee, then they might consider the question as to how far railways should be excepted.—Sir J. GUEST objected to the application of the Bill to railway shares, which would give too much power to the executive over all sorts of joint-stock companies.—Mr. M. PHILIPS said he had come down to the House that morning in considerable doubt on the subject of this Bill, but he owned that, having heard the debate, he came to the conclusion that there was nothing said which should induce him to refrain from going into the committee. The amendment was negatived without a division—and, the Speaker having left the chair, the House went into committee (Mr. Pringle in the chair). Clause 1 was agreed to. On clause 2 (defining the operation of the Bill), it was proposed that its provisions should not apply to any joint-stock company at present incorporated by statute or charter, except as hereinafter provided. This was agreed to, as was also an amendment excluding foreign companies having agencies in this country from the operation of the Bill. It was next proposed that the Bill should apply to Scotch and Irish joint-stock companies having agencies here. After some discussion as to what might be considered "agencies," Mr. GLADSTONE said he would consent to let the Bill apply to Scotch and Irish joint-stock companies having establishments in this country.—Mr. HAYTER saw no distinction between "agencies" and "establishments."—Mr. GLADSTONE would consent to pass the clause as it now stood, and take the objection on the report.—Mr. GILL, at a quarter past 4 o'clock, moved that the Chairman do report progress, and ask leave to sit again to-morrow. After a somewhat noisy conversation—discussion it could scarcely be called—the question, that the Chairman do report progress, was put and agreed to without a division, and the Chairman having reported progress, obtained leave to sit again on Thursday.

BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND MARRIAGES.

The fifth annual report of the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages in England (lately issued from Somerset-house) embraces a large mass of deeply interesting and important matter. The whole of the report, of which we purpose giving an abstract, deserves to be carefully perused and studied by all who take an interest in vital statistics. The mode in which the document is drawn up reflects great credit upon Mr. George Graham, the Registrar-General. He has displayed great industry in the collection of his facts, and talent and ingenuity in their arrangement and classification. The marriages, births, and deaths in the years 1839, 1840, and 1841 were as follows:—

	1839	1840	1841
Marriages ..	123,166	122,665	122,496
Births	492,574	502,303	512,158
Deaths	338,979	359,634	343,847

The marriages in 1841 were 1 in 130; births, 1 in 31: deaths, 1 in 46 of the population, the average of the two preceding years having been of marriages, 1 in 127; births, 1 in 31; deaths, 1 in 45. Thus in 1841, 769 marriages, 3,217 births, and 2,160 deaths, were registered to every 100,000 of the population. The marriages have diminished slightly in number every year. The falling off was chiefly in the metropolis, in Cheshire, Lancashire, Yorkshire, and the western division of the kingdom. There was a remarkable decrease in Monmouthshire. The fluctuation is coincident with the depression or prosperity of industry or trade in various parts of the country. The greatest number of marriages took place in autumn, and the smallest in winter. The report contains an abstract of the number of widows and widowers re married in the last half-year of 1841. It appears of 65,498 women married, 5,888, or 9 in 100, were widows; of the same number of men 8,476, or 13 in 100, were widowers. During the years 1839, 1840, and 1841, the average annual number of marriages was 122,777, so that 106,957 men, and 111,765 women, or 218,740 persons, marry every year.

One in every 72 males and 1 in 72 females are married annually in England. The proportion of remarriages is greatest in the metropolis and in the northern, western, and York divisions, where the mortality is highest, and where families are therefore most frequently broken up by the death of the husband or wife. Under the age of 21, 5,362 men and 16,285 women were married. This is a startling discrepancy. 33 in 100 men and 49 in 100 women married in 1841 signed the registers with their marks. Of the 122,496 marriages in 1841, 114,371 took place in conformity with the rites of the established church; 13 by special license; 972 by superintendent-registrar's certificate. By bans 94,298 were married; by license 19,088. Of the 8,125 marriages not performed in the established church, 5,882 were in registered places of worship, 2,064 in superintendant-registrars' offices, 66 between Quakers, and 113 between Jews. During 1841, 151 additional buildings have been registered for the solemnization of marriages.

BIRTHS.

In 1841, 512,158 births were registered; in 1840, 502,303, 1839, 492,574. Three births were registered to every two deaths. The rate of births over deaths during the three years (1839, 1840, and 1841) was 474,575, or 158,192 annually. More births take place in winter than in summer.

Years.	Winter	Spring.	Summer.	Autumn	Total.
1839..	123,543	128,806	120,115	120,110	492,574
1840.	132,305	129 039	119,822	121,117	502,303
1841.	133,720	129,884	123,868	124,086	512,150
Total	389,568	387,740	363 805	365 913	1,507,027
Mean	129,856	129,250	121,268	121,971	502,445

In the last two quarters of 1841, of 248,554 children registered, 15,879 were illegitimate; so 1 in 16 of the children born in England is not born in wedlock. In England 64 to 100 children are born illegitimate. The proportion in France is 71 in 100. Of the legitimate births the boys are to the girls as 105·4 to 100·0; of illegitimate births the boys are 108·0 to 100·0.

DEATHS.

The deaths in the year ending December 31, 1841, amount to 343,847. Upon comparing the deaths in 1840 and 1841 there will be found a decrease of 16,787. The deaths were more numerous (99,069) in the winter of 1841 than in the winter of any preceding year; but in the spring the decline commenced, which reduced the mortality in the following quarters below the mean mortality of the four years. The deaths in the four winter quarters, viz. those of 1839, 1840, and 1841, were 385,764; in the four summer quarters, 305,333; the deaths in the four springs, 355,248; in the autumns, 338,662. If the mortality were uniformly at the same rate as in the winter, 391,059 deaths would happen annually; if at the same rate as in summer, 302,827 deaths would be registered. These exhibit the striking effects of cold upon mortality; also of the crowding and privations to which a considerable portion of the population is necessarily more exposed in cold than in warm weather. The births and deaths are most numerous in winter, marriages in autumn; whilst the smaller number of births and deaths occur in summer, and marriages in winter. An elaborate tabular statement, we are happy to say, establishes a decrease of the high rate of mortality which prevailed in 1839 and 1840 in the manufacturing divisions. The marriages and births are most numerous where the mortality is highest. At the age of 15 the loss of life among girls is greater than the loss of life among boys, and it continues so for the next five years of life, when both sexes are more detached from the care of their parents, and the majority pursue the professions or trades by which they afterwards gain a livelihood. The mortality appears to increase rather rapidly from the age of 12 to 15; and then at a slow regular rate from 15 to 55 years. Supposing 100,000 children born on the 1st of January, 1841, 66,059 would attain to the age of 20. It has been stated that 51,274 boys were born alive to 48,726 girls; but the mortality in infancy was greater among boys than girls, so that 31,958 males attain the age of 25, and 31,623 attain the age of 24. This is about average age in England, and at this period the number of the sexes is nearly equal. About four-fifths of the males who attain the age of manhood marry, the proportion of women who marry being the same. Of the 100,000 persons born during the year, 50,301 attain the age of 45—viz. 25,311 men and 24,990 women. The chance of living from 25 to 45 is said to be in favour of English women. The violent deaths of men on rivers, seacoasts, mines, in the streets, in travelling, in their dangerous occupations; the mental agitations and anxieties, terminating unhappily sometimes in suicide; the accumulation of workmen in ill-ventilated shops, &c. counterbalance the dangers and sorrows of childbearing. Of 100,000 persons at the age of 60, 37,996 will be alive; 24,531 attain the age of 70; 11,823 men, and 12,708 women, the mortality of women being less than that of men after the age of 55. At the age of 80 the 100,000 is reduced to 9,398, so that 9,000 of the children born in 1841 would be alive in 1921. After the age of 80 the calculations are not so certain. Admitting the basis of the observations as to the probabilities of life to be correct, of the 100,000 persons born in 1841, 1,140 will attain the age of 90; 16 will be centenarians; and of the 100,000, 1 man and 1 woman, like the lingering barks of an innumerable convoy, will reach the distant haven in 105 years, and die in 1945.

> "Crebrescunt optatæ auræ, portusque patescit > Jam propior."

The report contains some highly important observations on the "expectation of life" at different ages, to which we direct the especial attention of actuaries of insurance-offices. It appears from the calculations made by the registrar-general, that the expectation of life at five years is 50 years; at ten, 47; at twenty, 40, at thirty, 34; at forty, 27; at fifty, 21; at sixty, 14, &c. The average age at which persons aged 30 will die is 64 years: and 74 is the average age at which sexagenarians will die. At birth the expectation of females' lives is more by two years than that of males'; at 20 it is 40·81 years, that of males being 39·88 years; at 50 the expectation of females is 21·07; that of males, 20·02; during the whole period of life after the first year the difference in the expectation does not exceed 1·17 year. An interesting table attached to this part of the report clearly establishes that the notion so generally entertained of the superior vitality of the female sex is exaggerated, and is based upon most inconclusive evidence. Some calculations are made as to the relative duration of life in three different portions of the population of this country—the population of Surrey (out of the metropolis), of the metropolis, and of Liverpool. In Surrey, in 1841, the deaths were 4,256; in Liverpool, 7,556. In Surrey, in 1841, the deaths were 4,256, in Liverpool, 7,556. Out of 14,450 boys under 5 years of age, 2,037 died in Liverpool; of 14,045 boys in Surrey, only 699 died in the same time. By this immense mortality in Liverpool the number of males living at the age of 10 to 15 is reduced much below the number in Surrey at the corresponding age. Living in Surrey, aged 20 to 30, are 15,746, but the influx of immigrants into Liverpool raised the number of males living there at this age to 23,494, who are rapidly cut down by sickness and death, so that at the age of 45 to 55 only 7,504 males were enumerated in Liverpool, while 9,281 were living in Surrey. According to the Surrey observations, 75,423 of 100,000 children born attain the age of 10 years; 52,060 live to the age of 50; 28,038 to 70; in Liverpool only 48,211 of 100,000 live 10 years; 25,878 live 50 years; and 8,373 live 70 years; in the metropolis, 64,921 live 10 years; 41,309 live 50 years; and 16,344 live 70 years. The probable duration of life in Surrey is 53 years; the metropolis 40 years: the mean duration of life does not differ so enormously; it is, however, 45 years in Surrey; 37 in the metropolis; and only 26 years in Liverpool; at the age of 30 the expectation of life is 35 years in Surrey; 27 years in Liverpool. At 50 the expectation of life is 21 years in Surrey, and 16 in Liverpool.* The duration of life in England is 41 years; if the population were stationary the mean age of those who died would be 41 years; and 1 in 41 would die every year. The population has, however, increased 1·41 per cent. annually during the last 40 years; and we find that the mean age of the persons who died in the year 1841, instead of being 41, was 29 years; while 1 in 46 of the population dies. On the subject of the influence of professional employment upon the duration of life, it is observed in the report:—

"'The numbers following different professions fluctuate more than the general population; the relative proportion of young and aged persons varies from year to year; certain professions, stations, and ranks, are only attained by persons advanced in years, and some occupations are only followed in youth. Hence it requires no great amount of sagacity to perceive that 'the mean age at death,' or the age at which the greatest number of deaths occur, cannot be depended upon in investigating the influence of occupation, rank, and profession upon health and longevity. If it were found upon an inquiry into the health of the officers of the army on full pay, that 'the mean age at death' of 'cornets, ensigns, and second lieutenants' was 22 years; of 'lieutenants,' 29 years; of 'captains,' 37 years; of 'majors,' 44 years; of 'lieutenant-colonels,' 48 years; of general officers, ages still further advanced; and that the ages of curates, rectors, and bishops, of barristers of seven years' standing, leading counsel, and venerable judges, differed to an equal or greater extent, a strong case might no doubt be made out on behalf of those young, but early-dying cornets, curates, and juvenile barristers whose 'mean age at death' was under 30. It would be almost necessary to make them generals, bishops, and judges, for the sake of their health. Those commercial bodies—the assurance societies—are happily so considerate and liberal, that they do not attach the slightest importance to the mean age at death, but assure the lives of young men of all the professions at the age of 24 upon the calculation that they will live 38, or at the least 31 years, and pay 38 or 31 annual premiums on an average before they die; while they make the bishops, judges, and generals who go to insure their lives at 60 pay as if they would live but 13 or 14 years. It will be found, in fact, from the return below, that the ages of different ranks of officers differ as much as 'the mean age at death' was supposed to differ in the first part of the paragraph; and we learn from another source, that the mortality of ensigns and lieutenant-colonels is inversely as the ages of the officers alive, and without doubt inversely as the 'mean age at death.' The annual mortality of lieutenant-colonels was 1 in 36, of ensigns 1 in 99."

The above calculations are partially based upon a return of the age of 4,866 officers of the army upon full pay, June, 1838. The mean ages at death of dressmakers is exceedingly low. It will be found still lower in boarding-schools and at Christ's Hospital; the majority of dressmakers are between the ages of 16 and 26. The expectations of life are the same at births in the "rural districts" of Ireland as in England; they are less after 20, but agree remarkably at all ages with the expectations of life in the metropolis. It is a curious fact, established by the "Irish Tables," that the men appear to live longer than the women in the "rural" districts, and the women longer than the men in the "civic" districts. In England, the lives of females exceed those of males by about a year, except at birth, when the difference is greater. In Surrey, the females, from the age of one year and upwards, live little longer than the males; the difference is greater in the metropolis, where it amounts, at some ages, to two or three years. This may, perhaps, account for the difference in the expectation of life deduced from male and female annuitants.

We must reserve for another occasion our remarks upon Mr. Farr's valuable commentary on the causes of death in 1841.

* Before the annual abstracts of deaths were published Liverpool was considered to be one of the healthiest spots in England!

CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS.

REPORT.

The Select Committee appointed to consider the Acts in force with respect to the trial of Controverted Elections, and to report their opinion, whether any and what amendments can be made calculated to improve the provisions of the said Acts, have agreed to the following report:—

Your committee have carefully reviewed the Act 4 & 5 Vict. c. 58, which (continued by the Acts 5 & 6 Vict. c. 73, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 47), has regulated the trial of controverted elections since the commencement of the present Parliament.

This statute will cease to have effect on the 1st of August next, or at the end of this present session.

Your committee have also examined four gentlemen, who, since the passing of the Act, have (as counsel very extensively employed), had very ample opportunities of forming an opinion of the manner in which the present law has worked.

Your committee have likewise considered the representations of Mr. Collett, M.P. for Athlone, and of Mr. Wason, who (having been returned as member for the borough of Ipswich, and having been unseated by the decision of an Election Committee) complained of the practical operation of this statute, and suggested alterations in its enactments.

Your committee have, however, seen no reason to recommend any material changes in the provisions of the existing law, with the exception of the number of members of which an Election Committee should hereafter consist.

In respect to this important point, it has seemed to your committee expedient to recommend a reduction of the number of the members of an election committee from seven to three.

The minutes of the proceedings of your committee will shew to the House the views entertained by its several members on this subject.

Your committee have considered that amendments might be made with advantage in several clauses and provisions of the Act, but they are chiefly formal, and are not of a nature to require observation.

Your committee have had a Bill drawn in conformity with their views on these several points, and submit it, together with the evidence which they have taken and the minutes of their proceedings, for the consideration of the House.

PRIVATE BANKS.—The following is a return to an order of the Hon. the House of Commons, dated 16th May, 1844, for an account of the number of private banks which became bankrupt in the years 1839, 1840, 1841, 1842, and 1843, with the amount of dividends paid, so far as the same can be ascertained:—

Year.	Number of Bankruptcies.	Of which were Banks of Issue.	Number that paid Dividends, and Amount of Dividends.
1839	9	....	1 under 5s. 1 under 10s. 7 no dividend.
1840	24	8	2 under 5s. 4 under 10s. 1 under 15s. 17 no dividend.
1841	26	11	5 under 5s. 6 under 10s. 1 under 15s. 1 under 20s. 13 no dividend.
1842	12	4	2 under 5s. 9 no dividend. 1 not ascertained.
1843	11	6	2 under 5s. 1 under 10s. 1 under 15s. 1 under 20s. 6 not ascertained.

RAILWAY LEGISLATION.—The introduction of Mr. Gladstone's Railway Bill into the House of Commons has created considerable alarm in the railway community, and deputations from most of the companies are now in town for the purpose of taking steps to oppose it. A meeting was held on Wednesday, at which the representatives of the following companies were present:—Liverpool and Manchester, Manchester and Birmingham, Great Western, South Western, Great Midland, York and North Midland, Great North of England, Newcastle and Darlington, Sheffield and Manchester, Sheffield and Rotherham, Manchester and Leeds, Hull and Selby, London and Brighton, Bristol and Exeter, Bristol and Gloucester, Eastern Counties, Northern and Eastern, and South Eastern. A resolution was unanimously adopted, to the effect, that the Government Railway Bill contains provisions of a most objectionable character as affecting the interests of railway companies; and that the reports on which the Bill is founded lead to the conclusion, that a system of government interference with railways is contemplated, which is wholly uncalled for and inexpedient as regards the public interests, and should be strongly resisted by existing railway companies. It was considered that the attempt to pass such a Bill at so late a period of the session, and with so short a time for the due consideration of its details, was most unjust, and the meeting resolved to memorialise Sir Robert Peel, praying that it may not be further proceeded with during the present session. It was also resolved that an interview should be solicited with the right hon. baronet, the deputation to consist of the gentlemen present at the meeting.—Globe.

Summary.

No topic of interest requires particular notice in this place.

REVIEW OF SESSIONS CASES

IN EASTER AND TRINITY TERMS, 1844.

POWER OF QUARTER SESSIONS TO QUASH AN INDICTMENT.—This question arises in the case of Reg. v. Wilson and Others (1 Bit. & Sym. V.R. 25). It is a matter of great interest and importance as a point of Sessions practice, and we shall therefore comment rather largely upon it. It appears that Mr. Augustus Newton, the barrister, preferred an indictment at the Gloucester Sessions against the defendants for a forcible entry, which Greaves, their counsel, argued should be quashed; which was accordingly done. The defect was not only that termed duplicity in pleading language, that is, containing two or more distinct charges in the same count; but the three first counts charged different defendants, which is clearly bad. (R. v. Kingston and Others, 8 East, 41.)

The question here is, not whether the indictment was good or bad, but whether the Sessions have power to quash indictments at all. This is the point with which Mr. Newton grapples. Mr. Serjeant Ludlow, who presides as Chairman of the Gloucester Sessions, took Mr. Greaves's view of the matter, and exercised the power. The Queen's Bench have as yet decided nothing, except that they will see the order; which has been accordingly brought up by certiorari.

The power of quashing indictments has been long exercised by the Judges of the superior courts, wherever they appeared so bad that a judgment thereupon given must clearly have been erroneous. (Q. B. Hawk. P. C. c. 25, s. 146.) This power has frequently been had recourse to; and, in Talfourd's Dickinson's Quarter Sessions, we find it treated as a power quite as much within the jurisdiction of the Sessions as of the judges of assize. (See pp. 169, 171, 496.) It is often exercised in quashing duplicate indictments, where a second has been preferred. We have been at some pains to find a single case which even favours the idea that Sessions have less power than judges on this point, and we have found none. True it is that Mr. John Jervis, in a paragraph in p. 65 of his Archbold's Pleading, excepts Sessions and inferior courts from the power of quashing indictments; and says, they should, if found in such courts, be removed to the Queen's Bench, and quashed there. We believe this dictum, which seems to be supported by no sort of authority, originates in a misconception of the cases of Rex v. Bainton (2 Strange, 1088), Reg. v. Rigby (8 Car. & Payne, 770), and others, where indictments for offences over which the Sessions had no jurisdiction having been tried there, were removed by certiorari, and quashed by the Court of Queen's Bench. But this may well be, and yet the Sessions may have had power in the first instance, and at the proper time, to have quashed these indictments themselves, had they chosen to exercise it. Mr. Newton cites R. v. Hampshire (9 Dowl. 171), which merely decides that the Quarter Sessions have a power, expressly limited by statute, in cases of orders of bastardy alone. R. v. Taylor (9 Dowl. 600) was also cited on the same side; and only shews that, where an objection may be taken by demurrer, indictments will not be quashed by the Queen's Bench. Rex v. The Justices of the West Riding (5 T. R. 629), also cited on the same side, has reference solely to the power of the Sessions under a highway Act.

In this dearth of authority against the jurisdiction of the Sessions to quash indictments, let us see the general ground upon which that jurisdiction seems to us to stand.

The powers given to the justices at Sessions are conferred by 34 Edw. 3, c. 1, and it is therein enacted, that they have authority "de faire emprisoner et duement punir selonc la ley et custumes du Roiaulme, et selonc ce quils verront mieultz affaire par lour discretions et bon avisement." Lord Chief Justice Holt in citing this statute, says, "thereby they were judges of a court of record." (Harcourt v. Fox, 1 Shower, 528.) Now if they are judges, having by express statute the fullest authority to exercise discretion in its widest scope, how can it be held that they are divested of a discretionary power clearly exercised by judges, frequently exercised by themselves, which no statute has disturbed, and no judgment questioned?

EVIDENCE OF SETTLEMENT BY RELIEF—GROUNDS OF APPEAL.—The case of Reg. v. Bedingham (1 Bit. & Sym. V. R. 2) tends to settle the law on this point, and confirm the correct view that relief to non-resident paupers is merely evidence of their settlement in the relieving parish, and not a class of settlement itself, as laid down by Mr. Gael, p. 190. Rex v. Wakefield (5 East, 335), and Rex v. Stanley (15 East, 355), established relief as sufficient evidence, where it was not rebutted, of a settlement, although the settlement was not known, and this is the full extent to which subsequent cases have gone. In Reg. v. Carnarvonshire (1 Gale & Dav. 423), the Court held relief to be evidence of "the most cogent description," and sufficient of itself, unrebutted, to establish a settlement, although what settlement was not known. In this case of Reg. v. Bedingham a settlement by hiring and service, and also relief while non-resident in the appellant parish, were relied upon by the respondents, and the ground of appeal was simply that there was no settlement by hiring and service, or by any other means; and it was held that, although the appellants made no express statement of intention to shew that the relief given by them was under a mistake, they were entitled to do so, because, having given notice of their intention to dispute the settlement itself, they had entitled themselves to answer what was mere evidence of that settlement. There cannot be a stronger proof that the Court does not hold relief in itself to be a settlement.

The case of Reg. v. St. Giles-in-the-Fields (1 Bit. & Sym. V. R. 6) is another case which turns upon the same point. There the relief had, however, been afforded by the parish by placing the pauper in a house where the poor were maintained by contract at the expense of the parish; but this was held to be virtually a maintenance of the pauper in the parish, and no proof of settlement there, for it has been long held, that to maintain a pauper nowise settles him where the maintenance is afforded, so long as he was at the time he became chargeable in the parish. (Rex v. Coleorton, 1 B. & Adol. 25.)

PREVIOUS RECEIPT OF PAUPER—EVIDENCE OF SETTLEMENT.—(Reg. v. Fewston, 1 Bit. & Sym. V.R. 22.) The wife had been previously removed to Fewston as the wife of A B. This was held sufficient primâ facie evidence of A B's settlement there, and the Court refused to allow the case to be sent back to be re-stated, so as to raise the question, whether or not evidence should have been received to shew that the wife was sent at first improperly, as without the husband's consent, or that she was sent to her maiden settlement. The Lord Chief Justice recommended counsel to be careful how they drew cases up. It was pretty evident here that it was the intention of the parties to have mooted these points, but they were precluded from doing so by the mode in which the case was stated.

TENEMENT SETTLEMENT—EVIDENCE.—In Reg. v. Leeds (Leeds v. Preston) (1 Bit. & Sym. V.R. 23), a tenement settlement was based on this evidence:—"I took the house for a year, at, I believe, 19*l.*; but I am not certain whether it was a pound more or less. I entered on and resided in the house until October, 1831, &c. I paid rent for the whole time of my tenancy." The statute applying to this period, 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, requires that the house and building should be held, and such land occupied, and the rent for the same actually paid, for the term of a whole year at least. This is not clearly stated to have been complied with in the above evidence. "I paid rent for the whole time" may mean some rent; the amount paid must be specified.

RATE-PAYMENT SETTLEMENT—EVIDENCE.—In Reg. v. St. Olave's, Southwark (1 Bit. & Sym. V.R. 24), it was held that the evidence of a rate-payment must expressly state that the rate was paid for the precise time during which the house was held. Great care is taken in the examination in this case to shew that the pauper occupied the house at the time (which is immaterial), and it is omitted to state that he paid the rate for and during the period of such tenancy. In the form given in Parish Settlements, p. 191, this omission is obviated by stating the dates of the rate-payment as equal to as the period of the tenancy. Where this cannot be done, it is safest to say that the rates were paid for and in respect of the said house, &c. and for and in respect of, and during, the said period of the said tenancy thereof. In fact, the nicety of special pleading is requisite, and parishes and parish-officers must in all cases act by legal advice, which will be the least costly course in the long run.

HIRING AND SERVICE, EVIDENCE OF.—Reg. v. Catterall (1 Bit. & Sym. V. R. 12) exhibits the particularity required in the evidence of a hiring and service. It is essential, according to this case, that the pauper should be stated to have been hired for a year at least. The words "he was not engaged for any particular time," applied to the case of a boy whose master "found him board, washing, lodging, and clothes for so long a time as he stayed," were held to afford no sufficient evidence of a hiring, although the service continued above three years. It was contended in the argument that Rex v. Wincanston (Burr. S. C. 299) was an authority in favour of the order. There, likewise, there was no hiring for any given period, but it was held to be a hiring for the year, there being no reason to presume the contrary. This rule has been since abandoned, and the case of Reg. v. North Bovey (1 Gale & Dav. 701) decides, that this fact cannot be left to inference; it must be distinctly stated that the hiring was for a year.

APPRENTICESHIP SETTLEMENT, EVIDENCE OF.—Reg. v. Chiswick (1 Bit. & Sym. V.R. 4) decides that the magistrates' allowance of the indenture of a pauper's apprenticeship must be proved, as well as the binding by the parish. This the parish might have known. It is part of the rule that legal evidence must be given of all the essential parts of the settlement, and the allowance is essential.

ROAD RATES.—Reg. v. Wiggenhall St. Germains (1 Bit. & Sym. V. R. 20) decides that so long as a road made under a local Act follows the prescribed termini, it is no exemption from the liability of supporting it that it does not precisely follow the meanderings of a river along the bank of which it is to run. And wherever a road has been dedicated to, and adopted by, the parish, it must be repaired by it.

The case of Reg. v. W. Rose, esq. (1 Bit. & Sym. V. R.) decides a doubt which arose from the wording of the Highway Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, of which section 27 enacts that the rate shall be levied on all woods usually rated to the poor-rate. It appears that, in various previous statutes, the woods in question had been rated to the poor-rate, but that latterly this had not been the case in the parish in question, and the point was, whether the custom in the parish or the county was to be followed. The Court held that the words "usually rated" apply to the custom in the particular parish, and not the custom in general, which it would be less easy to ascertain, and would be scarcely definite enough as a standard.

SURVEYORS OF ROADS.—Where two separate surveyors of roads are appointed in the same parish, but to act in different portions thereof, there being one common fund of rates for the parish, payment to either suffices. (Reg. v. W. S. Wood, esq., 1 Bit. & Sym. V. R. 26.) The same case decides that a mandamus will not go to compel one magistrate to concur with another in ordering a distress for the levy of a rate under such circumstances.

Reg. v. Frampton (1 Bit. & Sym. V.R. 29) shews that when an indictment for non-repair of a highway has been preferred against a person who, ratione tenuræ, was bound to repair it, the defendant must shew repairs done since the verdict to entitle him to be discharged from the indictment.

Peters v. Clarson (1 Bit. & Sym. V. R. 55) decides that justices at Special Sessions have jurisdiction to settle questions as to the compensation to be paid to the owners and occupiers of land for damage done by the removal of materials, under section 54 of the Highway Act. It also decides that no action of trespass can be maintained against a surveyor for any damage done under the 54th or 67th sections, because no payment of compensation for such damage has been made, such compensation not being a condition precedent to the right of the surveyors to enter in order to repair.

CERTIFICATE FOR COSTS OF INDICTING FOR NON-REPAIR OF BRIDGES. — The case of Reg. v. Merionethshire (3 Law T. 241) determines that under 43 Geo. 3, c. 56, the whole of 13 Geo. 3, c. 78 was virtually re-enacted, and that the power to justices to grant a certificate for the costs of a prosecutor, who under the Highway Act indicts for the non-repair of bridges, still remains. The 43 Geo. 3, c. 59 is not repealed by the last Highway Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, s. 90; and though the latter Act gives no power to certify in the case of bridges, the 43 Geo. 3, c. 59 does give it.

THE RATING OF RAILWAYS.—The great case of Reg. v. The Grand Junction Railway, which is fully reported in the second part of Bittleston and Symons's Reports of Magistrates' Cases, p. 29, has decided the knotty point of how to rate railways which let their lines for certain tolls to other parties, as well as carry on their own traffic. The Court, after long and wearisome argument, decided that the railway proprietors were rateable for the improved value to their land in any parish by all the profits arising from their own trade on the line plus the tolls they received from the other parties. This being the standard, they are to ascertain what a tenant might reasonably be expected to give according to the terms of the Parochial Assessment Act, in the following manner:—Given the gross receipts of the company, there must be deducted therefrom, 1st, a per-centage for interest on the capital invested in the trade; 2nd, a per-centage for tenants' profits and profits of trade; 3rd, a per-centage on the capital for the depreciation of the stock in trade beyond all usual yearly repairs; 4th, a sum for the yearly cost of conducting their business; 5th, the fair yearly value of stations, offices, stores, &c. separately rated in the parishes where they are situated; 6th, a sum per mile for renewing rails, chairs, sleepers, &c.

CRIMINAL INFORMATION.—In Ex parte the Duke of Marlborough (1 Bit. & Sym. V. R. 26) the Court decided that no criminal information could be granted for imputations, however grievous, directed against a magistrate, and even against his magisterial character, as long as they consisted of mere words spoken, there being great difficulty in ascertaining, and great liability to misunderstand, what was actually said. This case applied to Mr. Humfrey's speech, at the last Woodstock election, in which he had imputed certain misconduct as a magistrate to the Duke of Marlborough. In such cases an action for slander is the proper remedy.

POOR-LAW APPOINTMENTS UNDER LOCAL ACTS.—The guardians of the poor are bound to obey the orders of the Poor-Law Commissioners in the appointment of masters of workhouses and other officers, even though they may have local Acts under which the appointment of masters of workhouses is made. The power of the commissioners is paramount; and evasive regulations made by the guardians will be set at naught, and a mandamus go to enforce obedience. The case of Reg v. The Guardians of the Poor of the City of Oxford (1 Bit. & Sym. V. R. 38) will be a warning to refractory boards of guardians.

MISCELLLANEOUS POINTS.

Complaint, by whom made.—The complaint of chargeability need not be in writing at all under 13 & 14 C. 2, c. 12. It may be verbally made. This was incidentally stated in the judgment in Reg. v. Bucks (2 Gale & Dav. 560), and has been decided by Reg. v. Bedingham (see above), by which case it is also determined that one overseer may make the complaint for and on behalf of the rest, it being stated in the order as being the act of the overseers.

Notice of appeal, by whom signed.—The case of Reg. v. Surrey (1 Bit. & Sym. V.R. 4) decides that the signature of an overseer by another party for him, without proof of authority to do so, does not avail; neither is the signature of a guardian elected for a parish not under the Gilbert Act of any avail in giving notice of appeal, which must be signed by a majority of the churchwardens and overseers: by three, at least, out of four, according to the 81st section of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76. This seems a simple rule, but it is often neglected.

A warrant of commitment containing a conviction under the Master and Servants Act, must in express terms shew that it was made upon evidence taken in the presence of the prisoner; or, it is bad. (Re Tordoft, Fisher, and Others, 1 Bit. & Sym. V.R. 17.)

Jurat to the examinations.—Reg. v. Shipston-upon-Stour (1 Bit. & Sym. V.R. 41) increases the nicety required in the caption and jurat of examinations. Let great care be taken that each examination appear to be taken on oath, before the same magistrates who made the order; and that not only the caption, but the jurat, set forth the jurisdiction of the magistrates. "Taken and sworn this 31st day of December, 1842, before us, W. D. and H. T." is fatally defective without the addition of "two of her Majesty's justices of the peace, acting," &c. In this case the examination of the first witness only appeared by the caption to have been properly taken, but there was nothing to connect the next witness's examination with the jurisdiction, except being written upon the same piece of paper, which of course was not enough.

The Court went to the extreme length in this matter in Reg. v. Silkstone (2 Q. B. 620), in which the examination was held sufficient, though the caption stated it to be taken before "me," the jurat being in the plural, and signed by two magistrates. The Court have again laid it down that the Act requires the whole of the examinations to be sent to the receiving parish; of these, the caption and jurat are of course among the material parts.

Evidence of settlement on cross-examination.—There seems to be no objection to the proof of a subsequent settlement by the cross-examination of the respondent's witnesses, so long as the appellants had included such settlement among their grounds of appeal. (R. v. Wrexham Regis, 1 Bit. & Sym. V. R. 49.)

Costs after abandonment of order of removal.—The case of Reg. v. Stayley and Tounstall (2 Per. & Dav. 676) derives confirmation in that of Reg. v. Merionethshire (3 Law T. 201), in which case, on the 30th of January, the appellants gave notice of their intention to appeal, and the grounds of appeal were served in March. On the 29th of March, after service of the grounds of appeal, a supersedeas was served, and on the 9th of April the respondents went again before the magistrates, and obtained a fresh order of removal. The sessions were held on the 12th of April, and on that day the respondents tendered the sum of two guineas to the appellants in respect of their costs. This the appellants refused, on the ground that at that time a considerably greater sum had been expended by them in preparing for the Sessions, and accordingly applied to the Sessions for leave to enter the appeal, but they refused to allow it to be entered, on the ground that there was an order of Sessions providing that the sum of 30s. only should be allowed on appeals against orders of removal tried in such court, and that, therefore, the appellants might have got two guineas for their costs, which is 12s. more than they could have got by going to the Sessions.

The Court, however, allowed a mandamus to go to compel the Sessions to enter the appeal, for the purpose of allowing the appellants to prove and obtain better costs, clearly under the impression that the Sessions would not adhere to so unjust and absurd a rule as that of limiting the costs to 30s. in all cases.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

It will be seen that the Lord Chancellor has made another trifling reduction in the fees of the Court, a reluctant sop to allay the indignation so loudly expressed at the flagitious Compensation Job. But such petty curtailments ought not to, and will not, satisfy the Profession or the suitors. The entire tree from which a twig has been lopped is an abuse, and ought to be rooted out, nor should any Chancellor be suffered to rest until the work is complete.

The numerous judgments reserved for this morning have compelled us to postpone the summary of the decisions of the two last Terms; but we hope it will appear next week. A similar summary of the changes made in the law by the new statutes will be given at the close of the Session.

It will be seen that we have adopted the plan of devoting a distinct department of the Law Times to a record of the progress of Real Property Law, that being a subject in almost daily requisition by the practitioner. There is no attorney, certainly no country attorney, to whom it will not be one of the most useful and interesting features of this Journal.

It has been suggested, that a half-yearly Digest of all the reports and statutes, according to the plan proposed last week, should form a portion of the Appendix, so that, bound with the volume of the Law Times, it would form a complete Index to the actual law promulgated during the period over which that volume extends. What say our readers? Do they approve the design? Will it have their support? We should like to have their opinion before it is positively begun, as the work would be a tedious one.

THE PROPERTY LAWYER.

We purpose from time to time, as space permits, to introduce, under this title, all such information relating to Real Property Law, as recent cases, parts of statutes, forms, &c. &c. as may be necessary to enable the practitioner to keep pace with the course of decision and legislation. As this is a branch of our law of extreme interest and importance in itself, and one in the practice of which every Attorney is more or less engaged, it is hoped that the devotion to it of a distinct department will be as acceptable, as it will be a novel and useful feature in the Law Times. It should be added, that no formal arrangement will be observed; abstracts of cases, original notes on points of real property law, parts of statutes relating thereto, and, it may be, occasional correspondence, and rare forms, will be miscellaneously collected under the above title.

I. Copyhold.—Separate surrender of Freebench by Wife of a Bankrupt—Doctrine as to fictitious Forms of Conveyance.

The last part of Phillips contains the report of a very important case (Wood v. Lambirth, 1 Phi. 8), upon the subjects named above.

The substance of this case was, that one J. B. becoming bankrupt, his assignees sold his copyhold estate to the defendant, according to the custom of the manor of Tollesbury. It appeared on the abstract of title delivered to the vendors, which commenced in 1734, that in 1787 the wife of the then tenant had joined her husband in a surrender of the estate by way of mortgage; and that afterwards, on the death of the husband, and the admittance of another party on the surrender by him made to the use of his will, the widow came, and, in open court, released to the purchaser her dower and customary estate.

The purchaser conceiving that this afforded evidence of a special custom in the manor, entitling the widow of a copyholder to freebench out of all copyhold lands of which her husband might be seized at any time during coverture, and the bankrupt having a wife at the time of the bankruptcy, who was still living, objected to the title that it was liable to her freebench.

To remove this objection, the wife of the bankrupt made the following surrender:—

"Be it remembered, that on the 11th day of July, 1829, Mary Brightwen, the wife of Isaac Brightwen, (the said Isaac Brightwen being a customary or copyhold tenant of the said manor), came, &c.; and she being first privately examined separately and apart from her said husband, and freely consenting, did, with the privity of the said Isaac Brightwen, in consideration of the sum of 30*l*. 4s. 2d. to her paid by Henry Lambirth, surrender into the hands of the lord of the said manor all and singular her right, title, and claim of freebench, dower, or thirds of, in, to, or out of all that, &c.; and all right, title, and interest, claim and demand whatsoever of the said Mary Brightwen of, in, or to freebench in respect of the said message and premises, to the use and behoof of the said Henry Lambirth, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, according to the custom of the said manor.

"Mary Brightwen.
"Isaac Brightwen."

The purchaser still objecting, a bill for specific performance was filed; the Master reported the title to be good; to that report the defendant excepted; and, after argument, the following judgment was delivered by the Lord Chancellor (Lyndhurst):—

The Lord Chancellor.—The Master has found that a good title can be made to lot 19, and that it was first shewn on the 24th of August, 1829. To this report an exception is taken; and the only question necessary to be considered is, whether there be any objection to the title in respect of the freebench of the wife of Brightwen, a bankrupt, whose assignees are plaintiffs in the cause. The property being copyhold, and there being no proof of any special custom to the contrary, the right of the wife to freebench can only attach upon lands of which the husband dies seized, which has become impossible. It would therefore seem that this objection would, upon that ground alone, be incapable of being supported; but a surrender has been produced, dated the 11th of July, 1829, by which the wife, having been first privately examined with the privity of her husband, surrendered to the purchaser the copyhold premises, and all her title to freebench therein. This surrender was said to be inoperative, for two reasons: 1st, that the wife had not any interest in the land which could be the subject of surrender; and, 2ndly, that the husband was no party to the surrender. The first objection was in early times raised against the effect of fines to bar dower. (Lampet's Case, 10 Co. 46.) The surrender by the wife after being privately examined has always been considered, in cases of copyhold, as equivalent to the fine. If it were not so, the decree in Brown v. Raindle (3 Ves. 256) was a mere delusion upon the defendant. It was then objected that the husband was not a party to the surrender; nor was he in Scamon v. Maw (3 Bing. 378), but his assent was presumed from the circumstances. In this case his privity is distinctly stated in the surrender. Then, as to the time, it appears that this surrender was sent to the defendant's solicitor on the 24th of August, the day which the Master has reported to be the time at which a good title was shewn. The exception must be overruled.

The defendants afterwards obtained a rehearing.

Lee and Heathfield, for the defendants, cited Watkins on Copyholds, v. 2, p. 73, note; Taylor v. Philips (1 Ves. sen. 229); Doe v. Tomkins (11 East, 185); Goodtitle v. Morse (3 T. R. 365); Lampet's case (10 Co. 46); Scamon v. Maw (3 Bing. 378); Compton v. Collinson (1 H. Bl. 334); Doe v. Mitchell (2 M. & S. 446).

Walker and Wood, contrà, cited Verner's Abr. Copyhold, 210, Pl. 5. But,

The Lord Chancellor confirmed his former judgment.

The Lord Chancellor.—This case having been brought again under my consideration by a petition of rehearing, I have thought it my duty to refer to the several authorities cited, and have reconsidered the whole case with all the attention due to one in which my judgment has been questioned by counsel whose opinions are entitled to the highest respect. I have not, however, been able to find any ground for altering my opinion. As to Carrington's wife, there is no evidence to raise the objection made; and as to the supposed freebench of the bankrupt's wife, there is, in the first place, no evidence that she would have been entitled to any, there being no sufficient proof of any custom entitling the widow to freebench of land of which the husband does not die seized; and as to the surrender by her, no new argument has been brought forward upon the second hearing to prove it ineffectual to bar her freebench if she would otherwise have been entitled to it. Ingenious observations have, indeed, been made as to the manner in which it was to operate; not as a release, it is said, because there is no estate in the releasee, and not as an assignment, because there was only a possibility, and not any assignable estate; but similar objections apply to fines, and to surrenders by husband and wife; and as to fines, they prevailed in very early times; but long before Lord Coke's time they were held to be groundless; for he, in Lampet's case (10 Co. 49) says, that no question existed at that time. The truth is, that, like many other fictions of law, invented for the purpose of promoting the enjoyment of property, the machinery will not bear very critical examination, but being once adopted, it is maintained for the benefit which it is found to confer; technical reasoning has, therefore, been disregarded when applied to the object of preventing property being alienable on account of the dower or freebench of the wife. In the present case it is peculiarly necessary, because, from the provisions of the Bankrupt Act, the ordinary mode of effecting the purpose may fail. All beneficial interest is taken from the husband, and no surrender is necessary by him, and he may not be forthcoming to make one. How, in that case, is the wife's freebench to be barred? In this case she was privately examined, and surrendered with the privity of her husband. The second argument has not raised any doubt in my mind, and I must dismiss the petition of rehearing with costs.

II.—Marriage Settlement.—Limitation to Executors or Administrators of Wife.

The case of Daniel v. Dudley (1 Phil. 1) deserves to be noted here. The facts were shortly these:—

A sum, the property of the wife, was, on her marriage, settled in trust for her sole and separate use during her life; then to the husband for life, and after the death of the survivor, to the children, and in default of children attaining the age of twenty-one, or marrying, in trust for such persons as the wife should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, in trust "to pay and transfer the same to the executors or administrators of the wife."

The husband (T. B.) took the benefit of the Insolvent Act. The wife afterwards died intestate without making any appointment, leaving one child; then the husband (T. B.) died intestate, without taking out administration to his wife; lastly, the child died under twenty-one.

The plaintiff (C. D.), a sister of T. B., took out letters of administration to the estates of the husband, the wife, and the child.

Dudley, the assignee of the husband, having claimed the wife's fund, a bill was filed to have the rights of all the parties ascertained, and administered under the direction of the Court.

The Vice-Chancellor decreed that, according to the true construction of the settlement, the plaintiff (C. D.), as administratrix, was entitled to the fund for the benefit of the next of kin of the wife living at her death, and to the exclusion of the husband.

From that decree the assignee, Dudley, appealed.

It was argued for the appellants that the decision of the Vice-Chancellor had proceeded from a confusion of two distinct classes of cases; namely, those arising upon the words "legal or personal representatives," and those arising upon the words "executors or administrators." The latter cannot be construed to denote next of kin. For whom is the plaintiff trustee? It was said, for the next of kin of the wife: citing Ripley v. Waterworth (7 Ves. 425); Evans v. Charles (1 Anstr. 128); Collyer v. Squire (3 Russ. 467); Hames v. Hames (2 Keen, 646); Saberton v. Skeels (1 R. & M. 587).

For the respondent it was contended that the words used in the settlement were words of purchase: citing Bulmer v. Jay (4 Sim. 48; 3 M. & K. 197); Graffty v. Humpage (1 Beav. 46); Smith v. Dudley (9 Sim. 125).

The Lord Chancellor (Lyndhurst) without hearing a reply, said:—

Legal or personal representatives may mean next of kin, but executors or administrators cannot. Therefore, none of those cases in which next of kin have been held to take, ex vi termini, by the description of legal or personal representatives, have any application to the present. The limitation in this case being to the executors or administrators, it seems to me that it cannot signify whether these words are construed as words of limitation or words of purchase; because, on either supposition, the persons answering that description take in their representative character, and then the fund is to be applied and administered in the same manner as any other assets that come to them in that character. That is the doctrine of all the cases that have been cited, except that of Bulmer v. Jay, which stands alone.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.—The Court will sit to-day and give judgment in cases now pending, which have been argued.—By the COURT.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Henry Burchall Peren, of South Petherton, in the county of Somerset, gent.; Edward Burrell, of Tydd St. Mary's, in the county of Lincoln, gent.; James Buckton, of Wrexham, in the county of Denbigh, gent.; and George Peters Wilkes, of the city of Gloucester, gent.; to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert has been graciously pleased to accept the office of President of the Society for the Improvement of the Condition of the Labouring Classes, which has already been patronized by their Majesties the Queen and Queen Dowager.

Lord Heytesbury, the newly-appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, accompanied by Lady Heytesbury and the Hon. Miss A'Court, is expected to leave Queen Anne-street on the 18th or 20th inst. for Dublin Castle, to enter on the duties of his high appointment. An Admiralty steamer will convey his lordship and suite from Liverpool to Kingstown.

ADMINISTRATION OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE IN MIDDLESEX.—A very full meeting of the magistrates of the county of Middlesex was held on Thursday, at the Sessions-house, Clerkenwell, for the purpose of receiving, and taking into consideration, the correspondence between the Court and the Home Secretary, Sir James Graham, on the subject of a proposed salary to the chairman of the County Sessions; on the proposition to build a new prison in Clerkenwell; and to discuss the proposed alterations to be made in the administration of criminal justice in the county. A very long discussion took place, in which several resolutions were moved, and in which Mr. Pownall, Sir Peter Laurie, the Common Serjeant, and other magistrates took a part. The resolutions were ultimately carried, and the meeting dissolved.

CONVICTION &C. OF GAMBLERS.—Some curious evidence is just printed in the Report of the House of Lords, given before the committee appointed "to inquire into the law respecting gaming." Thus, one of the police superintendents delivered the following summary of what he had done:—"Out of the number of 95, 85 were convicted. The number discharged without fines was seven. The amount of cash I seized in the different banks where I have gone was 59*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.* The amount of fines inflicted by the magistrates was 949*l.* and the amount paid was 704*l.* The amount not paid was 215*l.* and those men served their time in prison. Two appealed against the magistrates' conviction, which was confirmed by Mr. Serjeant Adams, at Clerkenwell. They served their time in prison. The total amount of cash and fines paid to the receiver of the metropolitan police is 736*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.* The number of houses broken into is eight." The following is an instance of the contrivances the officers resort to, in order to obtain admission to the gambling houses. Mr. Superintendent Baker said, "It was by a plan of my own, which was adopted in getting the doors open so readily as we did. A supposed twopenny postman, with a band upon his hat, and a cockade, gave a knock at the door, and the porter came to answer the door. The porter who came to answer the door at that moment made his escape, fortunately, but I apprehended twenty-eight. The wife of the porter threw herself, with a baby, between my constable and the man he had got hold of, and if he had not let go, something serious would have happened to the child or the woman; but her screams raised an alarm, which caused a number of the persons in the gaming-room to rush up stairs. Some were detected upon the roof, and some going into Leicester-square."

MOST SINGULAR NUPTIALS.—At the Cork Spring Assizes of 1842, it will be remembered, that an action of crim. con. was tried, the parties being H——s v. P——e, when the injured husband got a verdict of 2,000*l.* from a jury of his countrymen for the grievous injury he sustained. A divorce was subsequently obtained in the House of Lords. So far this "course of true love," but "much remains behind." The dénouement of the affair is the most curious part of the business. The bereaved husband started for England some time since, and, we are credibly informed, has been re-married to his quondam spouse, and received with her a fortune of 3,000*l.*—Cork Examiner.

THE CONVICTS BARBER AND FLETCHER.—The following document has been published as coming from Fletcher. Barber and he are both on board the convict ship Agincourt, lying off Woolwich, and will sail on Tuesday next for their destination. The witness, whose name is appended to the paper, is said to be an officer of the convict vessel:—

"June 28, 1844.

"I solemnly declare that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, William Henry Barber had no guilty knowledge that the will of Anne Slack was a forgery, or that it was otherwise than a legitimate and proper matter of business. As such it was introduced by me to him, as stated in my first examination at the Mansion-House. And I further declare that, to my knowledge and belief, he had no guilty knowledge of either of the cases which have recently formed the subject of indictment. I make this declaration with no other motive than to do an act of justice to Mr. Barber as far as lies in my power.

"JOSHUA FLETCHER.

TURNPIKE ACTS.—A Bill just introduced by the Government continues all existing turnpike Acts about to expire on the 1st of August, 1844, to the 1st of August, 1845, and to the end of the then session of Parliament. Certain Acts, named in the 6 & 7 Vict. cap. 69, are exempted from the provisions of the Bill.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

KENT LAW SOCIETY.

The following petition has been agreed to by this society.—

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The humble petition of the members of the Kent Law Society, assembled at their annual meeting, on the 10th day of June, 1844, sheweth,

That your petitioners are attorneys and solicitors practising in different parts of the county of Kent.

That by an Act passed in the last session of Parliament, and intituled "An Act for Consolidating and Amending the Laws relating to Attorneys and Solicitors practising in England and Wales," it is enacted, "That no person shall act as an attorney or solicitor before any justice of the peace, unless such person shall have been admitted and enrolled, and otherwise duly qualified to act as an attorney or solicitor as therein provided;" and by the same Act, various provisions are enacted for the taxation of the bills of costs of attorneys and solicitors by the Masters of the superior courts of law and equity.

That the said Act of Parliament was prepared and passed through the Legislature with great care and deliberation.

That by a Bill now before your Honourable House, and entitled "A Bill for the further Amendment of the Law relating to the Poor in England," it is proposed by sec. 60, p. 31, to be enacted.

"Clerks and officers to boards constituted under the Poor Law Act may conduct proceedings on behalf of guardians before justices at petty or special sessions, although not certified attorneys, without incurring penalty.

And by sec. 34, p. 16, it is proposed to be enacted, &c.

That if such 60th section should pass into law, it would operate with great injustice towards your petitioners and all other attorneys and solicitors, all of whom have paid large sums by way of stamp-duty on their articles of clerkship, their admission, and annual certificate duty; and have also necessarily incurred great expense in the study of their profession; that it would tend to prejudice the proper administration of justice before magistrates, by allowing persons to appear before them as advocates having no knowledge of the law or of its practice, and more especially of the rules of evidence; and that it would be introducing an entirely new principle in the law, by sanctioning by Act of Parliament the right to parties to act as attorneys, who would not be the officers of any court of law or equity, or in any way amenable to their summary jurisdiction.

That if such 34th section should pass into law, every attorney conducting professional business of any description for a parish or union, would either have at his own cost to have his bill taxed by the clerk of the peace before it was delivered, or it would be liable to be reduced by the auditor of the union, whose decision upon the reasonableness, as well as the legality of the charges, would be final.

That the clerk of the peace cannot be so competent a person to tax the costs of attorneys as the Masters of the superior courts of common law, in whom such taxation is now by law vested; and that, even if it were enacted that the taxation should be the duty of the clerk of the peace, the costs of such taxation ought to be governed by the same rules as the cost of taxation before such Masters, and be dependent upon the amount of the deductions from such costs; that the auditor of the union will very probably not be a professional man, and can, therefore, know nothing either of the reasonableness or the legality of the costs, and must, therefore, be incompetent to tax such costs; and that yet it is proposed to give to such auditor the power of finally deciding upon matters in which the Masters of the superior courts have no such power, their taxation of costs being in all cases liable to be reviewed and reversed by the judges of the courts to which such Masters belong, and to give to such auditors even the power of deciding upon the legality of the charges in cases in which the costs may have been previously taxed by the clerk of the peace.

Your petitioners, therefore, humbly pray that the 60th and 84th sections of the Poor Law Amendment Bill may not pass into law.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

"Certainly inconsistent with Christianity."—Leading Article of LAW TIMES, April 20, 1844. Vol. 3, No. 55.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I admire your manly avowal of the abolition principle, equally opposed as I believe it to be to the maudlin sentiment of a visionary philanthropy, as to the brain-begotten apprehensions of a "lily-livered" prejudice in favour of "death done scientifically," as you aptly describe our improved, new drop, strangulation specific against assassination.

Why continue a barbarous law and apparatus, which will yet drag to and execute an ignominious death—as it admittedly must—upon many an innocent fellow-creature, the old with the young of both sexes, as it has done already in instances so numerous as to form an awful calendar of judicial murders?

"We regret the necessity," is the answer, "the dreadful necessity, but we must PREVENT murder!" Why, Sir, this exaggerated preventive principle was what in a more antique, but equally logical casuistry, justified torture, the rack, pincers, fire, as it now equally well justifies the rope. "A cruel law," said a wretched criminal leaving the dock at Maidstone Assizes, "which takes away a man's life for a horse." "You are to be hanged," said the late Judge Buller, "not because you have stolen a horse, but that horses may not be stolen!" "The great end of punishment," said another English judge (I believe the late Lord Ellenborough) "being prevention, it matters not much as regards the public whether the party actually executed be guilty or innocent, because the example is the same!"

No doubt, Sir, wig, ermine, and black cap, and these maxims in the wearer's mouth, with sombre satellites to execute his word, must have produced an amazing effect upon the undignified vulgar. The awful man in scarlet pronounces sentence. One thing is evident to audience and criminal,—

> "Had all his hairs been lives, His great revenge
> Had stomach for them all!"

The great man devoutly pours out his most Christian and pious execration on horse-stealing. On n'avait jamais vu un charlatan de cette force! Poor humanity stood confounded and silenced! the bloody work went on and the mercies of English jurisprudence tracked the circuits of its judges in human gore.

Thank God, we have not now

> "Twelve butchers
> For a jury, and a Jeffries for a judge."

Legal conventionalities have no longer magic in them. We have erased hanging men "not for stealing horses, but that horses may not be stolen," and a majority, I believe, of the thinking community are denouncing the ancient polity of "doing death scientifically" that murders may be prevented. Law boasts no infallibility: man looks on his fellow-man, even the convicted murderer, and the reflection suggests itself to his sobered imagination,

> "——— once put out thine,
> I know not where is that Promethean heat
> That can thy light relume. * * *
> I cannot give it vital life again;
> It needs must wither!"

and he feels disposed to act more mercifully than did the Moor.

In truth, Sir, let any man look at the English public, and ask himself where is the embodiment of the fear, whose shadow strikes such terror, and let him, in any case, say whether he sees it in such force that he is willing to continue a punishment which of a certainty—experience tells it us—will involve many an innocent man in the identical fate, and with accumulated horrors, which he so anxiously and fastidiously shuns himself? Is he willing to purchase a little additional security, even supposing it attained, at such a price?

"A punishment certainly inconsistent with Christianity," says the editor of an acknowledged organ of the legal profession. "Quite the reverse," says Mr. Giles; Christianity "confers its sanction, for St. Paul, without any mark of disapprobation, recognizes the right as existing in the head of the Roman state, where he says, 'He is the minister of God—if thou do that which is evil, be afraid, for he beareth not the sword in vain;' the sword (continues Mr. G.), is not for moderate correction, but for inflicting death;" therefore we with a rope, &c.

Admirable logician! having proved your proposition, why not deduce your corollaries, Mr. Giles? Suppose we put it thus: From the demonstration, it is evident that burning, racking, crucifying, all in vogue among Pagan Roman governors, are likewise strictly Christian customs.

Permit me to say, Mr. Giles, as to St. Paul's not expressing any disapprobation (from which you, with a logic all your own, assume his approbation) of Pagan jurisprudence in this particular, that it was no part of St. Paul's ministry to pick quarrels with the Roman executive by denying the right while it possessed the power, and exercised it barbarously enough, as in the case of St. John Baptist. It was the Apostle's duty to spread the broad principles of Christian charity, to produce in due season a harvest of practical and universal results. We find Christ himself teaching the Jews, circumstanced as they were, obedience to the ordinances of an odious, unjust, and foreign despotism. Yet has Christianity everywhere ameliorated or destroyed despotism, and why not the barbarities of an antique jurisprudence?

"Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake," says St. Peter, G n. Epist. c. ii. v. 13. I suppose Mr. Giles will not tell us that "every ordinance of man" is sacred, and not to be subjected to the mitigating influences of an advanced civilization. Or that the command implies any approval of the infamous mandates of a Roman tyrant! As for the Roman being called a "minister of God," so we know, in an inscrutable sense, is the meanest and vilest of creatures.

Let Mr. Giles ponder the following lessons of the divine "man of sorrows":—"Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy. Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, but I say unto you that ye resist not evil" (Matt. vi.); that is, as the commentators have it, that we seek not vengeance. "Then came Peter unto him and said, Lord how oft shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him? till seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee until seven times, but until seventy times seven."—Matt. xviii. No mention, Mr. Giles, of the immedicable wrong for which to apply the lex talionis—no clause of "blood for blood always." "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself," said the same teacher to the lawyer who sought his advice.—Matt. xxii. Again he admonishes us—"Take heed to yourselves: if thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him. And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent; thou shalt forgive him."—Luke xvii. As for the doctrine of the Apostles, let Mr. Giles read St. Paul's eulogium of charity, 1st Epis. to Cor. through the whole of the 13th chapter. And the same in his Epis. to the Gal. c. v. v. 14—22 incl.; where he speaks of adultery, idolatry, witchcraft, envyings, murders, drunkenness; putting them all in the same category and denouncing future woe, but he says nothing of temporal punishment, which, as I have before had occasion to remark, was not the business of his ministry; much less does he tell his disciples to seek the blood of the doers of any of these things. But although he promulgates no "Penal Code," he furnishes us lavishly with the principles whereon to construct one. "Dearly beloved; avenge not yourselves, but rather give place to wrath; for it is written, Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord."—Rom. xii. 19. "Put on, therefore, beloved, bowels of mercies, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another."—Col. iii. 12-14 inclusive. In another of his epistles we have again simultaneous mention and denunciation of "murderers," "men-stealers," "perjurers" (1 Epis. to Tim. i. 8-10, inclusive); but no pointing to the murderer as one "not to be forgiven" of his fellow-men, or hint to "hang him on a tree." On the contrary, this same apostle says, in very general terms—"If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou also be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."—Gal. vi. 1, 2. And what is it be the end of our endeavours with wrong-doers we may learn, I think, from St. James, v. 20:—"Let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his ways shall save a soul from death, and shall cover a multitude of sins."

But human lawgivers say, Reform a wrong-doer if you can; but repentance or none, in either case fail not to HANG HIM! Still reprobate?—n'importe, send him to the gallows, and

> "His eternal jewel
> Give to the common enemy of man."

Think you that consistent with Christianity, Mr. Giles?

In the New Testament I can find nothing lending the least countenance to such atrocities, and in truth, Sir, how any man can pretend to deduce from its benevolent teachings any thing conferring a sanction on capital punishment, and how, on the contrary, in each page its condemnation is not felt by every unprejudiced, uncobwebbed understanding, I allow puzzles my mind.

But, Sir, if more were wanting to make out this view of Christianity in opposition to ancient severity, we are not at a loss for a positive illustration; and as it is the only instance—ex uno disce omnes—in which Christ was called on for judgment in a capital case, it comes with more imperative claims to our consideration. It was a case, too, which was specially denounced, and one in which, as we have seen, Moses executed a peremptory and inexorable judgment to death:—"And the Scribes and Pharisees say unto him, Master, this woman was taken in adultery—in the very act. Now, Moses in the law commanded us that such should be stoned; but what sayest thou? He said unto them, He that is without sin, let him first cast a stone at her." And when the conscience-stricken Jews had retired—"He said unto the woman, Where are those thine accusers? Hath no man condemned thee? She saith, No man, Lord. And Jesus saith unto her, NEITHER DO I CONDEMN THEE; go and sin no more."—John, viii. 3, 11.

"Learn of me," says our Saviour. Why reject the lesson of mercy? Why have we permitted custom and a craven egoism to habituate us to the pouring out of blood?—a disgrace to every European Government which yet continues it—a reflection on humanity—the last wreck of a Jewish, heathen, feudal barbarism, "certainly inconsistent with Christianity," repugnant to our common nature!

While finding so solemn a subject treated in so flippant a manner as Mr. Giles has condescended to, I am inclined more and more earnestly to exclaim with Cicero—"Hanc tollite ex civitate judiciorum, Hanc pati nolite diutiùs in hâc republicâ versari: quæ non m .dò id habet in se mali, quod tot cives atrocissimè sustulit, verùm etiam hominibus lenissimis ademit misericordiam incommodorum!"

With regard to Mr. Giles's broad and unproved assertions—his extraordinary and untenable conclusions—I would just suggest to him, as he is fond of classics, the following from a friend he may recognize:—

> "Scribendi recte sapere est et principium et fons."
> Horace.
>
> "Though modern practice sometimes differs quite,
> 'Tis just as well to think before you write."—Byron.

SATURDAY, JULY 6, 1844.

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

Some very sincere friends of the Law Times have expressed a doubt of the propriety of the exposures of Professional Malpractices which have from time to time appeared in its columns.

They ask if the tendency of such revelations may not be to damage the Profession in public esteem; they cite the well-known proverb; they question if the wrong-doers are to be shamed by any exposure, and they fear that the lash is wasted upon such impenetrable hides.

These remonstrances deserve respect, and as the doubt may be shared by others, we will briefly state the reasons which have led us to the conclusion that, upon the whole, the real and ultimate interests of the Profession will be best consulted by perseverance in the course of unsparing exposure which has been already adopted.

It is objected, that the world is thus informed of misdeeds of which otherwise it might be ignorant, and that the tendency is consequently to lower the general character of the Profession in public esteem.

To this we reply; first, that the Law Times is a Professional Journal; the greater portion of its readers are members of the Profession or of the Magistracy. To the Profession the existence of such practices is well known; we do but point to the perpetrators, produce the proofs, and expose the wrong-doers to the execration of those upon whom they are inflicting a personal injury by acts which degrade their Profession in public esteem. And even if through publication here these doings should become public, as doubtless they do, to some extent, as the Law Times is taken at many reading-rooms and institutions, we ask—Is it so certain that the supposed consequence will follow? Is it not more than probable that the effect may be the very reverse of that which is anticipated? May not the general reader be led to the conclusion, that the practices so denounced and exposed are not sanctioned by the Profession; that there is no inclination to shelter or palliate, but a firm resolution by all legitimate means to repudiate them?

But it is further asked, what benefit can accrue from the exposure, for the perpetrators are beyond the reach of shame?

The uses are twofold. In the first place, if exposure will not deter the guilty from continuing their malpractices, of which, indeed, we have little hope, it can scarcely fail to deter others who may be inclined to do so from following their example. It is one thing for a man whose character is already tainted to abandon a course which he deems to be advantageous, and another thing for one whose fame is yet fair to rush into it with full knowledge that his delinquency will certainly be publicly proclaimed. If we cannot destroy the old taint, we may at least prevent its spreading; and though the purification of the Profession from its present discreditable members may not be practicable, it must be remembered that they will depart like other mortals, and it will be a mighty advantage if we can but succeed in preventing the breeding up of a new progeny to fill their places. There is a second advantage to be derived from these publications; but that depends upon the cordial co-operation of the members of the Profession. The names thus made known to them can be, and ought to be, marked names, to be avoided like a pestilence; with them no communion should be held; no law society should admit them; no agency matters should be intrusted to them; the utmost caution should be observed in all unavoidable communications with them in course of business. A line may be drawn under those names in the Law List; practitioners will know whom to shun, and they will be subjected to keenest scrutiny by their neighbours, that if they give opportunity they may be removed from the roll of the Profession they disgrace.

These are practical remedies for the mischief, which can scarcely fail to be potent for their end. Many who would be careless of mere exposure will acutely feel its effects upon the pocket. So necessary to the convenient conduct of the business of his clients by an attorney is the confidence of, and ready communication with his professional brethren, that without it clients could not long be retained.

Such are the advantages, as they present themselves to our minds, likely to result from steady adherence to the system of fearlessly exposing proved professional malpractices which the Law Times has commenced. We hope the reasons assigned will be satisfactory to the friends who may have doubted hitherto the propriety of the proceeding. It may be attended with some disadvantages, possibly with that suggested, that thereby it offered food for the prejudices of the vulgar of all classes against the Profession. But these, if they exist, will be more than counterbalanced by the proof thus publicly afforded that, by Lawyers as a body, speaking through their public organ, such practices are repudiated and denounced; by the warning it will utter to others against following the example; and by the notice it will give to the Profession everywhere whom to shun and whom to watch.

SOMETHING DUBIOUS.

The following advertisement, of very doubtful character, appears in the Times of Tuesday, June 27th.

"LAW.

"The Clerk to the Magistrates of a Borough Market Town within an easy distance of London, having a connection and knowledge of most persons in the neighbourhood, wishes to meet with a Gentleman desirous of a Practice. The Advertiser is not an Attorney, but is well acquainted with the Profession, and would act as Clerk for a moderate salary. The consideration required is an immediate advance, by way of loan only, of 150*l*. Letters addressed to A. Z. &c. will meet attention."

Here we have a clerk to magistrates deliberately offering for sale the influence of his office. He will act as clerk to his purchaser for a moderate salary. The intent of this advertisement is plain: the advertiser, not being an attorney, wants to practise as one; for this purpose he inquires for an attorney who will permit him to practise in his name, under pretence of being his clerk, giving him probably a portion of the profits by way of interest for the loan. We hope no member of the Profession will be found to lend himself to such a transaction: but the very proposition illustrates the impropriety of magistrates appointing as their clerks any but attorneys, and those the most respectable they can find; and we trust that all our magistrate readers will be warned by the above extract, and resist any selection of clerk that might lead to their office and its influence being advertised for sale.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

A member has suggested that the first text-book of the Society should be one which shall comprise the entire Practice of the Law, as required in the usual business of an attorney's office; that is, we presume, to contain, in a methodized form, and with all the appliances requisite for ready reference, the learning in matters of practice with which an attorney needs to be acquainted, or, at least, to have within his reach. At present, to obtain it, he must keep and consult a pretty extensive library, one-half of which, at least, consists of repetitions of the same matter; and half the remainder of law that is either obsolete, or upon which he is never called to advise.

Our correspondent suggests that such a work might, by judicious arrangement, be compressed into a comparatively small compass, that is, we presume, some five or six volumes; for a work which would be, in fact, a complete law-library in itself, in very small compass, and, at the Society's prices, the cost would be trifling, while to the Profession it would be a great boon. He suggests that the most satisfactory mode of executing it would be for one person to map out the design, and for a variety of hands to execute it; intrusting each department to the labour of some lawyer peculiarly conversant with the subject confided to him. This would have the further advantage of speed, which, in the present changing state of the law, is an important consideration, in order that the text-book may contain the latest law. It is further proposed that the volumes should be bound with blank leaves for noting up, and that in any digest of the Society a figure should refer to the page in the text-book in which the case or statute digested ought to be noted, so that the volumes should always keep pace with the existing law until a new edition is rendered necessary by the number of references.

Our correspondent is of opinion that such a work, if decently done at first, with the amendments that experience would suggest, would become, in a few years, the standard text-book of the Profession.

And we are inclined to agree with him. Undoubtedly such a work is a desideratum in the Profession; and it is only not supplied because it is too large a one for private enterprise. But it is precisely the kind of publication which the Verulam Society is established to provide; and it would be one well worthy of its ambition! What say the members to the proposition?

But, if approved, it could not be undertaken until there is a much greater accession to our ranks. The members now number 534; they are increasing with each week; but that number would not be sufficient to justify an enterprise like that we have described. Nothing less than 750 subscribers to such a work would defray its cost. Doubtless that number will, ere long, be enrolled; but it must be observed, that it is the design of the Society to give to the members a choice of the books. Consequently, the subscribers to any publication will always be considerably fewer than the total number of members. For instance: the Reports are ordered, as yet, only by [illegible] out of the whole body of 534 members. Hence the necessity of a much longer list of members than would be needed if each one was compelled to take all the publications.

We have said that 750 subscribers would defray the cost of the work described, at a moderate price; but a greater number would permit a proportionate reduction in that price. This should be understood by the members; for it makes it their interest to extend the roll as much as possible. The same observation applies to the Reports already in progress. Their present cost will be greatly reduced, should the subscribers increase: for the very plan of the Society is to supply its publications to the members at the cost price; and as in printing the cost does not increase in proportion to the number of copies, so the effect of a large demand will be to diminish the price to the members.

It is thus that the benefits, without the risk, are secured to the members, and the possibility avoided, about which some are so nervously apprehensive—the law of partnership.

THE REPORTS.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THE SUSSEX PEERAGE.

The committee of the House of Lords sat on Tuesday morning at ten o'clock, to receive the opinion of the learned judges upon the question propounded to them in this case. The Earl of Shaftesbury presided, and there were present—The Lord Chancellor, and Lords Brougham, Denman, Cottenham, Campbell, and Langdale, and the majority of the judges.

Sir NICHOLAS TINDAL, Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, read the following decision of the judges. The question proposed by your lordships to her Majesty's judges is this, namely—"Evidence being offered of a marriage solemnized at Rome in the year 1793, by an English priest, according to the rites of the Church of England, between A B, the son of his Majesty, King George III. and C D, a British subject, without the previous consent of his said Majesty, assuming such evidence to have been sufficient to establish a valid marriage between A B and C D, independently of the provisions of the statute 12 Geo. 3, c. 11, would it be sufficient, having regard to the statute, to establish a valid marriage in a suit in which the eldest son of A B claims lands in England as heir of A B, by virtue of such alleged marriage?" In answer to this question, I am requested by my brethren to inform your lordships that it is the unanimous opinion of all the judges who have heard the arguments in this case, that, assuming the evidence to have been sufficient to establish a valid marriage between A B and C D, independently of the provisions of the statute 12 Geo. 3, c. 11, it is not sufficient, having regard to that statute, to establish a valid marriage in a suit in which the eldest son of A B claims lands in England as heir of A B, by virtue of such alleged marriage. The question, my lords, turns entirely on the legal construction of the statute before referred to, and is shortly this—whether to become a marriage within the prohibition of the statute, it is necessary that it should have been contracted within the realm of England; or whether the statute extends to prohibit and annul a marriage wherever the same shall be contracted and solemnized, whether within the realm of England or without. It is scarcely necessary to observe to your lordships that the question states that A B is the son of his late Majesty King George III. and applies to a descendant of the body of his late Majesty King George II. not being the issue of any princess married into a foreign family, so that A B falls precisely within that class or description of persons with respect to whose marriage the statute intended to legislate; that is, he falls within that description or class for whom the statute may be considered to have been framed, with respect to him personally and individually, as if it had been enacted in express terms that A B should not be capable of contracting a marriage without the previous consent of the reigning sovereign signified under the great seal, and declared in Council; and again, that the marriage of A B without such consent having been obtained, shall be null and void to all intents and purposes. The general rule for the construction of Acts of Parliament is, that they shall be construed according to the intention of the Parliament which passed those Acts. If the words of the statute are in themselves precise and unambiguous, then no more can be necessary than to explain those words in their natural and ordinary sense. The words themselves alone do, in such case, best declare the intention of the lawgivers; but if any doubt arises upon the terms employed by the Legislature, it has been held as a satisfactory means of interpreting the intention of the statute to call in aid the ground and cause of making that statute, and to have recourse to the preamble, and that, according to Dyer, C. J. in Plowden, is called "a key to open the minds of the makers of the Act, and the mischiefs which it is intended to redress;" and, looking to all the grounds of interpretation, we think they concur in the present instance, in demanding that construction of the statute at which we have arrived. For, in the first place, the words of the statute itself appear to us to be free from all ambiguity: the prohibitory words of the statute are plain, that "no one of the persons therein described shall be capable of contracting matrimony;" and again, "that every marriage or matrimonial contract of any such person shall be null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever." The statute does not enact any incapacity to contract matrimony within one particular country or district or another; but to contract matrimony generally and in the abstract; it is an incapacity attaching itself to the person of A B, and he cannot divest himself of it wherever he goes; but as a marriage once duly solemnized in any country will be a valid marriage all the world over, that incapacity to contract a marriage at Rome clearly falls within the prohibitory words of the statute, and so it incapacitates him from contracting it in England. The words as to the second section or annulling branch of the enactment are very broad, "that every such marriage, without such consent, shall be null and void;" the words employed are general, or more properly universal, and cannot be satisfied in their plain, literal, and ordinary meaning, unless held to extend to all marriages whatsoever, in whatever part of the world they may have been contracted and solemnized. The concluding words of the second section threw light on, and confirm the interpretation to be given to the first. By the second section, the descendants of the body of Geo. III. being above the age of twenty-five years, who shall "persist in their resolution to contract a marriage disapproved of, or dissented from, by the king, upon giving notice to the Privy Council are enabled at any time before the expiration of twelve calendar months after such notice to contract such marriage, and such marriage may be duly solemnized without the previous consent of his Majesty, his heirs, or successors, and such marriage declared to be good, as if the Act had never been made, unless both Houses of Parliament shall, before the expiration of the said twelve months, declare their disapprobation of such intended marriage." The words employed in this section are the same as in the first, to contract a marriage and to marry generally, without reference to the particular country wherein the marriage is contracted or solemnized; but as no doubt can be entertained by any one, that any marriage taking place, with a due observance of the requisites of the second section, shall be equally valid, whether contracted and celebrated at Rome or in England; so we think it would be contrary to all established rules of construction, if the same words in the first section were to receive a different sense from those in the second; if it should be held that a marriage at Rome, contracted with reference to the second section, is made valid, at the same time that a marriage at Rome is not prohibited under the first. Indeed, it is scarcely supposable that the Legislature should have provided the minute and laborious machinery of the second section, and to have interposed such a check against marriages without consent, and at the same time have rendered these marriages so celebrated valid in one given state of circumstances, if a party himself, who is subject to such legislation, by an easy journey, or a voyage of a few hours, might render all its provisions useless and set the statute at defiance, by contracting a marriage abroad with whomsoever he thought proper. And, my lords, it is not unworthy of remark, while we are looking to the body of the Act, in order to discover its interpretation, that that very exception from the prohibitory clause, that the issue of those princesses who have married or may marry into foreign families, affords some proof that marriages abroad could not have been out of the view or contemplation of the Legislature at the time of passing the Act, as such marriages might not unfrequently be celebrated out of England. It was contended in the course of the argument at your lordships' bar, that the Act of the English Legislature could have no binding force beyond or out of the realm of England; and if by this it is meant that it can have no obligatory force on subjects of another state, the position is no doubt correct to its full extent; but it is equally certain, that the Act of the Legislature would bind the subjects of this realm, both within and without; and such was its intention. Indeed it is admitted by the learned counsel for the claimant, that if there had been found in the statute these words, "marriage within the realm of England, or without," or other words equally applicable to such an enactment, the capacity to contract a marriage would have been taken away, and a marriage there solemnized would have been made null and void. But if the words actually found in the statute are comprehensive enough to include all marriages within England as well as without, as we think they do; and if, at the same time, the restraining the sense of these words to a marriage within England must necessarily defeat the object and purposes of the Act, as we think it would do, then it seems to us to follow that the construction of the Act must be the same, whether these words are found within the statute or not. Surely, if a marriage of a descendant of George II. contracted and celebrated in Scotland, or Ireland, or on the continent, is to be held a marriage not prohibited by the Act, the statute itself may be considered virtually and substantially a dead letter from the first day it was passed. But the object and purpose for which this Act was passed, and the mischiefs it was intended to prevent thereby, are clear, and leave no doubt as to the proper construction of the Act. It was founded on policy, expediency, and wisdom, which required that no marriage of any branch of the royal family should be contracted which should be detrimental to the interests of the state, whether at home or abroad, the object being declared by the preamble to be "the more effectually to guard the descendants of his late Majesty George II. from marrying without the approbation of the reigning sovereign;" and it declares the marriages of the Royal Family to be of the highest importance to the state, and, therefore, the kings of these realms have ever been intrusted with the care and approbation thereof; but this object is frustrated and the mischief remediless, and the power of the sovereign nugatory, if a marriage out of England, confessedly to avoid the operations of this statute, is to be held good and valid when celebrated out of the country. And it was argued, on the part of the claimant, that as it is directed in the first section of the Act, that the consent, under the great seal, shall be set out in the license and register of the marriage; that this direction can only be applicable to the case of a marriage celebrated in this country only, and as not extending to a foreign marriage. But to this objection it appears to be a sufficient answer that the only words in that section that are essential to make a marriage a valid marriage, are those which require the previous consent of his Majesty signified under the great seal, and declared in Council, and that the words which follow, directing such consent to be set out in the license and register, are, as the very words import, directory, only, and not essential, and are applicable to those cases alone where they can be applied merely to the case of a marriage celebrated in England by a license in England; for it would be impossible to contend, if the marriage of A B had been celebrated at Rome without the previous consent of his Majesty King George III. signified under the great seal and declared in Council, that such marriage would not have been held to be valid to all intents and purposes, though the observance of such directions, that such consent should be inserted in the license and register of the marriage, had become in this case impracticable. It is further contended in the argument, that inasmuch as, by the third section of the Act, "all persons who wilfully and knowingly presume to solemnize, or assist, or shall be present at the celebration of any marriage, or at the making of any matrimonial contract, without such consent, shall incur the penalty of a præmunire," and as there is no provision made in this section for the trial and punishment of the offenders when the offence shall be committed out of England, the necessary inference must be that the statute does not extend to prohibit marriages out of England; but we think the inference, that the penal clause is itself defective in not making provision for the trial of British subjects where they violate the statute out of the realms, is a more just and reasonable inference; but that we should not refuse on that account to give the plain words of the statute their necessary force, and hold the enactment itself to be useless and inoperative. We therefore think, for the reasons we have humbly given to your lordships, that the eldest son of A B, under the circumstances stated in your lordships' question, regard being had to the statute 12 Geo. 3, c. 11, could not make out a good title, as heir of A B, to the lands sought to be recovered.

This decision was then affirmed by the committee.

Re WALKER, a Lunatic.

Deposit of shares.

Lowndes supported a petition by the committee of the estate, that he may be at liberty either to deposit with the commissioner, or sell shares in the Ayr and Calder Canal Navigation, to the extent of 3,800*l*.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Let the shares be deposited.

Re GROVES, a Lunatic.

Allowance.

The brother of the lunatic had died intestate, leaving only an illegitimate child, and by his brother's death the lunatic had received an addition to his property.

Cooper supported a petition for an increased allowance, and urged that some provision was necessary to be made for the brother's child out of the lunatic's allowance.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—On the ground of an increased income, the lunatic's allowance may be increased.

Friday, March 29.

Re DYCE SOMBRE, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Security by committee for foreign assets—Wife's paraphernalia—Allowances.

The securities of the committee of the estate having been approved by the commissioner, on a petition to confirm the commissioner's report, the general management of the lunatic's affairs was discussed by Tinney and Lloyd, for the committee of the estate of the lunatic.

Bethel and Calvert, for the wife and committee of the person.

Romilly, for the next of kin.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The committee of the estate must give security for the whole of the estate in this country; but he need not give security for the debts due to the lunatic in India, and with which, therefore, he must not intermeddle.

Tinney, for the committee of the estate, having required that Mrs. Dyce Sombre should give security for the personal jewels and ornaments left in her possession, and which were said to be very valuable, Calvert said, it was unusual for the wife to give security for that which constituted her paraphernalia.

The Lord Chancellor.—There must be an inquiry into the circumstances under which she became possessed of these jewels, and as to their nature and value. His lordship also intimated that the committee of the estate in this case should be allowed a salary; as, from the nature and magnitude of the estate and the circumstances of the case, none but a professional person and a stranger to the family could be found to undertake the duties.

Romilly, for the next of kin, said the husband of one of the two sisters, the lunatic's next of kin, had been in the habit, under Mr. Sombre's direction, of paying certain pensions in India, to persons whose sole means of subsistence consisted of those pensions, and he asked that an inquiry may be had as to the propriety of continuing those pensions.

Wakefield and Walpole, for Mr. Sombre, who had presented a petition to supersede the commission.

The Lord Chancellor. — The pensions cannot be paid without an inquiry; but the expense of these complicated inquiries must be enormous, and I will name an early day for hearing the petition to supersede.

Re Gallon, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Costs of solicitors retained by the lunatic to resist commission.

In this case the lunatic, an elderly lady, had written to the petitioners, who are solicitors, "that she wished them to take the most marked measures to oppose the proceedings of Messrs. Stephenson, who were seeking to deprive her of liberty and property." The commission had issued, and the lady had been found lunatic, and the petitioners now asked for their costs incurred in resisting the commission.

Daniell objected that the letter referred to was not really the letter of the lady herself. These petitioners were really the solicitors of the parties interested in opposing the commission. There was no affidavit, but the circumstance, that a suit had been instituted for an account of the lunatic's estate, and the petitioners were the solicitors of the accounting party. (Re Knight, in Shelford on Lunacy.)

The Lord Chancellor.—I can't decide on vague speculations; I must decide on the affidavits; and here it is proper to make the order for taxation and payment of the costs.

Re Chambers.

Practice in lunacy—Costs of more than one solicitor for parties in the same interest.

Wilcock supported a petition for (amongst other things) payment of the costs of the solicitor of the committee of the person, as well as the solicitor of the committee of the estate. The two committees could not agree upon one solicitor.

Blunt appeared for the committee of the estate.

The Lord Chancellor.—The costs of both solicitors may be allowed in this instance; but the parties in the same interests ought to appear by the same solicitor, and I must apply myself to consider whether some means cannot be adopted to prevent such occurrences in future.

Drake v. Drake.

Stay of proceedings pending an appeal—Irreparable injury from discovery.

Cooper moved on behalf of the defendant, by way of appeal from the decision of Vice-Chancellor Wigram, to stay proceedings pending an appeal.

The plaintiff and defendant are brothers, and the bill is filed to obtain a discovery in aid of an action of ejectment which the defendant in equity had commenced against the plaintiff. The defendant had put in a plea to the bill, which had been overruled on the 9th of March, and the plaintiff was now pressing for an answer. If the answer was enforced, the appeal would be rendered useless, as the whole effect of the plaintiff's bill would have been answered. (Wood v. Milner, 1 Jacob & Walker's Reports, 636; The King of Spain v. Machado, 4 Russell's Reports, 560.)

Romilly.—The plaintiff in ejectment says he is beneficial owner, but that the defendant has the deeds in his possession. The attachment should not issue for three weeks.

The Lord Chancellor.—That will meet the justice of the case. I will dispose of the costs of the application at a future time.

COURT OF THE VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND.

Tuesday, June 25.

Knight v. Marjoribanks.

(By Supplemental Bill.)

Practice—General Orders, 11*th November*, 1841, and 5*th May*, 1837; Sections ix. 2, and sec. iii.—Demurrer—Setting the same down for argument by plaintiff under 34 New Or. 26 Aug. 1841—Laches. Where a plaintiff, under the last-mentioned order, is entitled to set down the demurrer, but has been prevented from so doing through the negligence of his solicitor, the neglect of such solicitor must be regarded as that of the client, and any misconduct of an attorney cannot be allowed to damnify the other party. The Court will not, therefore, under the above circumstances, relieve the party by discharging its own order, or enlarge the time for setting down a demurrer for argument after the usual time for so doing has expired.

This was a motion made to the Court involving two questions: first, whether, under the circumstances hereafter mentioned, the notice was not given in the wrong branch of the Court; and, secondly, whether the gross neglect of plaintiffs' solicitor in not setting down a demurrer for argument within the period required by Rules of the Court,(a) ought to prejudice the defendant, who had been guilty of no default or misconduct in the suit whatever.

The facts relating to the first question are the following:—In the original cause an order was made by the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, upon the defendants' motion, on the 5th of December, 1842, for a commission to examine witnesses in Van Diemen's Land, which was opposed by the plaintiffs, with affidavits filed on both sides. Before that motion was made a notice was served by the defendants on the clerk in court (now the Writ and Record Clerk), as directed by the General Order of the 11th of November, 1841, sec. 4,(b) to attach the cause to the Vice-Chancellor Wigram's Court, but which he refused to receive, on the ground that, being an Exchequer cause, it was not within that General Order, and that the order for the commission then about to be specially moved for would of itself attach the cause to that branch of the court. The plaintiff, however, on the 30th of March last, applied by counsel to the Vice-Chancellor of England's Court, for leave to make the motion for setting down the demurrer to be argued before his Honour on Tuesday, the 2nd of April following, and then served notice of abandoning the motion of which he had given notice before Vice-Chancellor Wigram, notwithstanding the time within which the demurrer should have been set down to be argued had expired.

As to the second question, which involved the merits of the present application, it was not denied by the defendants but that the plaintiffs' original attorney had grossly neglected his clients' interests. From the affidavit of the plaintiffs, it appears that they employed one Geo. W. Poole, of Furnival's-inn, to commence and prosecute this suit on their behalf; that the original bill was filed in the Court of Exchequer on the 22nd of March, 1839; the bill was amended on the 2nd of November, and re-amended on the 5th of March, 1840; that the plaintiffs filed their supplemental bill on the 1st of May, 1843, to which the defendants appeared on the 8th of May, 1843, and filed their demurrer and answer on the 6th of July following to the supplemental bill. By the 34th Rule of the 26th of August, 1841, the demurrer ought to have been set down for argument by G. W. Poole within three weeks after it was filed, and notice thereof served, which three weeks expired on the 27th day of July last, but he neglected to do so; the consequence of which was, that the demurrer was held to be sufficient, and the plaintiffs were held to have submitted thereto, of which the plaintiffs were first made acquainted some time about January last.

The plaintiffs, moreover, deposed that they had paid G. W. Poole large sums of money to encourage him to prosecute the suit vigorously, to an amount far exceeding any demand which he might have had against them, and that in the month of July last, Poole became embarrassed in his circumstances, and absented himself from his office and wholly neglected to attend to his business, and was in the month of December last proclaimed an outlaw. That from the moment the plaintiffs made the discovery of Poole's embarrassed circumstances, they endeavoured by every means to obtain the papers in the suit, and for an order, with Poole's consent, that another solicitor should be substituted in his place, but this they were unable to do until the 11th of March last. They stated, moreover, that unless they were allowed to set the demurrer down for argument, their interests would be materially injured; and as soon as the appointment of T. Nias as their solicitor took place, they applied for, and obtained, an office copy of the demurrer and answer, and laid the same before counsel to advise thereon, and that no delay had arisen on their part in applying to the Court, but that the present application to the Court was not made for the purpose of delay.

The affidavits filed on behalf of the defendants went to prove that Poole, the original solicitor for the plaintiffs, was at his office in Furnival's-inn on the 3rd, 4th, and 9th of August last. That with reference to the statement of the plaintiffs that they were unable to procure an order, with the consent of Poole, to substitute Nias as their solicitor in the suit, until the 11th of March, it was ascertained, upon inquiry of the secretary of the Master of the Rolls, that such order required no consent on the part of Poole, and might have been obtained at any time without his consent. And, further, that the alleged rights and interests of the plaintiffs would not at all prejudice, nor the justice to which they conceived they were entitled be defeated or prejudiced, unless they were allowed to set down the demurrer to their supplemental bill for argument; on the contrary, the defendants would be materially prejudiced if, at that late stage, the plaintiffs were allowed to raise further issues on the matters covered by the demurrer; such matters being either already in issue in the original suit, or were so far known to the plaintiffs before that such was at issue as to have enabled them to put the same matters in issue, by amendment of the original bill; and that a decree, in the terms of the prayer of the original bill, would put the plaintiffs into possession of all the relief sought by the supplemental bill, and demurred to by the defendants, except as to part thereof, which was sought by way of injunction.

Wakefield appeared for the plaintiffs, and, upon the first question, urged that the fourth order, 11th Nov. 1841, must be taken to apply to causes transferred from the Exchequer; and that they, having obtained the insertion of an entry in the margin of the book of their clerk in court, the words "Vice-Chancellor of England," opposite to the title of the cause, had complied with that order sufficiently to attach the cause to that branch of the court, and that the orders of 5th May, 1837, would have no application. Upon the second question, he submitted that the Court would enlarge the time for demurring, upon the ground that where there is any case of accident, mistake, or neglect, from embarrassed circumstances, the Court will relieve from the effect of its own orders.

Bethel and R. Palmer, for the defendants, contended that as the cause came originally from the Exchequer, it was not within the General Order of the 11th Nov. 1841, which does not prescribe any mode by which the causes from that court are to be attached to any particular branch of this court. The Act which abolished the equity jurisdiction of the Exchequer transfers the causes then pending to the "Court of Chancery" generally, and, when so transferred, were no more attached to the Lord Chancellor's Court than to that of the Master of the Rolls. For this reason they were not within the 4th sec. of the Order 11th Nov. 1841, which applied only to causes then in the Lord Chancellor's Court, as distinguished from the Court of the Master of the Rolls. It appears from the affidavits of the defendants, that they consulted Mr. Veal, the clerk of the records and writs, who informed them that the cause could not be attached to any branch of the court under the Order 11th Nov. 1841; but that the first Special Order upon merits, shewn by answer or affidavit, determines what branch of the court an Exchequer cause is attached, both as to all future interlocutory applications and the setting down the cause for hearing, under the General Order of 5th May, 1837, sec. ix. 2, and sec. iii. On the second part of the argument, they contended also, that this was not a case for rescinding the orders of the Court; that the neglect of the solicitor was the neglect of the client; and the plaintiff had not sufficiently accounted for the lapse of time which had expired between the period when his solicitor began to be in embarrassed circumstances and when he last gave his notice of motion to set the demurrer down for argument. If a client has been injured by the neglect or misconduct of his solicitor, he has his remedy against him in another way, and the other party in the suit is not to be damnified thereby. Moreover, the Court had no power to grant the present application, for the demurrer was allowed a year ago; and the attempt was to induce the Court to excuse an indefinite delay, for which there was not one vestige of equity for the exercise of its jurisdiction. That the 34th Order, 26th Aug. 1841, was not a permissive order, but intended to give a status to defendants, which the present application sought to displace. There is also a difference between the measure of indulgence which the Court grants to the plaintiff or defendant, and it will relax its rules in favour of the latter under circumstances in which it will refuse to do so on behalf of the former.

Cases cited for the plaintiff: Pennington v. Lord Muncaster (1 Madd. 555); Taylor v. Salmon (3 M. & Cr. 109).

Cases for the defendant: Walmesley v. Froud (3 Rus. & My. 334); Charlton v. Richmond (4 Bea. 397); Stanley v. Bond (5 Bea. 175).

The Vice-Chancellor.—I have jurisdiction to hear this motion. The order of 5th May, 1837, applied only to the Vice-Chancellor of England, and there can be no other construction put upon the order

(a) The latter clause of the 34th of the Orders 26th August, 1841, declares that "where the demurrer is to part of the bill, the demurrer shall be held sufficient, and the plaintiff be held to have submitted thereto, unless the plaintiff shall, within three weeks from the expiration of the time allowed for filing such last-mentioned demurrer, cause the same to be set down for argument."

(b) "——— and the notice of the plaintiff, or of any one of the defendants, or of the person desirous of applying as aforesaid, first given on or after the said 21st day of November instant, shall determine the Court to which such cause shall be attached, unless removed therefrom by any special order to be made by the Lord Chancellor; and that no party or person shall move, petition, or take any proceedings until such notice has been given."—Vide the Order.

than what appears upon the face of it. Then if it be so, I apprehend it is an open cause. It is stated, however, to be a general practice in cases of this kind. Now although such a practice is to be treated with common courtesy, it is not binding upon judges, and it is somewhat surprising that there has not been some new order to regulate the new courts in this particular. As to the other question, I do not think that it is sufficiently stated on the part of the plaintiffs to shew mistake or accident; but neglect, which may have arisen, as it is suggested, for want of means. The plaintiffs state that "they have paid the former solicitor large sums of money to encourage him to prosecute the suit vigorously;" so they knew, according to their own representation, that Pool was in embarrassed circumstances all along. Now, if persons will employ solicitors to act for them, and find it necessary to furnish them with money to induce them to prosecute the suit vigorously, such clients must take the consequences in not finding out what the real state of the case is.

I refuse the motion with costs.

ROLLS COURT.

June 1 and 24, and July 6.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. MULLEY.

Construction of 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 3.

The husband forfeiting all interest in the wife's property, in case of their marriage being solemnized by virtue of a license improperly obtained, the settlement thereof directed by the Act is upon the innocent party, or the issue of the marriage, and does not extend to a future marriage.

This was an information filed to obtain a declaration that John Mulley had forfeited all interest in the present and future property of Catherine, his wife, on the ground that the marriage had been solemnized by virtue of a license obtained upon an improper affidavit.

Mr. Cooper, the father of Mrs. Mulley, by his will gave several legacies, and amongst others, 400*l.* and 100*l.* to Mrs. Mulley. The residue he gave to trustees for the benefit of his wife during her widowhood, and after her death, or marriage, in trust for his children then living, payable at twenty-one. The testator having died, a suit was instituted in 1832, to carry out the trusts of the will, by a decree in which the estates were sold, and the proceeds paid into court. Pending this suit the defendant married the said Catherine Cooper; and this information was filed at the relation of her mother and the trustees of her father's will (under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 23); and on the 10th March, 1838, a decree was made declaring a forfeiture, and directing a reference to the Master as to a settlement, and in what the property consisted. An account was taken; but it having been found that except as to the legacies of 400*l.* and 100*l.* no immediate benefit could accrue under the will to Mrs. Mulley, the matter was proceeded with only so far as to obtain the Master's approval of a settlement in favour of her and the issue of the marriage. In 1839, Mrs. Cooper married one J. Norman; and some of the reversionary property having fallen into possession, it now became necessary to execute the settlement. It was suggested that the settlement should include the issue of Mrs. Mulley by any future marriage.

Lovatt contended that the Act specifically declared that the settlement should be made for the benefit of the innocent party, or the issue of the marriage.

Sheffield, for the defendants.

The MASTER of the ROLLS directed the settlement to be executed as it was, without any provision for a future marriage, which the Act did not authorize.

TITLEY v. WOLSTENHOLME.

Devisee of trust estates—Power to appoint new trustees.

The devisee of trust estates under the will of the surviving trustee, to whom and to two others, and the survivor, and the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of such survivor, they had been devised by the original testator, is (there being no power to appoint new trustees) a trustee qualified to act in the trusts of the original will.

This was a bill for the appointment of new trustees under the direction of the Court.

On the 1st June last (3 Law T. 177), the case came before the Court on demurrer to the bill for want of equity, and the question of the validity of the appointment of new trustees not being considered proper to be determined on demurrer, it was directed to stand over, and come on again on answer on the first cause-day after Term.

One Richard Titley, by his will, dated Jan. 16, 1828, gave all his freehold and leasehold property, and all his real estate and effects to his wife, his son Richard, and one Robert Tebbutt, and the survivors and survivor of them, and the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the survivor, on trust for the benefit of his wife and five children. The language used throughout the will in reference to the trustees varied considerably. Sometimes certain acts were directed to be done and powers exercised by the trustees, "their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and the survivors and survivor of them;" again, by them, "their heirs and assigns;" and at other times by them, "and the survivors and survivor of them, and the executors and administrators of the survivor;" but the general scope of the will appeared to be to give the real estate to the trustees, their heirs and assigns, and the personalty to them, their executors and administrators. There was no power to appoint new trustees. The testator died in June 1828, Mrs. Titley, the widow, in 1831, and Richard Titley, the son, in 1835, leaving Robert Tebbutt, the only surviving trustee, who by will devised the trust estates to Edward Titley, David Waddington, and Charles Wolstenholme, on the trusts of Mr. Titley's will. The validity of this disposition being questioned, the bill was filed to obtain a declaration that the trustees appointed by Tebbut were not trustees, and that new trustees might be appointed by the Court.

Bacon argued in support of the bill.

Turner and Little, contra.

Milne, for the executors of Tebbutt, asked for his costs.

Cases cited: Cooke v. Crawford (6 Jur. 723); Bradford v. Belfield (2 Sim. 264); Townsend v. Wilson (1 B. & Ald. 608); Hall v. Dewes (Jac. 189); Hone v. Whitfield (2 Show. 57); Lord Braybrooke v. Inskip (8 Ves. 434); Hall v. Bright (1 Jac. & W. 494); Midland Counties Railway Company v. Westcomb (11 Sim. 57); 1 Jarm. Wills, 641; 2 Jarm. Wills, 714; 1 Sugd. Pow. 223.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—My impression at present is, that what has been done is right, but a difficulty arises from the decision in the case of Cooke v. Crawford. The appointment of an executor is as voluntary as that of a trustee, and if property could rightfully pass to the one, there is no reason why it should not to the other. The trusts were such as to continue beyond the lives of the original trustees, and a dissolution of them therefore was necessary. The testator, therefore, must have known and meant them to be continuing, and not limited trusts; and it is not to be supposed that he, as founder of the trusts, intended the person to execute them should be left to the chance of the surviving trustee having no heir, or, having one, he should be a lunatic or beyond seas, &c. Did he not rather mean to have this corrected by the personal act of the trustee. The testator has reposed personal confidence, and hence, it is said, the words "assigns," so frequently used, cannot authorize a conveyance inter vivos, which would destroy that confidence; but that is no reason why it should not have operation when that confidence is at an end. It is admitted that the legal estate passed, and that the devisees are under an obligation to convey as this Court may direct, but it is said that they have not the power to execute the trusts. It seems difficult to support this. I shall mention it again on Monday. Accordingly, 8th July, his lordship restated the points of the case, entered into the question at great length, and intimated that his opinion as to the trustees being properly appointed remained unchanged.

HARVEY v. SHELTON and OTHERS; and SHELTON v. HARVEY.

Award—Improper conduct in arbitrator—Stat. 9 & 10 Wm. 3, c. 15, s. 2.

If, after hearing the parties, the arbitrator applies to one of them for an explanation of certain matters comprised in the subject-matter of the reference, in the absence of the other, and without giving him due notice or requiring his attendance, it is a sufficient ground to set aside the award.

If an award be delivered before any term, and on the last day of that term resistance is offered to a motion to make the award a rule of court, a notice after that day of a cross-motion for the first day of the following term, to set aside the award, is not too late, within the 9 & 10 Wm. 3, c. 15.

This was a cross-motion, to set aside an award (asked to be made a rule of court) for improper conduct on the part of the arbitrator. By arrangement with the executors of one Gregory, of Nottingham, Shelton, the defendant, became the owner of his trade of bone-crushing, &c. and in 1830 entered into partnership with the plaintiff in that trade, and also in the management of a farm. On the 26th of December, 1832, differences having arisen, they agreed to dissolve, the defendant, Shelton, to take the farm, and Harvey the trade, &c. giving a bond to Shelton for the amount at which the plant, stock, &c. should be valued, but, till the valuation, Shelton was to be at liberty to carry on the trade. Harvey also was to have the trade premises for seven years, at a rent. The valuation was not made, nor the bond given. Shelton then filed a bill for a dissolution and an account (which was answered by Harvey), but did not prosecute it. Harvey then filed a cross-bill, which became the first cause; and on the 18th of February, 1837, there was a decree, directing an account, &c. In August, 1843, affairs not being likely soon to be wound up, it was proposed and agreed to refer the case to a Mr. Wakefield, who served the parties with notice to proceed to Nottingham on the 26th of September following. They accordingly met, and Harvey requested and obtained an adjournment till the next day, to get professional assistance, which, however, he was unable to do. The business went on nevertheless, and each party having advanced all he had to say, the meeting broke up, Harvey supposing, as he alleged, that there would be a final meeting before the award would be made. Wakefield employed one Norris, an accountant, to assist him, and both parties were to have access to the books in his hands. Harvey went to him frequently. On three several occasions Wakefield sent for Shelton and Norris to explain items of the account, but without the knowledge of Harvey, who, however, at his own request by letter, had an interview privately with Wakefield; but on that occasion Wakefield said, "It is all right, the award will soon be ready." It was alleged also, that the decree was not fully carried out in taking the accounts, &c.; that there had been a set-off of unequal sums, &c. There was a preliminary objection taken to the cross-motion, on the ground that it was not made till after the term next following the delivery of the award, and was therefore too late, by stat. 9 & 10 Wm. 3, c. 15, s. 2.

Cases cited: Auriol v. Smith (1 T. & R. 121); Rushworth v. Barron (1 H. & W. 122); Pownall v. King (6 Ves. 10); Fetherstone v. Cooper (9 Ves. 67); Alardes v. Campbell (1 Barn. 152); Walker v. Frobisher (6 Ves. 70); Re Hicks and Others (8 Taunt. 694); Pepper v. Gorham (4 J. Daniell, for the plaintiff Harvey.

Turner and Glasse, for Shelton.

Thomas Parker, for the executors.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—This is a motion to set aside an award, and three objections are raised to it; first, that it is irregular, because there was no final meeting, as was understood there would be; secondly, that the arbitrator acted improperly in consulting Shelton in the absence of Harvey; and, thirdly, that he exceeded his authority, &c. As to the first, both parties were probably mistaken, and it was at the discretion of the arbitrator to have another meeting or not. As to the second, it was very indiscreet, to say the least of it, to act in the manner the arbitrator has done; and as to the case of a mercantile reference being less strict in this respect, I entirely repudiate such a distinction. The conduct of Harvey was also improper in writing the letter. As to the third point, the arbitrator had large powers given him by the parties, and might go much farther than probably this Court would go. The complaint made on the last day of Easter Term, in opposition to the motion to make the award delivered on the 30th of March a rule of court, is sufficient to save the statute.

The award must be set aside.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Wednesday, July 3.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. SEVERNE.

Marriage Act—Minors.

The 23rd section of the 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, is applicable to a case where the innocent party has no property either in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy.

Where, at the hearing of an information under this Act, an inquiry was directed, and more than a year had elapsed since the marriage, the inquiry was limited to the allegations contained in the information.

This was an information under the 23rd section of the 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, for the purpose of having a declaration by the Court of the forfeiture by the defendant, Mrs. Severne, of all estate, right, title, or interest in any property which had accrued or should accrue to her by force of the marriage between her and the other defendant, her husband, and that the same estate, &c. might be secured as the Court should direct. The husband and wife were both minors, and, on the 18th of October, 1842, were married by license at Nottingham. The license was alleged to have been obtained upon the oath of the wife that they were both of full age. There was no property to which the husband was entitled.

Swanston and Smythe, for the informant, who was the mother of Mr. Severne, cited Attorney-General v. Mullay (4 Russ. 329), and Attorney-General v. Lucas (2 Hare, 566).

Wigram and W. T. S. Daniell, for the defendants, argued that the suit could not proceed, as it was not a case within the Act, as the property which she might hereafter take would not be taken "by force of the marriage." They also objected that it was not sufficiently proved that the false oath was taken by the wife, there being no proof of the identity of the person who took that oath with the wife, and that if further inquiry were granted to the informant, the evidence must be limited to the allegations contained in the information, as the year within which the information is by the 25th section of the Act directed to be filed, had now expired. They cited Brownsword v. Edwards (2 Ves. sen. 242).

The Vice-Chancellor.—I mean, Mr. Swanston, to give you an inquiry. Shew me cause, if you can, why it should not be limited to the allegations in the information.

Swanston, in reply upon that point.

The Vice-Chancellor.—When evidence to a certain extent has been given in support of a complainant or informant in a case in equity, but it is not in the view of the Court sufficient at the hearing, and the Court sees a probable certainty that the evidence may be added to, it is matter for the discretion of the Court whether opportunity should be afforded to bring further evidence. It cannot be said, in the present case, that the parties are without evidence. The point is, whether a marriage between two minors has been solemnized upon the affidavit of one of them that they were both of full age. It is satisfactorily proved that a marriage has taken place between two minors. The marriage could not have taken place without an affidavit. There is no proof of any other affidavit but one. In the registry of the Archdiaconal Court of Nottingham there is a paper purporting to be the affidavit of this young woman, which affidavit, if made by her, is untrue. There is, however, no affidavit of identity. Under ordinary circumstances, it is a legal probability, to say no more, that the affidavit was made by the party by whom it purports to be made. This affidavit is made on the 18th of October, 1842, and the marriage takes place on the same day. Now, considering these facts and the depository in which the affidavit is, and that there is no suggestion of any other affidavit, it would be monstrous for me to say that there is no evidence; and I am rather disposed to think, that had the parties been adults and the question purely civil, it would have been sufficient. It is then said that there is no evidence that she knew the contrary; it is proved by evidence, which, however, is not in issue. Now, considering that this information was filed for what has been considered by the legislature a public beneficial object, and that no new information can now be filed (for, as I understand, more than a year has elapsed since the marriage), and that the intention of the legislature would be defeated, it would be gross miscarriage if I were not to order an inquiry. It is then said that this case is not within the Act, as the husband has no property, and will lose every thing by his dying under age, he being now a minor. And it is said that no property which can hereafter come to the wife, will be property obtained "by force of the marriage." I can conceive various cases in which this would happen, and I am of opinion that the mere circumstance that the husband has no property in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, does not take the case out of the Act. His Honour then directed that the case should stand over, with liberty for the informant to exhibit an interrogatory or interrogatories, for the purpose of proving the allegations contained in the information.

Cort v. Winder.

Will—Construction.

Where a testator gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees upon trust for all and every his first cousins german, to be equally divided among them, share and share alike, to whom he gave and bequeathed the same, and in case any of his said cousins should depart this life before their respective shares should become due or payable, leaving any lawful issue him or her surviving, he directed that such issue should have and be entitled to the same share or shares as his, her, or their parent or parents would have been entitled to if living, it was held, that the testator meant all his first cousins living at his death, and those only should take; with the exception, that if any of his first cousins living at the date of his will, or born afterwards before his death, should die leaving issue, then the share should go to such issue.

Arthur Armistead, the testator in this cause, by his will, dated Nov. 10, 1832, after giving several legacies and annuities to different persons, gave all the residue of his personal estate to trustees, upon trust, in the first place, for securing the said several annuities, and subject thereto, upon trust, for all and every his first cousins german, to be equally divided amongst them, share and share alike, to whom the testator gave and bequeathed the same; and in case any of his said cousins should depart this life before their respective shares of the residue of his moneys and personal estate should become due or payable, leaving any lawful issue him or them surviving, the testator directed that such issue should have and be entitled to the same share or shares of the same residue and moneys as his, her, or their parent or parents would have been entitled to if living. The testator died on the 25th of May, 1837. Two of the testator's first cousins died in his lifetime, one leaving issue, the other not. A question, therefore, had arisen as to these shares.

The Vice-Chancellor.—My impression remains that the testator here intended the whole of the shares to go to the same class of persons, and that he intended the right to them to be ascertained at the same time; there is no break—no difference in division. If that is so, the words "due or payable," which are capable of a variety of interpretations, ought in this will to be construed as referring to the death of the testator. It is apparently difficult to reconcile with that construction the principle of the decision in the case of Viner v. Francis and other cases of that kind, which attribute these words to the persons who represent this class at the time of the death. It is urged that, upon a liberal construction, the word "said" must be confined to those cousins who may be living at the death of the testator. I am of opinion that the word "said" is not even literally and of necessity in the way. In the first place, they are spoken of as "cousins german," afterwards as "said cousins." In my opinion it is consistent to read it either way; and I think, according to the just interpretation of this will, the testator meant all his first cousins living at his death, and those only to take; with this exception, that if any of his first cousins living at the date of his will, or born afterwards before his death, should die, leaving issue, then the share of such cousins to go to such issue.

COURT OF QUEEN S BENCH.

Saturday, July 6.

Belcher v. Sambourne.

The assignees of a bankrupt cannot maintain an action for money had and received against a creditor who, in contravention of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 8, has received from the bankrupt, after docket struck against him, any payment, gift, delivery, satisfaction, or security, whereby such creditor may receive more in the pound in respect of his debts than the other creditors.

Declaration by the assignees of a bankrupt named Carey, for money had and received, on a promise of payment to the bankrupt, and a promise to pay the assignees.

Pleas, that the defendant did not promise, and that the plaintiffs were not assignees.

The bankrupt had been in embarrassed circumstances in November and December 1841, and on the 30th of November, 1841, the defendant struck a docket against him, and issued a fiat thereon on the 6th of December following. No further proceedings took place on that fiat, but a composition of ten shillings in the pound was offered, which the other creditors agreed to accept; the defendant, however, and his partner insisted on having 20s. in the pound, and eventually an arrangement was effected, by which the defendant took the bankrupt's promissory notes at one, two, three, four, five, and six months, for 10s. in the pound, and the bankrupt's notes at twelve to forty-eight months for the remaining 10s. in the pound. On the 2nd of February, 1842, the first note under this arrangement, being for 40*l*., was paid; and on the 12th of March, a second note, to the same amount, was also paid. The bankrupt left this country on the 6th or 7th of March, 1842, having previously assigned his property to his father to raise the fund for the creditors; the fiat of bankruptcy under which the plaintiffs claimed is dated the 4th of April, the day on which the first of the promissory notes given for the payment of 10s. in the pound to the general body of creditors became due. At the trial, the principal struggle was to prove the act of bankruptcy; it was, however, established, and the question resolved itself into this, whether the defendant had notice of the act of bankruptcy so as to prevent him from having the benefit of the statute 2 & 3 Vict. c. 79. Thereupon the counsel for the plaintiffs contended, that in consequence of the defendant and his partner having struck a docket, and issued a fiat in December 1841, the receiving the promissory note for the instalments, and the sums paid on those two or three which first became due, brought the defendant, both in respect of notice and of liability, within the operation of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 8, which enacts, "That if any such trader, liable by virtue of this Act to become bankrupt, shall, after docket struck against him, pay to the person or persons who struck the same, or any of them, money, or give or deliver to any such person any satisfaction or security for his debt, or any part thereof, whereby such person may receive more in the pound in respect of his debts than the other creditors, such payment, gift, delivery, satisfaction, or security shall be an act of bankruptcy: and if any commission shall have issued upon the docket so struck as aforesaid, the Lord Chancellor may either declare such commission to be valid, and direct the same to be proceeded in, or may order it to be superseded, and a new commission may issue, and such commission may be supported either by proof of such last-mentioned or any other act of bankruptcy; and every person so receiving such money, gift, delivery, satisfaction, or security as aforesaid, shall forfeit his whole debt, and also repay or deliver up such money, gift, satisfaction, or security as aforesaid, or the full value thereof, to such person or persons as the commissioners acting under such original commission, or any new commission, shall appoint for the benefit of the creditors of such bankrupt." The counsel for the defendants urged that this provision applied to cases of subsisting bankruptcies only, and not to those in which the fiat had been abandoned. Ultimately, a verdict was returned for the plaintiff, damages 80*l*.

In Michaelmas Term, Erle, Q. C. obtained a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the verdict should not be entered for the defendant, or why there should not be a new trial, on the ground that inadmissible evidence had been received; or why the damages should not be reduced to 40*l*.; the first note having been paid before the act of bankruptcy relied on for the subsisting fiat.

Against this rule cause was shewn, on the 22nd of April, by Platt, Q. C., E. James, and Lush, who, as to the applicability of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 8 (the judgment rendering unnecessary notice of the other two points), relied on Davis v. Holding (11 Ad. & E. 710); Turquand v. Vanderplank (10 M. & W. 180).

Erle, Q. C. and Cowling, contrà, cited Ex parte Smith (3 Mon. & Ayr.) Cur. adv. vult.

The judgment of the Court was now pronounced by Denman, C. J. to the effect that the question must turn at last on the right of the assignees to receive the sum of 40*l*. first paid. It was difficult to contend that the transaction did not fall within the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 8; or that, to a certain extent, so far at least as notice was concerned, that section was not applicable. According to its provisions, the defendant was, in the first place, to forfeit his whole debt; that, however, was not the remedy which it was sought to enforce by this action. Then, also, he was to repay or deliver up the money or security, or the full value thereof; but to whom? To the person or persons whom the commissioners should appoint. In this case the commissioners had not appointed any one, and the assignees had relied on the ordinary operation of the law. Now the case of Davis v. Holding (11 Ad. & E.) shewed that the debtor himself could not have recovered this money from the creditor; if that were so, neither could the assignees who sued in his right. The rule, therefore, must be made absolute for reducing the damages to 40*l*.

Verdict for the plaintiff—damages 40*l*.

Whitehead v. Harrison.

In detinue, a plea traversing the bailment is ill.

Detinue.—The declaration stated a delivery by the plaintiff of an indenture of the plaintiff to the defendant, to be redelivered by the defendant to the plaintiff, when the defendant should be thereunto afterwards requested. Although he was afterwards requested by the plaintiff so to do, he had not delivered it.

Plea—Traversing the bailment. Demurrer.

J. Henderson, in support of the plea.

Cur. adv. vult.

The judgment of the Court was now pronounced by Denman, C. J., to the effect that though, since the new rules, some alteration in the declaration seemed necessary, whereby the plaintiff should shew how the subject-matter of the bailment became his property, still, as none such had been prescribed, the Court was bound by the authorities Jones v. Dowle (9 M. & W.); Mason v. Farnell (L. J. May 1844); and there must be Judgment for the plaintiff.

Reg. v. The Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales.

The several Acts for the commutation of tithes in England and Wales being in point of law but one Act, the 34th section of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, restricts the power given to the commissioners by the 45th section of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, "to determine any question touching the situation or boundary of any land whereby the making an award shall be hindered;" and by the 2nd and 3rd sections of the 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 69, to cases in which the boundary line is not, nor is any part of it, the boundary of a county.

This was a rule calling upon the Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales to shew cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue, to prohibit them from making their award in the matter of the commutation of tithes in the parish of Ystradgunlais, in the county of Brecon. From the affidavits it appeared that a certain district was claimed by Sir Charles Morgan, as lord of the manor of Brecon, and that a verdict in his favour placed the lands in Ystrad. On the other hand, the same district was claimed by Mr. Hanbury Leigh, as lord of the manor of Neath, on the ground of a verdict which placed the land in the parish of Cadoxton. The boundary of the two parishes is also a county boundary. The district comprises 500 or 600 acres of land, abounding in minerals. In the year 1839 the tithes were commuted in the parish of Ystrad, by voluntary agreement, and the award confirmed by the commissioners. In the year 1841 there was a compulsory commutation of tithes in the parish of Cadoxton, and the award was confirmed by the commissioners. It became necessary to apportion the rent-charges, and for that purpose to decide the question to which parish the particular lands belonged.

By the 45th section of the original Act (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71), the commissioners are authorized to hear and determine any question touching the situation or boundary of any lands whereby the making an award shall be hindered, and the decision given under this section is declared to be final and conclusive on all persons, subject to the appeal given in the following section.

By the 1 Vict. c. 69, ss. 2, 3, powers are given to the commissioners, on the application of two-thirds in value of the landowners, to inquire into, ascertain, and set out, the boundaries of any parish or district in manner therein mentioned, and their decision, or in case it be removed by certiorari to the Court of Queen's Bench within six months, the decision of the Court, is declared to be final and conclusive as to such boundaries for all purposes whatsoever.

By the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, ss. 34, 35, 36, the powers of the commissioners of adjusting boundaries are extended in various ways, and, amongst other things, cases of disputed boundaries between two or more landowners, and also to the defining a new boundary on the application of a certain number of the landowners in any parishes or townships where the boundary is in dispute, or of the landowners, submitting their disputes to the jurisdiction of the commissioners; and the boundary line ascertained, or defined by the commissioners, it is declared (s. 34) "shall thenceforward be the boundary line of and between such parishes, townships, or lands of such landowners respectively, for all purposes whatsoever. But these provisions are not to extend to any boundary line, or part of a boundary line, which is also the boundary of a county; and the boundary declared by the commissioners is to be annexed to, or delineated, on the map annexed to the apportionment of lands or places affected by the decision.

By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 15, s. 28, the practical difficulties which were found to arise under the last-cited provisions were obviated by extending the powers of the commissioners to cases of application from two-thirds in number and value of the landowners of any one parish, place, or township, whose boundary shall be in question, in compliance with the provisions as to notices therein contained.

By 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 61, the commissioners are empowered to hold meetings to hear and determine objections to apportionments of rent charge.

By 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, s. 8, power is given to them to make supplemental awards at any time before confirmation of the apportionment, for the purpose of rectifying the original award in cases of manifest error.

The lands in question have always paid tithes, though scarcely beyond a mere nominal amount, to Cadoxton. In this case the commissioners proceeded for tithe purposes alone, under the 45th section of the Tithe Commutation Act, and in a letter of the 1st Dec. 1842, in which they distinctly say that they could only proceed under the 45th section, suggested the omission of the land in dispute from other apportionments; this the landowners declined. In a subsequent letter, dated 29th July, 1843, the Tithe Commissioners said they could not exclude the lands from either parish, and hence notices were ultimately given in both parishes to proceed under the 45th section, and at the same time notices were given for hearing objections to both apportionments; and on the assumption that it might be necessary to vary the rent-charge if the boundary were varied, a notice was also given in Cadoxton for a supplemental award meeting, under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, s. 8.

The fact that these meetings were so held, and of the proceeding under the 45th section, appeared from the affidavit of the assistant commissioner, who also deposed to the completion of the commutation being hindered by this question of boundary, the district in dispute being now in the apportionment maps of both parishes.

The objections to proceeding under the 45th section were, that inasmuch as the agreements in Ystradgunlais and the award in Cadoxton are both confirmed, the Tithe Commissioners have no jurisdiction under the 45th section, for that section refers only to cases of boundary whereby the making of an award is hindered, whereas it was contended, the award was already made. To this the commissioners replied that the apportionment is a part of the award, being, in fact, a mere schedule to it, and as, by the section, every recital of fact in a confirmed agreement, award, or apportionment, or of any map annexed to it, is taken to be true, it follows that the commissioners cannot permit the land to be in both maps, nor can they say in which it should be, without deciding the question of boundary, and this they can only do under the 45th section, where they contend the words "making an award" must mean effecting and completing a commutation.

But if they were wrong in this construction, then they contend that, by means of a separate award by way of supplement, they could entertain the question of boundary, and the 45th section would thereby come into operation, as the making of such supplementary award would be rendered necessary by such question. Or, that, without any decision under the 45th section, the commissioners could correct the map and apportionment in either parish, under the 61st section of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, by fixing the correct boundary; the difference being, that, under the 45th section, there is provision for an appeal to a court of law, but under the 61st section there is not; the decision of the commissioners under the 45th or 61st sections being merely binding for the purposes of the Tithe Commission Acts, though, under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, under which the commissioners did not propose to act, the decision would be binding for all purposes.

The first stage in the process of commutation is that of fixing the gross rent-charge payable in respect of a parish or district, and which rent-charge may be fixed by parochial agreement, as in Ystradgunlais; or by compulsory award, as in Cadoxton.

After confirmation by the commissioners of such agreement or award, the second stage is to apportion the rent-charge thus fixed and confirmed among the lands of the parish or district which it covers. The power to make a parochial agreement is given by the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 17, and of confirming it by s. 27.

The power for the commissioners to fix a rent-charge by a compulsory award, where no agreement has been made, is given to the commissioners by sec. 36, et seq.; and of confirming such an award by sec. 52. That of apportioning such a rent-charge is given to the landowners by sec. 53, or in their default for six months, to the commissioners by sec. 54. The 55th section in both cases, requires that the lands to be comprised in such apportionment be truly set forth; and that they refer to a map or plan with a reference shewing the amount charged on the several lands, and to whom, and in what right the same shall be respectively payable. The draft, when prepared, is required by sec. 60 to be sent to the commissioners, who, by sec. 61 are to call meetings from time to time to hear and determine objections to such apportionment.

Hence, inasmuch as the agreement for Ystradgunlais and the award for Cadoxton were, in both instances for gross rent-charges over the respective parishes, it was not till the instruments of apportionment for both came before the commission as under the 6th section, that they could call meetings under the 61st, and at these meetings detect and point out the objections of the same land being included in both apportionments, and the land itself thus described as in both parishes, and so liable to a distributive share of the rent-charges in both; and as this may often happen in neighbouring parishes, it would seem to be only by the exercise of the power in the 45th section that errors of boundary, detected after the first stage of commutation is passed, can be met and rectified.

Inasmuch as by the 27th section every confirmed agreement was declared conclusive on all persons, and by the 52nd, every confirmed award, the power to open and rectify errors was given by way of separate or supplementary award by the statute, already referred to, of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, s. 8; the only limit being that it should be done before confirmation of the apportionment. After the confirmation of the latter document, the commutation is at an end, and irrevocable; but till that instrument be confirmed, no agreement or award ever takes effect.

Hence the apportionment is always considered in the light of being a sort of schedule to the agreement or award to which it refers; and in whatever stage either the one or the other may be, they are not deemed by the commissioners to be, in legal language or intendment, an agreement or award until the apportionment is confirmed. It is only from after the confirmation of the apportionment that the land is discharged from tithes and the rent-charge becomes payable. (See the 57th section.)

Against the rule for a prohibition, which it was understood had been obtained at the instance of Sir Charles Morgan, cause was now shewn (June 11) by Sir F. Thesiger, S. G. and Alfree.

Vaughan Williams, for Mr. Hanbury Leigh, declined to address the Court.

Chilton, Q. C. contrà. Cur. adv. vult.

The judgment of the Court was now pronounced by DENMAN, C. J., to the effect that the Court deemed it not unnecessary to observe that no objection had been taken to the rule on the ground that a writ of prohibition had been prayed for. It seemed to be admitted by the Tithe Commissioners themselves that prohibition was the proper remedy; but on that point the Court would not pronounce an opinion. The question whether the Tithe Commissioners had authority to proceed depended on the construction of the statutes, and especially of the 45th section of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, and the 34th section of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62. The fair interpretation of the first of these clauses leads to the conclusion that there was not the intention to give the commissioners power to decide on the boundaries of parishes; and if there had been a doubt on that point, it would have been removed by the subsequent statutes. The 34th section of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, is not relied on by the commissioners; but it shews what conditions must be fulfilled before the commissioners can have the power to determine boundaries; and it expressly deprives them of that power in the case of boundaries which at one and the same time divide parishes and counties. Now the 37th section makes this Act part of the original Act of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, and it is admitted that the boundary of these two parishes is also the boundary of the counties of Brecon and Glamorgan; it is clear, therefore, that the Acts do not give the commissioners authority to proceed. The Court thought it right to mention the stat. 1 Vict. c. 69, because the second and third sections gave power to determine the boundaries of any parish or district; but that must be on the application of two-thirds in value of the landowners, and even then, as all these statutes were to be taken as one Act, it would not avail to give power where the boundaries of counties and parishes were conterminous. The rule, therefore, must be made absolute. Rule absolute.

REG. v. THE MAYOR AND CORPORATION OF STAMFORD.

When the return to a writ of mandamus directed to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of a municipal corporation, within the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, commanding them to award compensation for the loss of an office, set up an agreement between the corporation and the officer that the latter should receive as compensation an increased salary for an office which he continued to hold, and also a resolution of the town-council for giving effect to that agreement; and the return was traversed: Held, that the minutes in the books of the corporation reciting the resolution were not admissible as evidence in support of the return, because they were not under the corporate seal.

In this case a writ of mandamus had issued, directed to the "Mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of Stamford," commanding them to award compensation to a gentleman named Tockington, for the loss of the office of clerk to the justices, which he had held in conjunction with those of town-clerk and clerk of the peace, still held by him. The return set up an agreement between the prosecutor and the town council that the prosecutor's salary as town clerk should be raised to 100*l.* per annum. On this an issue was raised, which was tried at the last summer assizes for the county of Lincoln, when a verdict was returned for the defendants, with leave to the other side to move that it should be entered for the Crown, on the ground that the minutes in the books of the corporation, whereby it appeared that a resolution had passed for giving to Mr. Tockington the increased salary for one of the offices which he retained, as a compensation for the profits arising from the office from which he had been removed, were not admissible in evidence, they not being under the corporate seal. A rule nisi accordingly having been obtained by Humfrey, cause was shewn, May 9, by Hill, Q. C. Whitehurst, and A. J. Stephen.

Humfrey, with whom was Waddington, contrà.

The judgment of the Court was now pronounced by DENMAN, C. J., to the effect that as the case of Arnold v. The Mayor of Poole shewed the corporate seal to be necessary to the validity of such an agreement, while the question whether there was such an agreement was raised by the issue, and the fact was that the agreement had not the authentication of the corporate seal, the verdict must be entered for the Crown. Rule absolute.

[The question raised by the Court in the course of the argument, whether the writ of mandamus for the award of compensation ought not in all cases to be directed to the town council, remains reserved until the application for the peremptory mandamus shall be made.]

MILES v. COOTE and WIFE.
